11,000 BRITISH, U.S. PLANES BOMB REICH

GRIM FIGHTING SAPPING STRENGTH OF GERMANS

Furious 48-Hour Blitz Staged on 15 Nazi Centres

London, Dec. 1 — (CP) — Three thousand tons of fire bombs and explosive set the Rhine-Ruhr city of Duisburg ablaze last night as RAF bombers delivered the eighth devastating blow in a furious, 48-hour blitz on 15 German industrial centres by 11,000 British and American planes.

It was the third time in two days that British bombers had hit targets in Duisburg, regarded as the main centre of rail and water communications at the end of the Ruhr.

Some bombers from the attacking force, estimated at more than 500 Halifaxes and Lancasters, darted to Hamburg with two-ton blockbusters.

nly four British bombers were lost in the operation, the eighth major blow directed at German industry by the R.A.F. and the U.S. 8th Air Force since early Wednesday morning.

Over-all losses for the two-day period, marked by the appearance of less than a dozen German fighter planes, were 12 British bombers, 4 bombers and two fighters of the continent-based Tactical Air Forces, and 60 8th Air Force bombers and 30 fighters.

Thirty U. S. fighters also failed to return to their British bases after all-day pulverizing attacks by 3,000 planes on synthetic oil plants in the Leipzig area and railyards in the Saarbrucken sector. The Tactical Air Forces supporting ground troops lost three medium bombers and one fighter.

Concentrated Fire

Not since 68 U. S. bombers went down to combined ack-ack fire and fighter opposition over Berlin in April have Allied planes encountered such concentrated defence fire as they did yesterday, particularly in a 40-mile square area near Leipzig.

Tempering the heavy losses reported by an 8th Air Force communique was the belief that most fighter pilots grounded in friendly territory.

The German air force declined to come up in strength to oppose the massive formations of Fortresses and Liberators. Four enemy interceptors were shot down.

Fortresses struck at Bohlen, Zeitz, Merseberg and Lutzkendorf near Leipzig, roaring over the targets at 25,000 to 30,000 feet with a full escort of fighters. Results here were described as "very favorable."

The blows topped a 36-houh continuous aerial offensive which left Germany erupting from an average of 10 tons of bombs a minute from the 11,000 planes flying on seven major missions in the period and some 4,000 sorties in support of the ground armies.

KILLED IN NORMANDY

Pretoria, South Africa —(CP)— G. S. W. Talbot, 22-year-old son of the late Bishop Neville Talbot, founder of Toc H and former Bishop of Pretoria, has been killed in Normandy.

TORCH STOPS TRAIN

Charlotte, N. C., Nov. 30 — (AP) —A dramatic escape from death right out of an old-time serial thriller occurred here yesterday when an army heavy bomber crash-landed on the Southern Railway tracks as a speeding passenger train rounded the bend. No one on the train or plane was hurt. A section hand set fire to a broom and used it as a torch to signal the train to halt.

COMMITTED FOR TRIAL

Meaford, Ont., Nov. 30 — (CP)— Stefan Gajewski of St. Catharines, Ont., also known as Stephen Gaskey, was committed for trial at the next sessions of the Ontario Supreme Court at Owen Sound, when he appeared before Magistrate Spereman here yesterday on two charges of attempted murder.

He also faces a charge of attempted suicide.

PLENTY OF BUILDING

Toronto, Nov. 30 — (CP)—Surveys made by the Ontario Department of Planning and Development show a backlog of building projects will keep the construction industry busy for a minimum of 10 years, Dr. G. B. Langford, Deputy Minister of the department, said last night.

Reported, Enemy Withdrawing To The Po Valley

Rome, Dec. 1 — (AP) — Troops of an Allied 5th Army Indian Division moved forward today along the Florence-Faenza road against only light resistance and reconnaissance reports indicated the enemy was withdrawing from the mountains in that area to the Po Valley.

On the British 8th Army front there was no change in positions. Allied troops still were engaged in heavy fighting around Alberto, five miles northeast of Faenza.

Northwest of Modigliana south of highway 9 the Monte Fregnanello and Tramonti areas were cleared of the enemy. Farther west Monte Del Tesoro, Monte Fortino and the Roncosole areas were occupied after several fierce encounters.

British troops of the 5th Army found Fontanelice, 9 1/2 miles south of Imola on the Imola-Castel Del Rio highway, had been evacuated by the Germans.

A German counter-attack east of Monte Belmonte near highway 65 south of Bologna was repulsed. The entire highway area was under heavy German artillery fire.

West of the Pistoia-Bologna highway the 5th Army made limited gains north of Bombiana. Still farther west other 5th Army units withdrew after running into strong concrete emplacements and heavy machine-gun and mortar fire.

STORM CAUSE OF DEATH

Kingston, Dec. 1 — (CP) — A day-long snowstorm in this area yesterday was indirectly responsible for the death of Arthur Burnette, 47, of Odessa, Ont. Burnette, who is employed in Kingston, was driving home last night when his car stalled in a snowdrift on the Kingston-Napanee highway. He walked back along the road apparently with the intention of warning oncoming traffic when he was struck by a car driven by R. Card of Napanee and was instantly killed.

The snowfall in this area has been heavy and roads are either partially blocked or are slippery and dangerous to traffic.

RECOVER MORTAR BOMB

Meaford, Dec. 1 —(CP)— Army officials and police this week recovered a "live" trench mortar bomb from a local home, the second recovered here in a week. The bombs apparently were taken from the nearby Canadian tank range.

Research Council Scientists Producing Anti-Freeze From Wheat

By DOUGLAS GREEN
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Ottawa, Dec. 1. (CP)—As a fruit of the largest chemurgic experiment so far undertaken in Canada, scientists of the National Research Council now are turning out butylene glycol—a superior anti-freeze—as a by-product of wheat in a pilot plant overlooking the Rideau River.

Butylene glycol can be broken down chemically into several other useful substances, and research into these possibilities now is going on.

The plant, to the lay eye a bewildering assembly of tanks, cookers and fermenters, produces ten pounds of butylene glycol and six pounds of Ethyl alcohol from a bushel of wheat.

Investigations into fermentation, undertaken originally to develop a source of synthetic rubber, were directed to the development of anti-freeze after Canada began producing synthetic rubber in the government-owned Polymer Corporation plant at Sarnia, Ont.

The project was begun under Dr. W. H. Cook, director of the council's division of Applied Biology, and carried out by a staff under Dr. G. A. Ledingham of Ottawa, who had conducted fermentation research since 1938.

At one stage of the work the investigators dug into a garden while a temperature of 30 degrees below zero prevailed to find a bacillus capable of fermenting wheat rapidly and directly.

They developed a strain called Aerobacillus Polymyxa which cut the fermentation period from ten days to three days.

From the laboratory stage the researchers advanced to the construction of a small test plant which produced about a litre of butylene glycol. The pilot plant treats about 20 bushels of wheat during the production process, which takes three days.

SENIOR MEMBERS PREFER ELECTION AT PRESENT TIME

Hon. R. B. Hanson And Hon. J. Cardin Express Opposite Views On Political Situation

By FRANK FLAHERTY
Canadian Press Staff Writer

Ottawa, Dec. 1 — (CP) — Two senior members of the Commons, both former cabinet ministers, one a conscriptionist Progressive Conservative and the other an anti-conscriptionist Liberal were on record today as considering a general election preferable to continuance of the present political situation.

They are Hon. R. B. Hanson, (PC —York-Sunbury) and Hon. P. J. A. Cardin (L — Richelieu-Vercheres). Both spoke yesterday in the debate on the government's motion of confidence relating to the application of conscription for overseas service.

Mr. Hanson expressed regret that Col. J. L. Ralston, former Defence Minister, did not follow up his fight for reinforcements for the army overseas by voting against the government of which he was a member until a month ago. He said other men than Prime Minister King could form a government and the government would go on although certain eventualities might occur.

"Worse things might happen than those eventualities," he said. "Speaking for myself and myself alone because I have not canvassed the situation with my colleagues, I hold the view that this whole position will never be clarified or settled until the people of Canada clarify it."

Opposes Conscription

Speaking from the opposite point of view, opposing conscription, Mr. Cardin, former Liberal Transport Minister, said he could not understand why a wartime election should be feared. Everyone knew that for months past the Liberal party had been preparing for an election.

"The sooner we have one," he said, "the sooner the clouded atmosphere in which we have been living for the last five years or more will disappear and the sooner we shall be able to follow a policy that will be in the best interests of Canada as well as of the Allied nations.

"I am not afraid of an election, whatever opposition may be reserved for me, whatever opposition I may meet from men coming from the party with which I have been so long and so closely associated.

"I have not ceased to be a Liberal but I contend that my party, alas, has been moving towards the other side, towards the Imperial and Tory spirit."

Thirteen Inches of Snow Early Winter Record, Gale Piles Drifts High

Old Man Winter with all his attendant disagreements of snow piled high and with dropping temperature settled over the Bay of Quinte district on Thursday with a vengeance as a heavy fall of snow accompanied by a wind of almost gale-like proportions piled high drifts along sideroads, around fence corners and even in city alleyways.

Starting late Wednesday afternoon the storm with only brief intermissions continued unabated until some time early Friday with official recordings at the Belleville Water Purification plant indicating a snowfall of 13 inches. It was one of the heaviest early-season falls of snow in years, according to old-timers.

Every Sort of Winter Condition

The whole gamut of winter driving conditions were experienced by motorists during the 36-hour fall which blanketed the city and district with its first real winter's mantle. During the early stages of the storm soft snow caused vehicles to slither and slip around corners and on the hills with many near-accidents being reported. Later motorists were "stuck" along the curbside as their iron steeds failed to respond in the deep snow. At times the driving snow so blinded motorists that speed was reduced almost to a crawl on the highways.

Shovelling of snow was really the "order of the day" this morning as householders got a belated start in clearing their walks of snow, while in the downtown sections retail merchants' personnel were busy clearing walks and store entrances of several inches of hard-packed snow.

Transports Behind Schedule

Highway conditions were reported heavy with transport companies

(By The Canadian Press.)

Prospects of a white Christmas in Eastern Canada this year appeared a reality today after the first heavy snowstorm of the winter lashed across the country yesterday, piling up snowdrifts in many cities of Ontario and Quebec and causing at least three deaths. Damage was caused by high winds at Quebec City.

Many persons were injured as the storm slowed transportation to a crawl in Montreal, Toronto and Ottawa and completely tied up traffic in Quebec City.

Meanwhile temperatures in western Canada hovered below zero, although milder weather was forecast for today. Citizens have been held in a cold spell for the last four days.

Snowfall in Toronto was light, but temperatures dropped to 20 degrees during the night and the combination of snow and sleet turned to ice creating hazardous driving conditions. More than 20 persons were injured in traffic accidents. At Ottawa, more than six inches fell during the night.

Highways Slippery.

Ontario Motor League officials reported highways throughout the province were slippery and visibility poor.

High velocity winds swept the province of Quebec.

A 45-mile-an-hour gale in the Quebec City district lifted many roofs from houses and Claude Vizien, 42, was killed at nearby Levis when struck by a toppling roof.

Although the storm was not as heavy in Ontario, two persons died from injuries suffered when struck

RE-ELECTION WILL NOT BE SOUGHT BY LADY ASTOR

First Woman to Sit in British Commons Has Represented Plymouth for 25 Years

London, Dec. 1 — (CP) — Lady Astor -- first woman to sit in the House of Commons, where for 25 years she has represented the Sutton division of Plymouth -- will not seek re-election, it was announced today.

The announcement came as the Conservative member celebrated her silver jubilee in the house.

As a member of the present parliament which has sat since 1935 without a general election, Lady Astor is assured of a place in the house for nearly another year by a recent government act which extended the life of the present law-making body.

Virginia-born Lady Astor held a seat in the house for two years before the first British-born woman was elected to parliament. She was Mrs. Margaret Wintringham.

An Irish republican leader, Countess Markievicz, was elected to the house in 1918 but did not assume her seat.

At a dinner given in her honor last night by the British Federation of business and professional women Lady Astor said the "really terrible thing" about her first appearance in the house in 1919 was that "nobody wanted me there."

Husband Went to Lords

Lady Astor was elected when Viscount Astor, then a member of the House of Commons, succeeded to his father's title and took his seat in the House of Lords.

In a joint letter he and Lady Astor said the strain of five years of war made it impossible for him to go through the stress of another contested election and that "it would be difficult for Lady Astor to stand again without his help."

Viscount Astor was Lord Mayor of Plymouth for five years between 1939 and last month when he was succeeded by a Labor member. He said he intended to continue his efforts for physical and social reconstruction of the city.

At last night's dinner in honor of his wife, at which he was the only male guest, he said:

"When I married Nancy I hitched my wagon to a star. When she got into the House of Commons I found I had hitched my wagon to a sort of V-2 rocket."

5,000 MORE JAPS LOST TRYING TO REINFORCE LEYTE

In All Seven Convoys Destroyed and 26,000 Japs Lost at Sea

General MacArthur's Headquarters, Philippines, Dec. 1 —(AP)— Japan's disastrous attempts to replenish her Leyte garrisons have cost her 26,000 troops lost at sea in the destruction of seven convoys —the latest one Thursday with 5,000 men and uncounted supplies aboard.

Gen. MacArthur announced today that low-flying American pilots sank a 9,000-ton transport and three small freighters headed toward the west coast port of Ormoc on Leyte. In addition, a 5,000-ton freighter and a destroyer were hit and left ablaze.

"The transports were heavily loaded with men," MacArthur said in his communique, "and the enemy's loss of life is estimated at 5,000 men."

It was the second convoy destroyed in two days. Thirteen ships were wiped out Wednesday, two at the dock after unloading and the rest at sea with all hands aboard.

MacArthur said 29 transports totalling 103,750 tons and 18 escort ships have been sunk in the seven convoys knocked out.

Fighters, hitting at masthead level, bagged the bulk of the carefully-dispersed convoy off Masbate and Cebu but one small freighter, falling prey to a night patrol plane, was sunk as far west as Leyte Mindoro Island.

Another freighter was sunk off Borneo during continued widespread bomber raids on the central Philippines and islands to the south, and a bomber scored a hit on what was described only as a "large enemy vessel."

A submarine was sunk off western Leyte Monday by two destroyers of a force sent into those mined waters to bombard Japanese installations.

LOVE LETTER SAVES LIFE OF SOLDIER

Kitchener, Dec. 1—(CP)—A letter from his sweetheart, who prefers that they both remain anonymous, was a real lifesaver to a Kitchener boy serving overseas. In his reply he says he was standing in the doorway of a shed with two corporals when the letter was delivered. He had moved across the room to get better reading light when a German shell demolished the shed. Both corporals were killed.

ILSLEY PRESSES SASK. TO FULFIL GRAIN AGREEMENT

If Not Paid Federal Govt. May Withhold Amounts Due Prov. From Dominion

Ottawa, Dec. 1 (CP) — Charging that the Saskatchewan government had "flouted" the $17,000,000 seed grain agreement, Finance Minister Ilsley has said that he had been persuaded to make "one more effort" to reach an amicable settlement of the 1938 advance.

Mr. Ilsley made the statement in a letter to Provincial Treasurer C. M. Fines which he released last night. He had been asked for comment on a dispatch from Regina quoting Acting Premier J. W. Corman as saying that Mr. Ilsley had made a new proposal "which amounts to an ultimatum."

The letter contained a four-clause proposal for settlement of the seed grain advances which involved Saskatchewan municipalities. Some of the advances have been repaid.

"It can be argued strongly on behalf of Canadian taxpayers generally," Mr. Ilsley wrote, "and it has in fact been suggested to me, that under the circumstances the Dominion should take whatever steps are necessary to collect from the Saskatchewan government to the point of setting amounts due from the Dominion to the Province.

"This would be a serious step, and even though the provocation in this case is very serious, it is one I would hesitate to take except as a matter of last resort. Nevertheless, the way in which your administration has flouted the solemn agreement between the Dominion and Saskatchewan is even more damaging to that mutual confidence which is so essential to solid relationships between the Dominion and the province, and, unless the province is willing to give some new evidence of its good faith, could not be permitted to pass unchallenged.."

Jury Acquits Edward Vining

Toronto, Dec. 1 —(CP)— Edward R. (Ted) Vining, 33, of London, Ont., walked out of Supreme Court here late yesterday a free man, a few minutes after a jury acquitted him on a charge of manslaughter. The charge against Vining arose out of the death by drowning of 17 persons who were aboard the pleasure cruiser Olga which partially capsized on June 4 off Port Stanley.

In declaring Vining not guilty, the jury told the court they considered the supervision at Port Stanley "very lax and inadequate" and recommended that attention of proper authorities be brought to the situation.

Mr. Justice G. F. McFarland told Vining he had been acquitted "of a very serious charge" adding he believed the accused had been careless in the matter. Vining and Sidney Smith (one of the 17 who were drowned) were co-owners of the Olga, which Vining operated.

The jury deliberated five hours after being charged by Mr. Justice McFarland to bring in a verdict of "manslaughter or an acquittal."

Canadian Ship Leads Merchantmen At Reopening of Antwerp Harbor

By DOUGLAS AMARON
(CP War Correspondent)

Antwerp, Dec. 1 — (CP Cable)—A Canadian-built freighter led in the convoy officially reopening Antwerp harbor to merchantmen.

Flying the Red Ensign and as a courtesy the Belgian flag, the British-manned freighter Fort Cataraqui sailed into this great port on a rising tide while a gathering of naval, military and civilian dignitaries stood on the rain-swept quay to greet her.

Behind came other ships of the convoy bearing mixed cargoes of military and civilian necessities. The ships arrived in mid-afternoon and within five minutes of docking were unloading.

The re-opening of the great port of Antwerp to the Allies after more than 4 1/2 years came after soldiers of the 1st Canadian Army cleared the Germans from both sides of the Schelde Estuary in some of the most bitter fighting of the war. The Germans realized the importance to the Allied offensive of this port, one of the largest in Europe, and fought a grim, month-long delaying action to deny its use as a supply port.

With Antwerp open and her harbor facilities, which were seized undamaged, now operating, the Allies have an ideal base with greatly shortened lines of communication from which to pour supplies into the northern armies.

Canadian minesweepers helped to remove hundreds of mines sowed in the 45-mile-long channel by the enemy.

Losing 3,000 Men Daily in Prisoners Alone on W. Front

Three U.S. Armies Stand At Roer, Saar Barriers

By JAMES M. LONG
(AP Staff Writer)

Paris, Dec. 1 —(AP)— Three United States armies beat out hard-won gains across churned battlefields today and drew up solid assault lines along both the Roer and Saar, two of the most important barriers to the Rhine.

There was no report of action at the northern end of the Western Front where elements of the 1st Canadian Army last were reported in action in Germany east of Nijmegen.

As December came over the grim and grey battlefields, the Germans were pouring their final strength into the desperate struggle for a winter line west of the Rhine and were losing 3,000 men a day in prisoners alone. In dead and disabled Hitler was sacrificing more than that.

Allied Losses Not Given.

Security and other regulations lock the secret of Allied casualties for indefinite periods after operations and the cost in Allied lives in the great winter offensive, now in its 24th day, had not yet been disclosed.

But a general rule of war is that assault costs more in blood than defence.

The U. S. 3rd Army today pressed against the west bank of the Saar and the Siegfried Line almost solidly along a front of 12 to 15 miles. Tanks plunged forward half a mile in their latest gains and reached the Saar bend opposite Merzig, after clearing Hilbringen and Battern.

The 3rd Army was drawn up close to Merzig on the northwest, west and southwest and looking into the mouths of the Siegfried cannon. The Siegfried Line, with its forts, hundreds of pill-boxes and miles of wire and traps, comes down to the river here, and beyond is the Hunsruck range running northeast between the Moselle and Nahe valleys toward the Rhine and main cities of Weisbaden, Mainz and Frankfurt.

The U. S. 9th Army captured Welz, one mile south of Linnich, and drew a close arc around that town on the road to the Rhineland city of Munchen Gladbach as virtually the entire army closed up to the Roer and its tributary, the Inde, on a front 15 to 20 miles. Patrols stabbed across the narrow, but flood-swollen Inde.

The Allied campaign, yet to reach its climax of fury, was shaping bit by bit into three great wedges, each forcing the Germans to throw in thinning reserves to block the roads to Berlin.

Two American armies, the 9th and 1st, were hammering at three key towns along the Roer line in the Rhineland—Linnich, Julich and Duren.

The 3rd army had drawn a curving line along the Saar in Germany and near the southern frontier of the Saarland, threatening not only that rich industrial and mining basin but also the historic guardians of the roads to Coblenz and the cluster of cities at the junction of the Rhine and Main.

The third wedge was shaping up northwest of Strasbourg, where both the 3rd and 7th armies were pushing past the southern end of the Eifel range toward Carlsruhe on the Rhine.

Ceaseless Gunfire.

The whole operation was being carried out amid ceaseless shellfire. Armored forces and infantry were handicapped by quagmires and the weather was so bad that air force officers commented that "even the birds will be walking."

Here was how action was reported from the battle line, front by front:

The British 2nd army in Holland captured the German-defended castles at Wanssum, 10 miles north of Venlo, and Broekhuizen, eight miles north of Venlo, as well as the village of Broekhuizen.

All resistance in small pockets west of the Maas thus was eliminated except in the town of Wanssum, at Bierlingsbeek, 17 miles north of Venlo and in Venlo itself.

On the 9th army front the Americans had driven through the villages of Lindern, Flossdorf and Roerdorf, charred by showers of phosphorous shells. These hamlets, all on the banks of the Roer or near it, are within two miles of Linnich and are in a line running from the northwest of the town to the southeast of it. A mile south of Linnich the Americans had taken Wels after it had been flattened by artillery.

Face Siegfried Guns

In the 3rd. Army sector Lt.-Gen. Patton's troops, storming to within half a mile of Merzig on the west and two miles on either flank, came under fire from Siegfried guns that was heavier than at Metz. The Germans blew up a bridge leading across the Saar into Merzig.

At the southeast, midway between Merzig and Saarlautern, the 9th. Infantry Division advanced into Itzbach, 1½ miles from the Saar and five miles northwest of Saarlautern.

Still further to the southeast, the Americans occupied Karlingen and L'Hopital on the German border, 12 miles west of Saarbrucken, and entered Adamsweller, 3½ miles east of Saar Union and 15 miles south of the Saarland frontier.

Frohmuhl, five miles east of Adamsweller, was captured by the 7th, Army in the drive across the Saarbrucken-Haguenau rail line northwest of Strasbourg.

To the east, in the area about 12 miles west of Haguenau, Lt.-Gen. Patch's infantry pushed 3½ miles north of Uhrviller to a point about ten miles south of the German border in a drive skirting the southern nose of the Eifel Hills.

Schweighausen, two miles southwest of Haguenau, was captured and other forces were less than 1½ miles from the town, a key to Karlsruhe.

Gerstheim, 14 miles south of Strasbourg and a mile from the Rhine, was captured by 7th. Army forces driving south to join with the French moving north from the Belfort and Mulhouse areas.

30 HEAD OF CATTLE MOVED FROM ISLAND

Had a homesick cowboy been in the village of Wellington last week he would have witnessed a sight reminding him of the good old round-up days in his favorite West.

Thirty head of cattle which had been pastured on Garratt's Island, a mile out in West Lake, were brought to the mainland by the only route available. The "tender-foot dogies" showed a bit of apprehension about entering the cold water for the swim to the mainland but finally they took off on the water trek and reached the opposite shore little the worse for their experience.

The cattle were mostly Holstein and appeared to be in good shape after their summer sojourn on the island.

FAILED TO ATTEND MILITARY PARADE

Kenneth A. Wood, Belleville, was convicted on three charges of failing to attend military parades while being a member of the militia, namely the 34th, Battery R.C.A. (R). He was assessed $7.50 on each count, totalling $22.50 in all, by Magistrate T. Y. Wills in today's police court after entering pleas of guilty on each count.

"It's getting near Christmas," remarked Wood when informed the total amount he had been assessed.

"Yes, and there's a war on with men fighting it for us," replied His Worship. Wood was given ten days in order to meet the total amount assessed.

FINED FOR UPSETTING GARBAGE PAILS

Three airmen, who were apprehended pushing over garbage cans on Catherine Street, the other night, paid $4.50, including costs, when their names were called before Magistrate T. Y. Wills in police court today. The three men's names were given as Roderick Cameron, Harold Fielding and Charles Lacey and they were charged with disorderly conduct. The charges were presented by Deputy Chief Harman, who informed the court the practice of upsetting garbage pails and strewing the contents about the streets would be more severely dealt with in the future.

Roses Presented To J. O. Herity For Attendance

Twenty beautiful red roses, one for each year of unbroken attendance with Rotary, and a handsome pencil with case, were presented to Past District Governor J. O. Herity by members of the Rotary Club here this week in honor of his attainment of twenty years continuous service with the service organization.

Past President Ed. P. Bernstein on behalf of the past-presidents of the club made the official presentation with a simple yet typically eloquent address. Following Past District Governor Herity's response of appreciation, the clubmen showed their esteem and respect of the fine record of attendance in rounds of applause.

With his attendance at the weekly luncheon on Monday, it is believed that Rotarian Herity established a Dominion record in service club attendance.

125 Belleville And District Boys To Receive Fags

Bringing the grand total of cigarettes sent to members of the armed services overseas to 1,132,700 another shipment of 300 individual packets of Canadian cigarettes were dispatched to 125 Belleville and district lads over there by the Army and Navy Veterans' Fag Fund this week, according to President James Lazenby. The latest shipment, sent before Christmas amounted to 37,500 cigarettes, which is beside the monthly quota guaranteed H.M.C.S. "Belleville" corvette of 5,000 fags per month.

Semi-monthly the Army and Navy Veterans' Fag Fund functions with Canadian cigarettes being sent to men serving in the armed services from Belleville and the immediate vicinity. The list of those sent individual shipments of 300 cigarettes this week included:

Lt. J. Stephenson Loses Two Fingers In Holland Battle

Lieutenant Johnny Stephenson, son of Mr. and Mrs. Isaac Stephenson, Great St. James Street, up till recently serving with the famous Black Watch in Holland, may have to learn his pre-war occupation all over again.

Johnny was an artist and sign-writer of no mean ability before the war came along. The other day a fragment of a German 20 millimetre shell struck the Sten gun he was holding, while leading his platoon in action, and now Johnny is minus two fingers, with the remaining two badly shattered. The thumb of the hand, which is his right one, is intact. In addition he suffered shrapnel wounds in the legs.

Johnny's case is another evidence of the remarkable speed with which British wounded are being evacuated to England. Hit in Holland, he was rushed to the back area, paused at a military hospital in Belgium for "temporary repairs" and within 22 1-2 hours was in a London, England, hospital. He expects to be home by Christmas.

He was the only Canadian officer with the Black Watch Regiment, one of Britain's traditionally famous Scottish infantry units. He was attached to them under the scheme which sent Canadian officers on loan to British regiments for a period of three months.

Originally an artilleryman, he went overseas during the early part of the war, was sent back for officer training, received his commission here and was posted to Halifax as an instructor, where he remained for eighteen months. Volunteering to go overseas again under the Infantry Loan Program, he eventually was attached to the Black Watch with which he served to the time of his being wounded.

Storm Causes Shortage in City Milk Supply

Snow-plugged sideroads in the immediate vicinity of the city, an aftermath of the heavy storm that swept the district last night may result in a temporary shortage of milk in the city, a dairy man stated this morning.

With dairy trucks bogged down in the country and little immediate chance of getting sideroads cleared, city residents may go milkless for a day or so, he added.

Several calls were received this morning from farmer sources of milk supply stating that roads were heavily plugged and delivery was impossible.

Some trucks attempted to cover their routes but the wet condition of the snow and piling banks made passage impossible.

Farmers stated they were making efforts to clear their laneways to sideroads, but here another and more difficult problem confronts them. Crossroads in the majority of cases are piled high clear to the highways, and until the latter are cleared there is little hope of anything like a normal delivery of milk.

Schools Open to Dec. 22

ST. Thomas Dec. 1—(CP)—City secondary school students who were anticipating a long and profitable Christmas vacation period were disappointed by a message from the Ontario department, stating that schools must remain open until Dec. 22. The local school board previously had decided on a Dec. 15 closing date to allow the students to work in the Christmas shopping period.

Scholarships in B.C.I. Made Possible Through Generosity of Industrial Plants and Local Organizations

The Belleville Collegiate Institute and Vocational School Scholarship Fund, aggregating $930 and said to be one of the finest of its kind in Ontario, will observe its first disbursement birthday at the Commencement Exercises of the school today.

The fund which prior to this year amounted to $80 contributed by the Belleville Kiwanis Club, the Board of Education, the Catholic Women's League and the Argyll Chapter, I.O.D.E. was swelled in 1944 by $850 donated by industrial and manufacturing plants of the city and district. A further donation announced yesterday is that of $10 given by the Women's University Club of the city.

Four Divisions

The fund will be the source of scholarships which will be given annually to every grade in the four divisions of the school namely collegiate, industrial, commercial and home economics. The amounts will vary, according to the number of students taking the various courses. Award of the scholarships will be based on the year's work.

A feature of this new Scholarship Fund is that its monetary size permits of the grant of from two to 4 awards in each grade instead of one as hitherto was the case. While student interest was fairly keen previously the advent of the award of more than one scholarship in each grade has proved an added incentive to the school student body as a whole.

Fund Wins Attention

Apparently regarded by other educational institutions of the province as one of the best of its kind, the Fund has attracted the attention of heads of other schools, and already several letters asking for information regarding administration, procedure, method of securing funds etc., have been received at the Collegiate Institute offices.

In co-operation with Principal W. S. Turner, Mr. J. N. Reid, teacher of geography and business practice here, heads a committee of department heads of the school in the administration and operation of the fund.

Winners of the 1944 scholarships, the first to be derived from the new Fund will be announced today.

November Showed Slight Increase In Precipitation

Average maximum temperature for the month of November was 44 degrees it was reported today by officials of the Belleville Water Purification plant when monthly statistics were released. Average minimum recording was 30 degrees with a mean temperature for the month of 37 degrees.

Records show that temperature for November this year and for the corresponding period in 1943 was practically the same, there being only one degree difference in the mean temperature. Average maximum last year was 43 degrees with an average minimum of 29 degrees and a mean recording of 36 degrees.

The recent snowfall of 13 inches served to increase the precipitation for the last month with a recording of 2.71 inches, including 1.31 inches of rain and 14 inches of snow being received during the month. Last year there was 1.37 inches of rain and 7.7 inches of snow making a total precipitation of 2.14 inches. Precipitation fell on 19 days during the past month compared with 22 days in November last year.

Building Permits Up in November

Indicative of the upswing in building trends which has been enjoyed in Belleville during the past few months of the current season, building permits issued for November again showed an increase over the corresponding period last year, it is shown by records kept by the city building inspector, Charles Mott.

Although during the past month a total of only eight building permits were issued in the city, value of construction represented amounted to $11,100 as compared with ten permits issued during November, 1943, with a construction value of $9,400.

The same building increase over the eleven-month period of the current season has also been enjoyed despite the fact there has been a slight falling off in the number of permits issued since January 1st. For the first eleven months last year there were 178 permits issued with a construction value of $185,394, as compared with the 173 permits issued to date this year with a building value of $226,060.

Permits issued during the past month included:

W. Deline, one-storey addition to tire repair depot at 283 Coleman St., $1,500; Rudolph Blue, two-storey dwelling, 54 Evans Street, $3,000; Mrs. R. Mintz, 1½-storey, $1,500; J. A. McFee, one-storey addition to Front St. store, $1,500; Harry Allen, second-storey addition at 54 E. Dundas, $500; Bell Telephone Company, interior alterations to office and plant on Pinnacle Street, $1,900; W. H. Judge, workshop and warehouse, 24 Victoria Ave., $1,000; White Lum- Company, one-storey storage building on Gordon Street, $200.

ON SAME TRAIN THREE HOURS

Nowata, Okla., Dec. 1 — (AP) — Sgt. Floyd Roberts, just back from three years in the South Pacific and en route to Camp Chaffee, Ark., looked out the train window and saw his wife descend from the train. The couple had been on the same train for three hours, neither knowing the other was aboard. They had time only for a quick "hello" and "goodbye." Mrs. Roberts had been returning home from a visit at Bangor, Me.

FRANCO MATCHES FRENCH FORCE

Paris, Dec. 1 — (AP) — General Franco has sent 107 Spanish Civil Guards into Andorra to balance the 107 French Gendarmes Gen. de Gaulle assigned there recently as "a preventive measure" against winter disturbances, the newspaper Paris Presse said today. The newspaper said that Franco matched the French force even to the issuance of 150 cartridges a man.

PICTON

Foot of Snow In P. E. County

Picton, Dec. 1—Winter descended upon the countryside yesterday with more than a foot of snow falling. As the snow packed down it became very slippery and a number of cars slued into the ditch. Pedestrians were frequently called upon to help push cars from the curbs. The temperature remained mild and there was a fairyland appearance as the soft snow clung to telephone wires and trees. Farmers have been able to do plowing up to last week and are pleased to see the snow as a source of moisture and as protection for seeding and fall crops. Bus service and the mail from Trenton were later than usual as the buses were forced to travel slowly. Some cars left parked on the street overnight, were heaped high with snow and resembled huge banks of snow.

Bazaar is Held

Inclement weather and dull skies failed to prevent a large number of ladies from attending the annual bazaar of the Women's Guild of St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church, yesterday afternoon. The hall was gay with Christmas decorations and lights. The guests were received by Mrs. W. Rylott. The tea table was centred with mums in a silver basket and red candles. There, Mrs. Beverley MacDonald, Mrs. J. H. Cryan and Miss Helen VanCleaf poured tea. Members of the Guild assisted in serving. Sale of fancy work was in charge of Mrs. T. S. Wells, Mrs. H. L. VanCleaf, Mrs. D. Sayers and Miss F. Friend had charge of the apron booth while Mrs. George Ovens and Miss Carrie Welsh conducted a touch and take table. There were many tea parties and a splendid sum for church purposes was realized.

Nine Are Killed In Plane Crash

Los Angeles, Dec. 1 —(AP)— A Transcontinental and Western Airlines passenger plane, with 23 aboard, crashed in a heavy fog in the nearby San Fernando Valley early today as it was nearing its destination at Burbank en route from San Francisco. Police reported that at least seven were killed.

T.W.A. officials said the army had taken over at the scene of the crash and army officials told them seven military personnel were dead and nine alive. The number of civilians aboard the plane was not immediately determined.

Twenty passengers and three crew members were on the plane but no names of dead and injured were disclosed immediately. Survivors were taken to Los Angeles and Hollywood hospitals.

Columbus, O., Dec. 1 — (AP) — Dr. William Rogers inserted this ad in the Columbus Dispatch: "Hospital doctor, wife and baby seek small furnished apartment, home if will share. Prefer east or southeast. Will shoot baby if must." Today he had 20 places from which to choose.

STORM IN CITY

stating their trucks were running considerably behind schedule, both from Toronto and from the east. Trucks from Toronto due in Belleville at seven were still unreported at ten o'clock this morning. Highway snowplows had not yet been put into operation on the main traffic arteries, it was stated.

The heavy snowfall also caught the city public works department slightly off guard with their snowplow reported not yet ready for its season's operation.

County Roads Heavy

County roads were reported exceptionally heavy with some traffic lanes, including the Point Anne road, being blocked altogether. One of the county grader plows has been put into operation on the Foxboro-Madoc road, while another hired plow is in operation north of Madoc. No detailed report of the county system was available, however.

Trains coming in from the east early this morning were up to two hours late it was reported by railwaymen, while Montreal trains were having difficulty in getting out of that city. Mails coming in from northern parts of the county were also delayed with the Foxboro mail only being in at eleven o'clock. At that time the Tweed mail was approximately two hours late.

Buses Run Late

In the worst November blizzard to hit Eastern Ontario in the memory of many, provincial buses arrived in Belleville many hours late last night. Passengers awaiting transportation of this type stood shivering and cold long into the night, seeking what shelter they could avail themselves of in the downtown area.

Transport drivers found it practically impossible to cope with the driving blizzard, that left the highways levelled from ditch to ditch with several feet of driven snow, that mounted when whipped by a strong north-east wind. Transport truck officials drew their vehicles off the highway and ordered them tied up in the nearest community after the storm reached its height late Thursday. Although no serious accidents were reported in the Belleville area, one bad highway pile-up was said to have occurred east of Napanee as the result of the worst early-winter storm seen locally in years.

SNOW CONDITIONS

by an automobile during a snowstorm at Shelburne, where 10 inches of snow was reported to have fallen during the night.

At Lindsay, W. Barry, a trucker of Minden, Ont., was killed when his truck ran out of control and crashed through a guard rail into a creek.

At London, in southwestern Ontario, snow was driven by a 45-mile-an-hour wind, leaving huge snowdrifts throughout the city and district. Transportation systems were hindered but kept operating. More than four inches of snow blanketed the area by midnight.

65 Miles Hour.

At Montreal, the wind was reported to have a velocity of 65 miles an hour at its height and for a time many Montrealers were without electricity when power wires spanned under the force of the gale and the weight of the snow. A fall of more than 12 inches was reported in the Montreal district.

About 20 other roofs in the Quebec district also were carried away by the wind, including part of the metal roof of Spencerwood, residence of the Lieutenant-Governor, Sir Eugene Fiset.

The roof and part of a wall of a three-storey building along the Canadian Pacific Railway right-of-way leading into Palais station fell across the tracks and blocked traffic. Further confusion resulted when an outbound train for Montreal was derailed five minutes after leaving the station.

Ferry service between Quebec and Levis was suspended after a ferry had struggled for almost an hour to cross the river. The ship was pulled into the wharf and anchored there. Tramway traffic also was suspended when deep drifts made the streets impassable.

Snow on Wires Causes Blackouts.

Weight of the snow on power wires caused blackouts in many parts of the city and the three city radio stations were forced from the air. The wind blew down the transmitter tower of Station CHRC and the studio of Station CKCV was plunged into darkness. After CKCV had opened temporary studios at the transmitter station, the wind snapped wires leading to the transmitter. About the same time, CBV went off the air when power lines leading to transformers were broken.

Smashed windows were common throughout the city.

Telegraph and telephone circuits were jammed with many telgrams still unsent after 24 hours. Long distance calls were limited to five minutes.

Two men were injured when an 85-car Canadian National Railways freight train was derailed at St. Lambert, on the south shore of the St. Lawrence river opposite Montreal. The engine toppled over after leaving the rails on a curve.

Tramway traffic in Montreal was halted on many routes when the trams were not able to buck snowdrifts which blocked the rails. The tie-up continued through the night and only a few routes were running.

Moscow, Dec. 1 —(AP)— Enveloping 50 more communities in their new drive west of the Danube in southwestern Hungary, Russian troops today moved north to within 78 miles of outflanked Budapest and less than 100 miles from the Austrian border.

Moscow announced a nine-mile advance north along the west bank of the great river yesterday. Northeast of the besieged Hungarian capital other Red army troops seized the Axis strongholds of Eger and Szikszo which guard invasion routes into central Slovakia.

Russian troops also cut the railway between Miscolc, Hungary's fifth city, and Kassa (Kosice), eastern Slovakian communications hub now threatened by Gen. Ivan Petrov's forces fanning out from captured Ungvar. The line was severed at Arnot, less than three miles northeast of Miskolc.

Petrov's troops, attacking on a 30-mile front, captured 30 villages, including Domasa, 20 miles east of Presov; Moraviany, 23 miles east of Kassa, and Zemplin, seven miles northeast of the big north Hungarian rail centre of Satoraljaujhely.

In addition to capturing Eger and Szikszo, Marshal Rodion Y. Malinovsky's troops penetrated Kacs, 10 miles northeast of Eger and 25 miles from the central Slovakian frontier.

Using captured Pecs, in southwestern Hungary, as a base, Russian and Yugoslav Partisan forces were driving northward toward one of the main railways which the Germans use to supply their forces of occupation at Zagreb, in northern Yugoslavia.

The Red army also swarmed southward from Pecs, swooping through villages which had been pocketed by the advance across the Danube. The triple Russian aim appeared an attempt to force a decision in Hungary at Budapest, invade Austria, and cut off the retreat of an estimated 100,000 German troops now in Yugoslavia.

Says U.S. Should Not Take Advantage of War To Take Over Br. Trade

London, Dec. 1 — (CP) — The House of Commons was told today that "America has never been 100 per cent in the war as we have" and that "It is not fair they should take advantage of that and take over the markets without which we cannot restart our export trade."

The statement was made by Sir John Wardlaw-Milne, who asserted there was "a need for very plain speaking and no people are more altruistic and fair-minded than the American people or like plain speaking better than they do."

Sir John contended his words did "not mean that I minimize the efforts of the United States or do not fully recognize how impossible it would have been for us to win the war without them. But on the other hand where would America be today if we had not stood alone in 1940?"

Sir John argued also that China was learning that the United States "is her sole aid and protector." He suggested a more vigorous British policy if Britain was "to keep our position in China."

These statements were made in the course of a Commons debate during which members discussed party politics, criticized the government for not showing more speed in undertaking the proposed vast plan of new social legislation, and argued that parliament was at fault for not sitting more than five days a week.

Foreign Secretary Eden replied that Monday was the only day cabinet ministers could be entirely free of parliamentary entanglements to do their own work. A motion for recess until Tuesday finally was voted without dissent.

LETTER TO THE EDITOR

Ask Support For Riverside Drive By-Law

Editor, Ontario Intelligencer,

On Monday, December 4, the property-owners of Belleville will be given opportunity to bring about one of the most important civic improvements ever undertaken by our municipality.

I refer to the proposal to open up a new thoroughfare along the east bank of the Moira river to be known as the Riverside Drive.

The proposed Riverside Drive will begin at the eastern end of the Lower Bridge and extend northwards along the river bank practically to the Upper Bridge.

The new street and thoroughfare is planned mainly to relieve the present intolerable congestion on Front Street which is growing more difficult and hazardous every year. There is probably no main street in any city in Ontario where traffic presents so serious a problem.

The survey for the new driveway shows provision for the parking of many hundreds of motorcars. The Drive will be far wider and more commodious than Front Street.

The projected street will be certain to bring about extensions of the present stores so as to provide another entrance to their places of business. That will mean a new building program that will continue into the indefinite future.

The improvement will also have the effect of removing many unsightly structures which now disfigure the eastern bank of our river and will transform this forbidding outlook into a scene of quiet dignity such as will favorably impress tourists and visitors to our city and bring satisfaction to all citizens who desire to see Belleville become a more beautiful and attractive city.

Such things have a definite monetary value. They influence the prices of property in the remotest parts of the city. They are a certain indication of the progressiveness of the community and its desirability as a place in which to establish a business or build a home.

Nothing can be worse for any municipality than to have a second-hand or non-progressive appearance.

I, therefore express the hope that no qualified voter will think of this proposed Riverside Drive as something that is important merely to those who own property or who engage in business in that vicinity. Nothing could be farther from the truth. This conspicuous and readily noticeable improvement will, if carried through in an adequate manner, enhance the value of every piece of real estate in the entire city. It is not a neighborhood or sectional or selfish proposal but a huge improvement that multitudes will use every day and who will wonder why it wasn't carried out long ago.

But beyond all this, there is another overwhelming consideration why this municipal undertaking should be endorsed by a tremendous majority.

Before many months pass over our heroic men who have saved civilization and human liberty will be returning from overseas.

We have promised them jobs. By "jobs" I do not mean digging gardens or raking leaves or selling lead-pencils. Still less do I mean walking to the city hall to qualify for the humiliating relief.

All those things happened after World War I. We have promised these boys something better after World War II. We shall soon, we hope have opportunity to make that promise good.

Our manufacturers are going to do their utmost to have their factories working to capacity. But the task is gigantic. The transition from war-production to the manufacture of civilian goods is not a task that can be accomplished in an hour or a day. In most cases it will require months. Sometimes a year or more will be needed. And then there is the disturbance of markets and of foreign trade.

The Belleville Post-War Planning Commission has foreseen all this and realizes that when 750,000 men on active service and another 750,000 engaged in war production, are suddenly released there is going to be a staggering problem for somebody to solve.

The Post-War Planning Commission is well aware that we must look to our industries mainly for that steady employment which must ultimately be provided by our shops and factories. But in the interval, while our factories are adjusting themselves to the turnover from war to peace, we are going to need municipal undertakings and public works of many kinds if our returned men are to have food and shelter and clothing during the period of transition.

The Post-War Planning Commission therefore after careful investigation brought this Riverside Drive idea to the attention of the City Council as the most promising palliative for the condition which will inevitably arise.

It will take several years to complete the task that has been set in the main work of construction of the highway itself. Then there will be shop extensions, many scores of them, to reach back to the new street. This will mean another building program that will carry along to the indefinite future.

Here then is our opportunity to carry out a highly desirable public improvement and at the same time render a great patriotic service to the most deserving men in this world today.

Fellow property-owners let us make this vote unanimous.

(Signed:)

J. G. Galloway, Chairman of Merchants' Division of the Chamber of Commerce.

Harold G. Woodley, Chairman Post-War Planning.

Mr. Churchill at 70

Throughout the Allied world the name of one man was in every mind and on every tongue on Thursday, St. Andrew's Day. Winston Churchill, Prime Minister of Great Britain, was observing the seventieth anniversary of his birth.

The world gives him high place in this age and has no doubt that he will be numbered not only among the supremely great Englishmen and Britons of history but also as one of the greatest figures of world history.

In his homeland he was honored and in the House of Commons where he has found his greatest expression as a leader and statesman his arrival on Thursday was met with the warmest greetings. Like the stalwart and tireless worker he has always been, the British Prime Minister came to do a good day's work and a good day's work to a man of his temperament means more than a day's work for into it he throws his full personality and experience.

From the British press, the American press and leaders and from other parts of the world came greetings to this man who has now reached the august age of three score years and ten and yet is dealing hammer blows of a titan on the head of German militarism, Junkerdom and Nazism. He is the man that makes the German tyrants quail and tremble for they know the power of retribution that rests in him, who at one time stood alone with his native Britain and the Empire and with the material aid and moral support of the United States and her great leader Mr. Roosevelt before the United States entered the war. Everyone remembers the words of his speech, "We shall fight." The enemy knows what the name of Churchill signifies for the Hun has felt his blows. Even the enemy press took notice, of course, to attack the great man and statesman.

The British press hailed Mr. Churchill as a proven national leader in his appeal to the popular imagination, in control of strategy and in mastery of the political scene. The Times noted his enduring youthfulness, disarming humor and essential dislike of pretension and parade and his ever increasing maturity of patience and tolerance, while the Manchester Guardian said of him, "No British name has ever meant so much to men and women under every sky." The Guardian noted his lonely hours of brooding upon the coming danger which he foresaw and said this prepared him for the day when he should lead for he had been disciplined by adversity. He thought only of the fate of his country and of Europe. He was unspoilt by ambition. "Whatever the future that awaits him he has lived his finest hour."

One of the finest tributes on the anniversary was that of the New York Times which said he "turned the tide of war" and that if it had not been for Winston Churchill the casualty lists of Americans would have been longer. The Times then paid this tribute to Britain and the democratic nations as well as Mr. Churchill, "The war would have been won even if Winston Churchill had fallen years ago in the Sudan or South Africa, but it would not have been won so soon."

As he enters his seventy-first year, Mr. Churchill like a knight of the days of chivalry bends every great talent he possesses to the task of securing victory and enduring peace and happiness for mankind.

British Christmas 1944

Britain's people will have a Christmas this year without some of the restrictions of other festive seasons during wartime. It is difficult to realize that this will be the sixth Christmas under war conditions. During the long years the people of Britain have been bearing burdens which are not equalled in this part of the world. In a few weeks Christmas will come with lighted up cities and with more sweets and richer fare than in other years.

The people of Britain with thankful hearts that the war is moving on towards its end, driven forward by the intense energy of Britain, United States, Russia and the other Allies to tighten the cords about Germany, will welcome the coming of Yuletide in traditional style as far as it is possible for them to do so, and will enjoy the additional food. Children under eighteen years will have an extra half pound of sweets. Everyone, young and old, is to get an extra half pound of margarine, an extra half pound of sugar and in the week before Christmas Day 36 cents worth of meat instead of the usual allowance of 23 cents worth. Older persons, that is those seventy and upwards will feel the inspiration of three ounces of tea instead of two for their weekly allowance. Nuts, dried fruits, raisins and figs will be offered on the markets.

While many in the New World, which has often been spoken of as rich flowing in milk and honey, will think these additions to the British menu are not large, in Britain these extras will be received with profound gratitude. The stalwart defenders of the freedom of democracy can feel that they have done their part well for more than five years, but while they have the inward satisfaction of their task well done they would gladly do without the larger measure of food this year if they had been called upon to do so.

But they have earned what Food Minister Llewellin has announced. And what use they will make of them! No one can even attempt to picture what confections the British housewives will make of their 1944 Yuletide rations and how all families will appreciate the fare as it is set before them on the great feast day. The man who made Victorian England forever famous with his gift in description of British hospitality and of a British festival could alone do justice to what the British housewives will place upon the tables. That man was Charles Dickens. He could describe such a scene.

But if others cannot describe so well, at least they can feel and leave to the imagination how Britain will go in for the festivities this year.

Over all will be the intense satisfaction that world freedom survives and is abroad and will still be abroad despite the barbaric crimes of the Germans, the glow of satisfaction that the democratic way of life has been assured and the trust and hope that before Christmas 1945 comes the struggle will have closed, for good is to be triumphant and the ways of democracy guaranteed.

Britons will have their Christmas feast, one of the marks of civilization that the Hun cannot destroy.

Shipping Record

Two Queens of the sea, the Queen Mary and the Queen Elizabeth, have achieved something of which British shipping must be proud. They carried overseas 320,500 uniformed Americans in the year from June of 1943 to June of 1944 while other British ships transported from the United States 544,500 other Americans in uniform a total of 865,000 servicemen. It is a tribute to the British shipping enterprise and to the Allied patrols of the sea, that these giant liners were able to make so many voyages and that so many men were taken over the ocean in one year in safety.

Forests in Russia

Forest tracts burned or cut down during the war are now being restored on a large scale. Tens of thousands of hectares of forests are now being planted in the liberated areas of Central Russia, particularly near large cities and along railways, says Forest and Outdoors. Some 10,000 hectares will be planted in the Orel, Voronezh, Tula and other regions this year. Several large tree nurseries have also been established in the liberated regions.

On the Way to Mars

(Edmonton Journal)

A London speculation has it that giant V-2's went so high they never came down. They are supposed to have disintegrated in the stratosphere due to friction. Many of us have been led to believe on the other hand that the stratosphere was virtually frictionless, the air there being so thin. Perhaps the missing V-2's have merely started off for Mars.

REALIST

A realist is one who knows
That banks will mortgages foreclose
And sees, before he eats his fill,
The waiter coming with the bill.
But I, the shameful truth to state,
Remember things like that too late.

A realist is one who acts
According to established facts.
And knows precisely to the cent
For what his last week's wages went.
But, I'm not of the careful sort.
My funds are always running short.

A realist is one who knows
When home the smiling actor goes
And he's no more in public view,
He has his share of trouble, too.
But, I was born the foolish kind.
The scenes I never peep behind.

I often leap before I look.
I am the fish that takes the hook;
What prudence bids me save I spend,
And will, I fear, unto the end.
But, I've had fun he must have missed
Who boasts that he's a realist.

TURTLE AND TORTOISE

How does a turtle differ from a tortoise?

Both of these terms are applied to species of reptiles belonging to the order Chelonia. In their broadest sense they are interchangeable, every turtle being a tortoise and every tortoise a turtle.

Although the terms are not consistently restricted to different groups of reptiles, in a general way the marine and larger fresh-water species are called turtles, while the land species are called tortoises.

Dr. William T. Hornaday, the noted naturalist, classified the Chelonians as follows: Tortoises, all Chelonians of fresh-water; and turtles, all Chelonians of the sea.

In British usage the terms are employed in a somewhat more specific sense, the terrestrial species being known as tortoises and the marine species as turtles. The London Zoological Society says: "The tortoises are terrestrial, the terrapins amphibious, and the turtles marine."

This confusion in names among naturalists leads many people to disregard the scientific classification and to call all of them turtles.

"Turtle" was applied to a dove long before it was to a reptile. The word is believed to have acquired the latter sense through the assimilation of French "tortue" or Spanish "tortuga," meaning tortoise, to the English "turtle," meaning dove.

One etymologist suggests that the French and Spanish terms for tortoise may be derived from Latin "tortus," crooked, referring to the reptile's peculiar feet.

The Spanish apply "tortuga" to both land and marine species. Columbus named an island off the northwest coast of Hispaniola "Tortuga Island," which it still bears, from its fancied resemblance to the humped shell of a turtle asleep on the sea. Ponce de Leon, returning from his first expedition to Florida in 1513, discovered near the coast a group of islands that he named the "Dry Tortugas" because they contained no springs but abounded in turtles. On one tiny island the Spanish voyagers caught 170 of these reptiles in one night.

The Chelonians are among the most primitive existing reptiles. In a general way a tortoise, turtle or terrapin may be described as a reptile with its skeleton on the outside of its body and with its vital organs completely encased in a bony box known as a shell. Chelonians are the only backboned animals with their vital organs inside their ribs, the shell being partly formed of ribs that are outside the shoulder and pelvic girdles.

Traffic Accidents Due to Snow Storm Kept to Minimum

Traffic accidents on city streets directly attributed to Thursday's heavy snow and blizzard were kept to the minimum when only three minor motor crashes were reported in Belleville.

Only Fender Damage.

In the afternoon an automobile driven by Wm. Brant, Tyendinaga, skidded in the drifting snow at the intersection of Moira and North Front Sts. with the result the car skidded into the path of a west-bound truck driven by Donald Matthews, 18 Charlotte St. Fender damage resulted to the motor car.

Hub Cap Found.

Late at night an automobile driven by Archie Mansfield, 155 Station St., was struck by a hit-and-run driven vehicle on Station St. The blizzard was at its height at the time, but there was no doubt there had been a collision. The vehicles were proceeding in the opposite direction when the side-swipe occurred. The left fenders and body of the vehicle were damaged. Police later found a hub cap at the scene of the crash, which may assist in further investigations.

Knocked Off Sleigh.

A young lad by the name of Doyle was knocked off his hand sleigh at the corner of Victoria Ave. and George St. when an automobile driven by Rev. J. G. Hornsby, 271 George Street, skidded in the deep snow late yesterday afternoon. Fortunately the child did not suffer serious injuries.

Transport Ordered Moved.

A large Hume Transport, driven by Frederick Bert of Toronto, was obstructing vision after being parked at the intersection of Bridge and Front Sts. late last night. Police ordered the vehicle removed to a safer position.

GOT ROMMEL?

Lieut. Harold O. Miller of Santa Monica, Calif., is said by the U. S. Air Force to have "got" Field Marshal Erwin Rommel's staff car, in which Rommel was fatally injured. The U. S. airforce submits as proof a photo of an exploding gas tank. An R.A.F. Typhoon squadron, including Canadians, has been mentioned as having done the trick.

DOG GUARDS MASTER IN DEATH

A Seeing Eye dog's loyalty to his blind master even in death proved a barrier to Los Angeles police and coroner's officials. Neighbors reported that Elvardo Patterson, 60-year-old blindman, had died after a heart attack in his apartment. Officials arrived on the scene but found that his Seeing Eye dog, Gwen, a German shepherd, was standing guard over the body. She refused to let the officers take the body to the county morgue. Finally the dog licked his master's face, sniffed and whined and satisfied himself Patterson was dead. She stood aside and the body was removed.

FOUND: A GIRL WHO BLUSHES

I am suffering from an inferiority complex. I blush easily and I am extremely nervous, and I worry continually over the least little thing. I have tried everything to overcome this handicap....

So far but for one discrepancy it might be Ol' Doc Brady crying in his beer—but for another discrepancy, to wit, that he doesn't care for beer, thank you. Yes, indeed, the way I know it isn't Ol' Doc Brady is that he does not have an inferiority complex but rather a collection of them.

The young woman continues:

I even consulted a psychiatrist and had myself psycho-analyzed for seven weeks at great expense, but received little relief.

I don't know where to turn. I am 23 and have everything to live for, and yet I'm so miserable I want to die...

Come, come, now, child, let's keep this on a serious level, and no romancing.

Any kind of physical pain is much easier to bear than the mental torture I have to go through every day of my life.... (End of the complain).

Now folks, before we dissect this case let me remind you that I am no psychiatrist, psychologist, psycho-analyst, specialist or long distance diagnostician.

Why do introspective people who devote too much time to thinking of themselves assume that their worries, fears, anxieties, phobias, etc., are worse or harder to bear than real pain is? No, no, please don't write to tell me why. The question is rhetorical. Great guns, I've heard all that a thousand times before—you can't tell me anything new about it. And don't try to tell me that I show a singular lack of sympathy. My sympathy is not available on demand—when or if I feel sympathy I reserve the right to bestow it where I, not you, think it should go.

Only suggestion I offer this young woman is that she is perhaps striving for perfection and of course cannot achieve it. Nobody can. The one normal thing I know about her is that she has an inferiority complex. Such a complex or two is fine for any young person. It is the young person without any feeling or consciousness of inferiority that needs our sympathy, care and guidance.

Then, too, perhaps I contrived to convey to the young woman, in the personal letter I sent her, the suggestion that she find ways and means of keeping herself occupied and concerned with activities, cares, aspirations, interests of others and by such diversion keep her mind off from herself.

Again I caution the new reader to remember that I am just Ol' Doc Brady and my ignorance of psychology is stupendous.

QUESTIONS & ANSWERS

Lemon

Wife 26, I am 28, and we have been your followers since years before we married. Would it be harmful to either of us to drink the juice of a lemon in a glass of water every morning? (E. D. E.)

Answer—On the contrary. No accounting for tastes—I'd as soon down a beaker of castor oil as a chaser for a gob of mashed potato every morning. But don't mind my whems—lemon or lemon juice is just as healthful as orange or orange juice or any other fruit or its juice for daily consumption.

More Girl Than Boy Babies

Is it true that a married couple today are more likely to have a girl baby than a boy baby? (Corp. R. J.)

Answer—I had always assumed it was fifty-fifty, but according to some recent statistics more girl babies than boy babies are being born now.

Allergic Headache

I followed the suggestion in your pamphlet concerning allergic headache—I found one or two doses quickly clear my headache, and have not had a headache now for over two months, even at time of period—before I seldom went three days without one. (Gratefully, Mrs.)

Answer—Thank you, Ma'am. On written request (no clipping will serve)) I am glad to send the pamphlet "Relief for Allergy" to any reader who provides stamped pre-addressed envelope.

SENIOR MEMBERS

Oppose the Government

The day's debate brought out the first speakers opposing the government from the anti-conscription point of view. They were three Liberals and two members of the Bloc Populaire party.

Besides Mr. Cardin, Walter Tucker (L—Rosthern) and Phillipe Picard (L—Bellechasse) announced their intention of voting against their party on the main motion of confidence. The Bloc Populaire speakers were Maxime Raymond of Beauharnois-Laprairie and Wilfrid D'Anjou of Rimouski.

Mr. Picard moved and Mr. Tucker seconded an amendment to declare the House would aid the government in maintaining a vigorous war effort, but did not approve of conscription for overseas service.

The amendment was ruled out of order by Speaker J. A. Glen and the same fate was meted out to a Social Credit amendment moved Wednesday.

Mr. Cardin, Dean of the House, said he was glad the amendments were ruled out of order and said they only beclouded the issue. The members should be ready to vote "yes" or "no" on the main motion as proposed by the government.

Will Follow Lead

Fred Hoblitzell (L—Toronto-Eglinton) who voted against the government two years ago because he favored overseas conscription said he was still dissatisfied with the measure of conscription now proposed, but would follow Col. Ralston's lead and vote with the administration.

Supporting Mr. Hanson in his criticism of the government's proposals and condemning them as inadequate to provide necessary reinforcements were Howard Green (PC — Vancouver South) and Gordon Fraser (PC—Peterboro West).

Maj. W. E. Harris (L—Grey Bruce) recently returned after being wounded while fighting with an armored unit in France, supported the government's policy and said he preferred the voluntary system and hoped it would yet be possible that all the men needed overseas would go as volunteers.

Appeals for Order

Mr. Cardin made a strong appeal to French-speaking Canadians to respect the opinions of others and to maintain order. At the same time he said all the concessions that had been made for the maintenance of unity in Canada had been made by the French-speaking people, none by the English-speaking people.

The contribution of French-Canada to the war effort was greater than that of English-Canada because the French were not responding to the call of blood and sentiment. They had only reason to prompt them.

He expressed the hope that Canada would one day be a completely independent nation.

Mr. Fraser said there was no bitterness against French-Canadians but there was bitterness against the government for playing favorites with French-Canadians.

Not Even Zombie.

Mr. Fraser said no government could have done worse in this war than the present government.

"Where were you in 1917?" asked a member.

"He wasn't even a Zombie," said another Liberal.

Mr. Fraser said men were in hospitals overseas and were sent back to the front again to be killed. He read letters from wounded men.

"I don't remember your name being mentioned in dispatches in the last war," said Labor Minister Mitchell.

"It wasn't," said Mr. Fraser. "And neither was the Prime Minister's."

"You were my age," said Mr. Mitchell.

It was often asked why the people were bitter against French-Canadians, said Mr. Fraser.

"The people are not bitter against them," he said. "But they are bitter against the Prime Minister and the government for having played favorites with the French-Canadians."

"That is not so," said a Liberal.

"It is so," said Mr. Fraser. "In the Province of Quebec crossmarks were allowed to collect cream every two days and in Ontario they were allowed to collect it once every four days."

"Aw, get on with the war," said George Cruickshank (L—Fraser Valley.)

WEDDINGS

Very quietly at eight o'clock in the evening of Thursday, November 16, Elsie Frater, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James Frater, Vancouver, B.C., was united in marriage to Cpl. Gordon Robert Shonikor, son of Mrs. Shonikor and the late George Shonikor, Trenton, the ceremony being performed by Rev. J. Catley, at St. Peter's Rectory, Trenton.

Attended by Mr. and Mrs. Allan Shonikor, the bride chose a gold wool crepe frock with brown accessories and corsage of roses.

Following the ceremony, a few intimate friends of the young couple gathered at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Allan Shonikor to offer the newlyweds their sincere felicitations.

After a short wedding trip to Ottawa, Cpl. Shonikor returned to his station at the east coast. Mrs. Shonikor is with the Women's Division at Trenton R.C.A.F. Station.

SPROUL—MacDONALD

In Westminster United Chapel, Toronto, Miss Hedy MacDonald, only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Arthur MacDonald, Trenton, became the bride of F.O. Leland Davis Sproul, son of Dr. H. Sproul and late Mrs. Sproul, of Newcastle, N.B. Rev. Arthur Organ officiated. Wedding music was played by Mrs. Brown, and Miss Galbraith sang "Because".

Given in marriage by her uncle, H. Armstrong, Trenton, the bride was becomingly attired in a floor-length gown of white satin with skirt of heavy French lace, yoked bodice and finger-tip sleeves embroidered with satin scrolling. The skirt was appliqued with white satin flowers to match the long French silk veil, which fell from velvet cornflowers. The bride carried red roses and bouvardia.

Mrs. Doris MacDonald, Kingston, sister-in-law of the bride, as matron of honor, wore turquoise chiffon with matching chapeau of turquoise ostrich feathers, finger-tip veil and yellow roses.

F.L. Angus Cowison, R.C.A.F., was best man, and the ushers were F.O. D. MacDonald and F.O. D. Milne, R.C.A.F.

Upon their return F.O. and Mrs. Sproul will reside in Toronto.

ARMSTRONG—SHERMAN

The marriage of Miss Dorothy Florence Sherman, Reg.N., to Flying Officer George Grant Armstrong, R.C.A.F., took place in Trinity-St. Andrew's United Church, Brighton, at seven o'clock the evening of November the twenty-fifth. Rev. J. E. Anderson officiated at the candlelight ceremony.

Lighted candles in the windows of the church, silver candelabras with tall white tapers burning and a large basket of white chrysanthemums made the altar a beautiful setting for the wedding nuptials.

Miss Frances Solomon, A.T.C.M., played the wedding music. The bride was given in marriage by her father and wore a street-length gown of deep violet crepe romaine and carried a cascade of deep pink roses and bouvardia. Attending her were her bridesmaid, Miss Irene Hamilton, of Brighton, in French claret gown, and Miss Jane Sherman of Kingston, as junior bridesmaid in a sweet girlish mauve gown. The bridesmaids carried nosegays of Johanna Hill roses and the bride and her attendants wore matching feather hats and veils of the blended autumn colorings of their dresses.

Flying Officer Russell Kempster, of Toronto, was groomsman and the ushers were Mr. Lorne Armstrong, M.A., of Ottawa, brother of the groom, and Mr. Don Little of Brighton, cousin of the bride. Sgt. Pilot Bill Potts, A.C.C.M., a violinist, played "The Lord's Prayer", as part of the marriage ceremony and during the signing of the register Schubert's "Ave Maria".

The reception was held at the home of the bride's parents, which was lovely with bronze chrysanthemums.

The bride later changed to a melon pink rabbit's hair dress, dark muskrat coat and brown accessories and left by train for a honeymoon trip to Montreal. They will live in Aylmer, Ontario.

The bride, a graduate of Wellesley Hospital, Toronto, is the only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Fred Sherman, Brighton, and the groom is the elder son of Mr. and Mrs. George Armstrong of Edville, formerly of Govan, Saskatchewan.

Among the out-of-town guests at the wedding were Mr. and Mrs. Fred Lewis and Barbara, of Belleville.

A preview of Spring may be seen in clothes prepared for southern wear. A nice ensemble consists of a belted three-quarter-length coat in pale blue knitted woollen made with collarless neckline, side-bow tied. It is lined with the print of the accompanying silk crepe dress—little black lambs on the blue ground.

Clay Packs Beneficial In Removing Blackheads

By HELEN FOLLETT

WASHING THE face until it is just about skinned, inspecting pores afterward and finding that they are black tipped, is discouraging to any girl who is making for the good looks goal. It happens often enough, and one gets pretty mad about it.

There is a simple means of dislodging blackheads: it is our old friend the clay pack. We must warn mama that she must not indulge in this beauty pastime when the children are around as she may scare them to death. A woman wearing a clay pack looks like nothing human.

Two Types of Pack.

Get some kaolin from your druggist. Put three tablespoonfuls in a small bowl. If the skin is oily, mix it with witch hazel until you have a mass the consistency of whipped cream. If the skin is dry, use mineral oil in place of the witch hazel.

Spread on all that the skin will hold and include the neck as kaolin has mild bleaching properties. Pick up your mystery story, lie down for a nice rest. When the application starts to dry and flake, which will be in about half an hour, wash the pack away with tepid water. Rinse with cold water, dry gently, tap in a little cold cream. One treatment may not clear away the pore debris, so keep on each day until your facial coat has had a thorough dry cleaning.

Blackheads are caused by the hardening of sebaceous fluids in the pores forming little plugs that pick up atmospheric dust.

Comedone Extracter

When blackheads are lodge, remove them with a comedone extractor, a tiny instrument that you can get at your drug store. There is a tiny open circle that is placed over the horrid little blemish then gentle pressure will remove it without breaking the skin.

There is always the chance that pimples will result when blackheads are present, so don't bear with them. Steaming the flesh once or twice a week will soften them, keep the kaolin treatment.

Argyll Chapter Bridge and Tea Huge Success Fine

Despite the snowstorm which raged on Thursday afternoon, the Argyll Chapter I.O.D.E., bridge and tea was reported as a huge success, with proceeds topping last year's results. The Officers' Mess of the Belleville Armouries, arranged with baskets of bronze chrysanthemums, was the delightful setting for the occasion.

Receiving the guests was Mrs. B. O. Donnan, regent of the Chapter, who also invited them to the tea room.

Conveners in the tea room were Mrs. W. C. Morgan, Mrs. E. O. Keeler and Mrs. A. B. Gribble. Pouring tea from four to five o'clock were Mrs R. B. Chadwick and Mrs. E. A. Geen, and from five to six o'clock, Mrs. A. B. Gribble and Mrs. P. H. Wills. Acting as serviteurs were members of the Chapter. The tea table was beautifully arranged, spread with an ivory lace cloth, centred with a silver basket of white 'mums and snapdragons in multi pastel hues, and flanked with tall white tapers in silver candelabra.

In charge of the Homecooking table were Mrs. J. Porritt, Mrs. R. Keel and Mrs. H. Alford, and convening the Fancy Work booth were Mrs. L. Shiels, Mrs. L. K. Scott and Mrs. R. Gibson. At the Fancy Work table there was on display a lap robe made and donated by the Auxiliary group to be given to the Sunnybrook Hospital patients.

Winners of the draw on two chickens were Mrs G. Laughlin and Mrs. R. Best. The draw was made by Mrs. W. N. Ponton.

Conveners of the bridge were Mrs. A. G. Marvell and Mrs. N. C. Wilbur. Prize winners were Mrs. Ross Stiver and Mrs. Bruce Bottum.

Treasurer for the occasion was Mrs. Gordon Miller.

Still out front is the bolero-type dress, especially for teen-age fashions. Black crepe with a dickey of pink lace and a wide hip swath of taffeta, ending in a bow, makes a wearable under-coat model.

Easy way to dress up a frock is with a nice belt. Pigskin studded with huge "fake stones" in square blocks is nice for simple wools or for dressier, yet casual, silks.

THE MIXING BOWL

By ANNE ALLAN

Hydro Home Economist

Hello Homemakers! Back in the days when a ride wasn't a luxury, I used to imagine stories about all the families whose house we passed, by looking at the wash on the clothesline. A miniature pair of overalls flapping in the breeze next to a pair of big ones meant that junior was following his farmer father's footsteps. I could always tell when winter was coming by the bright patchwork quilts hung out to air before they were put on the beds, or company had just left when the big tablecloth and numerous serviettes were out.

Times have changed though and it seems that the laundry job is piece work nowadays. Many wartime fabrics require separate suds and rinsing. Wonder how often you hear, "Mother, you didn't wash out my green dress." However, it may be that Mary did not put her dress out to be washed, so it's wise to have a separate clothes bag for each person, or a clothes hamper.

The first step in washing, after the clothes are collected is to sort them according to color, kind of material, and how dirty they are. You'll have done this many times of course, but do you sort them on a table instead of stooping to the floor—and then unfasten buttons, turn the pockets out, close zippers, brush off any dirt and remove stains.

Over-night soaking is no longer recommended, as the dirt gets saturated in the threads, but if the white things are put in warm, soapy water for 10 to 15 minutes it helps loosen the soil. Wring out the clothes and put in washing machine. It should be filled about two-thirds full. If you have hard water, add water softener to the water before adding soap. (Suds should be two inches high during the whole washing time.)

Have a second lot of soiled articles to go into the suds—a few at a time will remove soil more quickly.

Grandmother still uses the old copper boiler to cook the clothes in but unless there is an illness in the family and the clothes must be sterilized it is not necessary. There are reliable bleaching agents on the market. Follow the instructions to insure the best results with their use.

Rinsing, however, is one of the most important steps in washing. You need plenty of water, and frequent changes, to take out all the suds and soiled water from the clothes. Three rinsings are wonderful if you can do it, because it's the soap curd left in the clothes that helps to give them that tattle-tale grey. Otherwise, two rinsings will do a good job.

Then dunk the shirt collars and cuffs, children's dresses, aprons, curtains and the like in thin starch. This mixture is made by mixing ½ cup of laundry starch with a cup of cold water, then pouring in two quarts of boiling water. Cook for five minutes and add one quart of cold water.

No matter how cold it is, we hang the clothes out carefully so that it'll be easy to take them down for sprinkling. Of course, if towels and sheets can be dried thoroughly, they can be folded and put away without ironing—it's so much less work.

The laundry work is never finished though, until you've washed out the machine in a little soapy water, rinsed it off, wiped off the wringers and released the tension on the rollers, and rolled it away from the water around the drain.

TAKE A TIP

1. To clean jersey cloth: Measure and wash as sweaters are washed; dry on flat surace, stretching into proper size and shape according to measurements.
2. To clean corduroy: Squeeze in soapy water; rinse two or three times in clear water to which a small amount of water softener has been added. Brush after dry.
3. To clean veils: Wash in warm soapy water. While wet, put into shape on a towel. If black, wash in strong solution of black coffee to which gum arabic (2 tsp. to 1 pint) has been added.
4. To clean washable gloves: Wash on hand in soapy lukewarm water. Rinse in clear water. Take off and blow into gloves; then dry at moderate temperature. If gloves become too dry, put on hands and rinse in water containing a small amount of vegetable oil. Stuff with tissue paper.
5. To wash dress shields: Wash in tepid soapy water. Put in a towel and weight down. Don't iron.
6. To clean raincoats: Brush with soapy water. Rinse, pouring water over it. Allow it to dry outside. (Clean on a strong windy day.)
7. To clean feathers, or flowers: Brush with cornstarch or cornmeal if light in color; or plunge up and down in cleaning solvent. Attach to a string and dry outside in a breeze quickly. Brush carefully with an old toothbrush.

FASHION FLASHES

A wealth of hats from which to choose, means that every type, every budget, has an opportunity to do right by itself. Nice for daytime wear is a postillion-type hat of coffee-cream felt, the high crown bound by a broad satin ribbon stencilled to simulate leopard. Two clipped ostrich quills in white complete the design.

Delightful for afternoon-into-evening is a short sleeved, street-length frock of black crepe with all-over design of "tear drop" crystal beads. Crystal bead bands at round neck and sleeves.

Lately we've seen several tailored fur jackets worn with woollen skirts or dresses. A very smart design in black Persian lamb, closely fitted, has a very full peplum cutaway sharply in front with a rippling, "fish tail" back. Sleeves have rippled flounces and wide wrist.

Union Stockyards Taken Over By Ontario Govt.

Toronto, Dec. 1 (CP)—Hon. T. L. Kennedy, Ontario Minister of Agriculture, Thursday announced that the Union Stockyards in Toronto now have been taken over by the Ontario Government and are being operated by the Ontario Stock Yards Board as a public enterprise. Arbitration proceedings were held recently to determine the purchase price and $1,300,000 was the amount agreed on, he added. Details will be announced shortly.

Temporary chairman of the Board, established under legislation passed by the Ontario legislature at its last session when government acquisition of the yards was approved, is W. R. Reek, Deputy Minister of Agriculture.

Balance of the Board of seven is made up of five representatives of the farmers and one of the packing houses and commission men. Frank Fletcher is to be retained as manager, said Mr. Kennedy, adding that "he is Canadian-born and has given excellent service."

The purchase price is to be paid to the Union Stock Yards of Chicago, who have owned the Toronto yards.

Mr. Kennedy attributed the current cattle congestion at the yards to large shipments of old cows, particularly from eastern Ontario and parts of Quebec.

"These should normally have gone on the market during the last two years but were retained as milkers by the farmers," he said. "With the severe drought in eastern Ontario this summer the farmers were forced to put them on the market."

Foreign Workers Advised What To Do When Battle Nears

New York, Dec. 1.— Gen. Eisenhower's spokesman, in a special broadcast reported by CBS Thursday, gave instructions to foreign workers in the Ruhr and Rhineland "on what to do when the Allied armies expel the German army from the area where you work".

The workers were told to go into hiding as the battle approached, leave the town or village where employed but keep off the roads, and if unable to leave to take refuge in an air raid shelter.

"Tomorrow, you will be given instructions on what to do when the Allied armies arrive", the broadcast said.

Says Britain Must Have Regard to Flank On Continent

London, Nov. 30 — (CP)—Leslie Hore-Belisha, former Secretary of State for War, urged the House of Commons today to consider "an offer by Belgium to give us some kind of strategic outposts and economic outposts as well, similar to those we gave the United States in the West Indies."

Speaking in the Throne Speech debate, he asserted Britain must "have regard to our flank on the continent."

The House cheered when he asked:

"Do not our past experiences show that we cannot stand aloof from the organization of western Europe?"

Bringing before the House the proposal for a pact linkink together the western European countries for security purposes, Mr. Hore-Belisha declared "It is sometimes suggested that any advocacy of economic, political or strategic unity in western Europe is a threat to Russia."

"There should be no such thought in our minds and if that thought exists in the minds of the Russians it can easily be removed," he said.

He contended Britain should realise that "America from the First Great War and now Russia from the second have emerged as great economic federations." Britain alone could not attain such size, he said, but the British Empire could.

53 Allied Soldiers In Prisoner Exchange

Pornic, France, Dec. 1. (AP) — Fifty-three Allied soldiers came back from the gloom of a prison cage in the German-held port of St. Nazaire yesterday in a prisoner exchange.

Through a miscalculation one German prisoner too many was brought up from the reserve pool. He was ordered back when the Germans could not produce a man to match him.

"It would be nice if you would make us a present of him", said the German colonel in charge of the exchange, but the only reply was a laugh.

Nineteen of the prisoners exchanged were Americans.

There was no indication of the nationalities of the others.

New York Rangers Provide Startling Upset by Dumping Montreal Canadiens by 7 to 5

Boston Bruins Continue Their Way Upward by Defeating Chicago 7-2

By BOB NIELSEN
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

If New York Rangers lacked inspiration in their campaign for a National Hockey League playoff berth, they should have gained a large measure from their startling 7-5 triumph over the leading Canadiens at Montreal last night.

Victory gave the New Yorkers three major plums: Their second win of the season in 11 games; a clear two-point title to fifth place over Chicago Black Hawks, defeated 7-2 by Boston; and the honor of being the second team to beat the Stanley Cup holders. Toronto Maple Leafs have done it three times.

Another achievement was ringing up four goals in five minutes and 26 seconds without reply, early in the third period. The barrage began with Chuck Scherza's blast on a penalty shot, first successful one of the season.

That proved the break of a tightly-contested match, snapping a 3-3 tie. Walter Atanas' first-period goal for the Blueshirts was nullified by Maurice Richard eight minutes later, and in the second Phil Watson and Hank Goldup matched two scoring efforts by Habitants' Toe Blake.

Watson sank his second at 2:57 of the third period, 18 seconds after Scherza's goal. Ab Demarco followed at 5:40 and Kilby MacDonald did it again at 8:05. Canadiens came back with a little quick-scoring themselves. Rosie Rossignol and Elmer Lach counting within 24 seconds, but Rangers shut the door thereafter.

At Chicago, rookie Ken Smith and veteran Art Jackson scored two goals each to lead Bruins' rout of the Black Hawks. The Rossmen clinched the decision with a furious third-period assault that netted five goals.

Hawks took the lead when Russ Brayshaw scored the only tally of the first period, but Smith's first goal early in the second and Bill Cowley's 10 minutes later gave the Bruins a lead they never surrendered.

Bill Cupolo and Jackson both intercepted passes and scored on rink-length dashes to start the last period avalanche. Lude Check registered the final Chicago goal before Smith and Jackson came back with their second goals. Norm Calladine came out of a pileup before the net to rap the last one by Mike Karakas.

INCREASED MAJOR LEAGUE PLAYER LIMIT DEBATED

Chicago, Dec. 1 (AP)—A post-war "reconversion" program, realizing the squad limits to absorb baseball players returning from the armed forces, will get attention from baseball's major leagues at a joint meeting in New York Dec. 13.

A recommendation by the Steering Committee of both leagues calls for increases in both mid-season and reserve player lists of five and 10 reinstated players, respectively. The limits now are 25 and 40 per squad, with no concession for players reinstated from the National Defence list which number about 500.

The proposal was disclosed yesterday by Leslie M. O'Connor, Secretary-Treasurer of the baseball commissioner's office, who said the ranking item of business will be consideration of the major league agreement and "all other matters" arising from the recent death of Commissioner K. M. Landis.

While attention will be focused on the replacement of Judge Landis, it generally is expected his office will not be filled immediately and that a three-man board of O'Connor and Presidents Will Harridge and Ford Frick of the American and National Leagues, respectively, will be designated to govern baseball indefinitely.

The player limit recommendation proposes that the 25-player restriction now effective from one month after the first game until Sept. 1 may be increased to 30, providing that the five additional men are reinstated National Defence players. The same is true for the 10 extra players who may be added to the 40-player limit in effect between Sept. 1 and mid-May.

Capitals Move To Front Of West Division

By The Canadian Press

Indianapolis Capitals moved to the front of the western division in the American Hockey League last night by shutting out the visiting St. Louis Flyers 2-0, breaking a tie with the idle Pittsburgh Hornets. At Providence, Buffalo Bisons defeated Reds and at Hershey the Bears fought to a 1-1 draw with Cleveland Barons.

It was goalie Harry Lumley's second shutout of the year as Capitals' masterful defence smothered the Flyers' attack. Scorers for Indianapolis were Forbes and Leswick.

George Pargeter starred for Buffalo in the game at Providence, scoring five times. Ken Kilrea notched up one in addition to assisting on four of Pargeter's goals.

At Hershey Harold Cooper drew first blood for the Bears halfway through the second period. Lou Trudel of Cleveland tied the score in the last three minutes of the game.

CASUAL COMMENT by K.J.C.

The following is adapted from Hugh Young: A Surgeon's Autobiography:

Dr. Hugh Hampton Young, eminent surgeon, attended the unveiling of a bust of himself at the University of Virginia. After the ceremony a young woman came up to him.

"I hope you appreciate," she said, "that I have come fifty miles to see your bust unveiled."

We're Embarrassed.

The other weekend Jim Ellis, former playing coach of the Peterborough champion Intermediate "B" hockey team, was in town paying a social visit. "What's doing in hockey circles here?" asked Jim. (That's when our puss turned as red as sails in the sunset.)

The fans have an R.C.A.F. service league, junior hockey has been organized and these heads hope to add a juvenile set-up to their picture, was our explanation.

"Well, sir, out in Peterborough all of the boys are pitching in to coach juvenile teams. We've divided the city into four zones with two intermediate players assuming the running and coaching of each team. I'm teaming up with Eddie Starr, Bun Kingdon and Honey Tompkins have a team to look after, Art Heale and Harding have teamed up and so on. We were hoping we could get an exhibition game with Belleville later in the season, as we will work out with the kids and keep in shape," explained Jim as he intimated there had been a suggestion made to have the Petes take a bye into the Intermediate O.H.A. playdowns. "How about an exhibition game sometime along in January?" asked Jim.

It was at this point we had to admit there wasn't a single Intermediate hockey player left in Belleville and that's a pretty tough admission to have to make from a city that boasts of over 16,000 inhabitants. If the war was to suddenly terminate even Trenton is in a position to ice an intermediate team for possible O.H.A. competition next month.

However, Belleville could do much towards assuring hockey for the boys when they come home from overseas by merely sponsoring and supporting minor league hockey for two years. Out in Peterborough they intend to play a complete minor city hockey league schedule on open air rinks this coming winter. If the kids in Peterboro are sturdy enough to brave the strong wintry blasts to learn the elementary points of hockey Belleville teen aged lads shouldn't be adverse to the same.

Like Old Times.

Yes, it brought back fond memories when we met "Mickey" Forbes in the Hume Arena wrestling dressing room Wednesday night. Mickey is the son of Jackie Forbes, well known and respected wrestling referee of another era. In the old days when Promoter Jack Corocan was bringing such grappling celebrities as Howard Cantonwine, Dr. Ralph Wilson, Mike Romano, Jack Kogut, Frankie Hart and a host of other top-notchers to Belleville Jack Forbes was always on hand as the third man in the ring and a mighty good job he did of calling 'em. After all Jack Forbes knew his way around the wrestling ring having been Canadian middleweight champion before going into the ring arbiting business.

While on the subject of rasslin' Al Dunlop had the usual amount of Dunlop nerve when he accused Ivan Rasputin of desertion the other night. After all it was Bunny who put the finis on the Mad Russian, but good. However, if Dunlop thinks he and Katan can best Watson and Collins no doubt the latter two will be only too pleased to accommodate them.

This and That.

Catcher Bob Swift of the Detroit Tigers, likes the motor city so well he has purchased a home adjacent to Briggs Stadium....Yes and only after one season on the Tiger payroll....Both the Giants and the Dodgers are reported to be bidding for the services of Lou Novikoff of the Chicago Cubs....When the same report popped up last winter a Chicago fan said: "I hope they both get a piece of him, it will serve them right"....George Christensen, who used to play a lot of football for the Detroit Lions, always watches a game from behind the goal posts....He is no different from a lot of grid scribes who want to see what is going on down on the gridiron....Just try that kind of a seat yourself sometime and see if they aren't the "best in the house"....You can watch the plays develop, see who is making the tackles, the flaws in the work of the defensive club and a score of other finer points of the game that you'll never see sitting on the sidelines.

Remember When.

The New York State Athletic Commission ruled five years ago today that a fighter could not hold a boxing title in more than one division at a time. The decision came as the result of confusion when Henry Armstrong of St. Louis held the featherweight and welter division crowns simultaneously.

Toronto, Dec. 1 — (CP)—Johnny Longden, scrappy little Alberta jockey who has met and fed dust to many of the turf's leading riders, says he isn't ready to retire yet for a while. Longden, visiting Calgary and his old home in Taber, Alberta, said he will be back on the track next spring, with a weather eye cocked at the Kentucky Derby, Preakness and other big races. Beneath his saddle, as the other half of the team, will be Count Speed, a full brother of the great Count Fleet.

Nearly Undiluted:

Present day Canadian football in Ontario isn't exactly pre-war stuff, says Al (Brantford Expositor) Rose, but it's "much closer to 100 per cent than some of the commodities one purchases, whether it be liquids or solids, at this time."

Back to Lansdowne:

That's the cry in Vancouver, which doesn't cotton to the "back to the farm" movement so much. There is talk on the coast the racing season at Lansdowne Park may be lengthened to 28 days in 1945. One week of racing was the limit this year as the horses returned to the track despite wartime hazards.

Incidentally:

Making up the standings of the junior hockey loop in the Montreal district is a complicated business. Shawinigan Falls has an entry in the loop, and plays each of the five Montreal teams once, while the city teams play 13 games each. The standings have to be worked out on a percentage basis as a result . . . LESSON NO. 546
By SAM GORDON
The Kibitzer

When your hand is full of things and stuff, go at it gently. Don't get rough. With accepted custom chances are the rightful goal you will not mar.

Keep this hand:

♠ Q 3
♥ A K Q J 10 8 6 2
♣ A 8

A player opened this hand with a bid of two hearts. It was the correct bid. It was the best bid for getting the information he might need from partner.

An opening of two in a suit shows a hand that expects to make a game by itself, orders the bidding kept open to game; asks partner to say at once if he has a sure trick.

With no sure trick, partner's first response is two no-trump. With a sure trick, his first response should be a takeout if he has a biddable suit; an assist if he has support; or three no-trump.

Thus, if partner responds at once with a bid of two no-trump, the opener knows there is no slam. He will be content to stop when a game is reached, instead of going too far.

On the other hand, if partner responds at once with any bid except two no-trump, a slam is worth looking into. Partner's sure trick would certainly make a slam look alive.

No other opening bid would quickly get that sure trick advice from partner. That's why the two heart opening is more desirable than any other in this case. It clicks.

When answering a two bid with no sure trick, why not show a suit if there is one? Or an assist if there is adequate support?

The reason is that the opening force will surely give a chance to show that later, if necessary. Therefore, the first response is reserved for use as a slam signal; slam encourager or discourager.

Opener then knows whether he must confine future information within the bounds of a game. Or to go places and do big things.

The War Today—
Battle of Cologne Plain Bids Fair To Be One of Greatest Struggles

By DEWITT MACKENZIE
(Associated Press War Analyst)

The fierceness of the fighting over the winter-logged terrain of the northern battle-front opposite the Rhineland lends particular point to War Secretary Stimson's blunt and unadorned statement that Gen. Eisenhower had to delay his general offensive until enough artillery ammunition accumulated.

The developing battle of the Cologne plain is a grim business. It bids fair to be one of the toughest, most saguinary engagements of the war—for it's the final phase of Armagedon. The expenditure of life and material on both sides will be great.

Artillery's Part.

Heavy artillery plays an important role in this bloody crisis. The big fellows, as the Secretary points out, are used not only to destroy the enemy but to smash his fortifications. If these enemy strongholds weren't reduced by high explosive they would have to be stormed by the infantry at terrible cost in life.

The specific reason for Eisenhower's need of heavy ammunition lies in the much-debated Siegfried Line. Don't let anybody tell you that this string of strongholds, running from 10 to 30 miles in depth, isn't one of the most formidable defences ever created. It's a veritable labyrinth of death. This is the German outer crust which the Allies have to crack in order to get at the heart of Germany.

Siegfried Line.

The Siegfried Line is a terrible, ingenious trap. There is, of course, no solid line of fortifications but the defences are staggered, like the trees of a dense forest. The Nazi heavy artillery is as thoroughly concealed as possible and strongly supported with concrete. Between batteries is a field of concrete redoubts armed with light cannon and machine-guns which can sweep a wide arc of ground in front of them.

It doesn't take much imagination to see what happens if you send infantry in against such a combination in an effort to take a strong point by storm. Eisenhower turned thumbs down on any attempt to break this line with troops before the defences had been reduced by his big guns.

AN APPLE FOR EVE

By Kathleen Norris

CHAPTER 3

Her hair was jeweled, her cheeks glowing when she ran up the red brick steps of the library and dropped into a leather-backed chair at the long magazine table. Miss Violet nodded to her from the desk with a flash of strong spectacles. Loveday was early, but Larry was early too; not one full moment had passed, and she was still among the advertisementts of the current copy of Vogue, when with a rush of fresh air the brown coat had slipped into the chair nearest her, Larry's big wet hand was over her own, and she heard the voice that made her heart beat with such sudden terror and delight.

Immediately they were out in the streets again.

"Let's walk," he had whispered. "I want to talk to you!"

"Let's walk to the graveyard. It's really a lovely walk, especially in the rain," Loveday said. "If you have time?"

"I have plenty of time. I've resigned!" he answered cheerfully. "No I wasn't fired," he said. "But I had a notion they weren't any too crazy about me. And then I got this offer"--he pulled a letter from his pocket--"to go to Florida and learn to fly airplanes," he said.

"Florida!" Her face was blank with dismay.

"Yep. There's a swell aviation school down there near Pensacola, and they teach you all about flying --an' you know--how to build airplanes. I got a friend--he's congressman from New York--and he's agreed to pay my tuition, and a guy I know is driving back, and he's promised to take me along. Here." Larry said with a contemptuous jerk of his head backward toward the town they were leaving behind them, "I'd never get anywhere. Someone's slated for every promotion here for the next ten years. But gosh," he ended with a boyish note of wistfulness in his voice, "I'd like to get into that business."

"Well sure. But this," he amended it hastily after a glance at her troubled face. "This is only factory stuff. Finding out how they're made. Big business!"

"I know, big business," she said, a shadow on her face that was spattered with rain and glowing from the brisk exercise. "War Business."

"Listen," he said, I don't go unless you promise to marry me."

"Oh," Loveday said vaguely swallowing. A man was actually saying these words to her, but they did not sound real. "You mean--be engaged?" she said confusedly.

"I mean promise. Look," he began eagerly. "I'm there a few weeks on probation, see? I make good. Then they start me at thirty a week."

"Thirty dollars a week. That's good," Loveday said, surprised.

"That's nothing. Lots of those fellers there are getting sixty a week."

"That's more than two hundred and fifty dollars a month! That's more than we have! Mother gets a check for two hundred from Mr. St. George every month, and that's all we have," Loveday said, properly impressed.

"I thought you had a couple of servants?"

"Wing Foo and Annie Lum? They get only twenty-five. But he raises chickens and vegetables, and they have four boys who live there," Loveday explained. "It isn't exactly the usual thing. It's home for them. Wing Foo's been with the family for forty years."

"Well, we'd be able to manage," Larry said, returning to the personal problem. I'd rent a little place and throw some furniture into it, and then you could come along and we'd be married and get started."

His arm was about her; he was drawing her closely to him, her laughing eyes and her dewy hair, her rain-wet coat and soft warm cheek and her fast-beating heart.

"Promise," his lips said hungrily, close to her ear.

"Oh, but Larry--are you sure?"

"Am I sure? It's you. Are you sure?"

"As sure," she said breathlessly, drawing away from him to look into his eyes, "as I have to be!"

"But you mean that, darling?" he asked anxiously.

"Yes, I mean it. But couldn't you --would you--hadn't you better come up to the house and see Mother and meet my grandmother? They'd--they'll be so hurt if I just tell them I'm going to mary someone they don't know."

"But of course I'll come! I'll come up tomorrow before I go."

"You don't go tomorrow!"

"Late afternoon. Link Carey is driving all the way down to San Diego and he'll drop me off at Bakersfield. I've got to get some things--my other coat and my camera and so on. And I'll go on my way Friday or Saturday."

"Oh, Larry!" It took her breath away.

"Just as soon as they move me up to--say, thirty-five a week," he said in a business like tone as they turned toward the village again. "I'll wire you. From the beginning I'll be looking around for some little place that would suit us; we won't be fussy. . . . "

Her face was radiant. To think of her first little home as a wife!

"You'll love it!" he was saying.

"Oh, I will love it! . . Larry, have you ever been in Florida?"

"Yes; years ago, with my uncle."

Her heart sank a little. It sounded a little too impressive. They must be rich, the Ingersolls. They might not be enthusiastic about welcoming an obscure daughter-in-law without a penny.

"How much does it cost to get to Florida?" she asked.

"I don't know exactly. A couple of hundred, maybe. Would that cramp your style?"

She laughed at the phraseology. They went into Singers' brightly lighted candy store and found a a table in a dim curved ingle and ordered chocolate malted milks.

"You promise me you'll wait, Loveday?"

"I promise."

"No matter if it takes six months. No matter if it takes a year?"

"No matter how long it takes."

"I don't believe anyone could spoil you," he said adoringly. "Now listen, it's half-past five."

"It isn't!"

"It is! I'll get my car and run you home. And can I come in and meet your mother and grandmother and give them some idea of what's going on?"

They went in at the side entrance. Loveday pushed open the dining-room door, and Larry saw the table set for three, with candlesticks and tall goblets of fine old chased silver. Loveday disappeared into the spacious gloom of the great shadowy house; an old Chinese woman peeped in, said something amiable to him, presently brought him a glass of tomato juice on a silver tray. Larry stood waiting, waiting.

"Larry" she said, catching strongly at his arm. "It's my mother! She fell--she was with my grandmother, talking--she went to her room only a few minutes ago--"

Her hand was locked in his big, hard, cold one as they raced upstairs. A warm bar of soft light lay across the upper hall from the door of old Mrs. Gurney's room. Larry saw in the in the doorway the tall figure in its plain Quaker dress.

"Loveday, is thee in any trouble, child? What has happened?"

When Martha Gurney was established comfortably in a smooth white bed and the doctor had gone Loveday and her grandmother and Larry had a few whispered moments together in the old woman's room. Then Loveday went back to her mother's room and sat there silently watching the strange silent woman who lay so still in the bed. After a while she came into the hall, where Larry was sitting, and told him to go home.

"Let me stay here, Loveday. You might need me."

"No." She leaned against him wearily. It was infinite comfort to feel his arms about her. "No, it's only waiting now," she said.

"Don't break down, Loveday. It's so wonderful to have you so strong."

"I can't tell whether I'm going to break down or not. I'm just--dazed."

"If I ask the old Chink to send you up some soup or tea or something would you eat it?"

"Why--why, yes, I think so. It's--after eight, isn't it?"

He went downstairs, to return with a tray. They put it on a table in the hall and shared the soup and toast.

"Annie Lum--or whatever her name is--says your grandmother had some tea around six."

"My grandmother's in there with Mother now. Mother opened her eyes a few minutes ago and spoke to us both. She whispered, 'Who is the boy?' and I said, 'The boy I told Granny about,' and she said, 'Tell him to take good care of you.'"

Larry's eyes came up to hers solemnly in the strange dim lights and shadows of the great hallway. He cleared his throat.

"That's the--that's the idea," he said.

A great many old friends came to the Gurney house for the double funeral. It was rainy, early-February weather; the big rooms were dark even when lights were lighted; shadows seemed to creep out of corners, and odors of dampness and decay were everywhere.

Some of the callers Loveday remembered; some were complete strangers. They were all gentle and sympathetic with her. Kindly women in black kissed her; the smell of their wet woolen coats and the suffocating sweet odor of flowers would always be associated for her with these strange solemn days.

"Thee'll not stay here alone in this great place, child?"

"Ah, thee'll be well placed there."

Larry Ingersoll left for his new job the day before the funerals, and Loveday strangely missed him. All these people were being so kind; the kitchen was filled with jars of soup and sheets of biscuits and roasted chickens and everything else that warmhearted housewives could think of as possibly being needed by that poor little Gurney girl, but she seemed to feel hunger no more than grief. She floated upon a wave of strange calm; it was as if she were watching some other girl go through all these scenes.

The St. Georges she knew. They all looked alike, and they all looked as they had in her childhood. Warren St. George was perhaps fifty-seven or eight, squarely built, short, gray. His manner to Loveday was cheerful, businesslike, affectionate. She had not had even the first of many talks with him before she knew that his heart was aching with concern for her.

"I was thinking," Warren St. George said to her, when on the morning of the third day the time came to lay her mother and grandmother in the old cemetery of Indian Hill, "that we will be on our way this afternoon, Loveday, say about four, and take you straight to 'Aunt Laura.' You used to call my wife that when you were small, and I know she'd love to have you call her that now. I don't like the idea of your being alone in this house. What do you think?"

"I think--whatever you do, Mr. St. George," said Loveday's deep voice with a new note of gravity in it.

"You won't mind a fifty-mile drive all the way to San Francisco after--everything?"

"No. No, I'll be glad to get away. Annie'll pack my things and send them after me. Mr. St. George---" Loveday began and stopped.

"Go ahead," His look was fatherly and encouraging.

"That young Lawrence Ingersoll you met yesterday. We're engaged to be married as soon as he gets his job. I wanted you to know."

"Ah?" he said noncommittally. She sensed somehow that he was not quite pleased. "But you're only twenty," he went on kindly, "and I shall have tremendous responsibilities for whatever you do for the next twelve months."

"We thought perhaps we could get married in June," the girl said steadily. For a second she caught his gravely considering look, comprehended perfectly the one that succeeded it, that said, "Ah, I mustn't bother the poor child now."

"I hope you'll feel," he said aloud, "that you're coming to friends who only want you to be happy, to have your life go in the way your dear mother and grandmother would have wished. It's been a great shock to you, of course, the two deaths coming within a few hours of each other. But your grandmother never would have wanted a long, lingering illness, Loveday, and she had a good life."

"Oh, I know, I feel that! I felt it when I went in to wake her," Loveday said. "In the morning, Wedesday--was that only day before yesterday! She looked so peaceful, asleep with her hand under her cheek, the way she always slept, that I hated to tell her that Mother--Mother was gone---"

She stopped, choked. Warren St. George did not speak.

"You won't--you won't ask me not to marry Larry?" Loveday said after a moment, turning to face him again. The man answered her seriously.

"No my dear. Not if you are sure that your happiness lies that way."

The hours went on somehow: somehow she moved through them. The crowds were gone now; Fanny and Rodney St. George were in the hall; Wing Foo, his eyes red, came out to help with the closing of doors and carrying of bags. Fanny and Loveday got into the back of the waiting car; Rodney drove, and his father sat beside him on the front seat.

"You're going to be the greatest blessing to my mother," Fanny presently began easily. "I'm getting married in March---"

"You are?" The first smile that had lighted Loveday's face for days was turned upon the other girl. "Oh, who to?"

TORONTO STOCK EXCHANGE

Toronto, Dec. 1 —(CP)— The mining groups posted small gains and industrials weakened narrowly this afternoon on Toronto Exchange. Volume was small at 247,000 shares.

Dominion Stores advanced ⅜ to a new high, Canners B firmed ½ and Dominion Woollens set a new high at 6⅜, up ⅛.

Mild weakness was shown in golds by Buffalo-Ankerite, Wright-Hargreaves, San Antonio, West Malartic and others. Two juniors, Louvicourt and, East Sullivan, traded actively on gains of about 6 cents.

Base metal issues held steady.

WALL ST.

New York, Dec. 1 — (AP)—Specialties, including sugars, took over rising leadership in today's stock market while many leaders still were a bit oppressed by further profit cashing on the recent swing. While isolated gains running to 3 points or so were in evidence near the 4th hour, losers were numerous. Dealings were under those of yesterday.

At tops for 1944 were United Corp. Pfd, U. S. Realty, American Sugar and Preferreds of Electric Power and Light. In front most of the session were Cuban-American Sugar, Manati Sugar, American Telephone, Montgomery Ward, Northern Pacific and Westinghouse. Canadian stocks were unchanged to fractionally higher.

HOGS

Toronto, Dec. 1—(CP)—Bacon-hog prices were unchanged at markets reporting early today. Dressed, Grade A, Brantford $17.15 plus transportation; delivered, Hamilton, London $17.50, Hull, Barrie $17.40; Stratford, to farmers $17.50, to truckers $17.65.

19 AIR MEMBERS KILLED

Tuscon, Ariz., Dec. 1 —(AP)— Crashing and exploding two B24 bombers presumably carried 19 crew members to their death yesterday when they collided shortly after taking off on a training flight. An official announcement said "the lives of all members of both crews were presumably lost."

"DR. KILDARE" IN ACTION ON LEYTE

Former Film Star Lew Ayres, whose stand against the bearing of arms aroused a nation-wide controversy when he was first drafted, is pictured in his healing role as a medical orderly with the Allied forces on Leyte Island, in the Philippines. Cast in a role similar to that of the popular "Dr. Kildare" motion pictures in which he starred, he treats the foot of a Filipino native.

Chicago Spotlight

By C. R. BLACKBURN
(CP Staff Writer)

Chicago, Dec. 1 — (CP)—Close to 1,000,000 words have been telegraphed from the Stevens Hotel by reporters covering the International Civil Aviation Conference and the volume will go well over that figure before it is over.

Much of this wordage is complicated detail of formulae proposed by various delegations to meet the problems of international control of world routes, understandable only to experts.

A great deal of the total has been cabled to the United Kingdom and Russia. Two representatives of Tass, the Soviet news agency, send long accounts each day although the Russian delegation was recalled on the eve of the conference Nov. 1, and the Soviet is not represented.

But Chicago, which calls itself, and hopes to be recognized as, the aviation centre of the world, does not seem to be much interested.

The Sun, News, Herald-American and Tribune, all big dailies printing 20 to 30 or more pages, dismiss the conference with quarter-column stories or smaller and often run editorials that do not even mention it.

And a city of this size, crowded with war heroes, stage, screen and radio celebrities and other prominent figures, scarcely notices the close to 1,000 strangers the aviation conference brought here from 54 counties.

Capsule Comment:

Jim Strebig, Associated Press aviation editor, was with a party visiting Don McNeil's breakfast club program, a popular radio feature, and Don asked him to say how the air conference was going. "Well," Jim said, "I don't know about the airplane but the air conference is here to stay."

Canadian Prestige High: Canada probably never was so important at an international gathering as at this conference where H. J. Symington, delegation leader, and his associates, have worked night and day to bring the United Kingdom and United States delegations together. The name of Canada is most frequently mentioned of all the countries apart from the Anglo-American and whatever the outcome the conference will reflect credit on the Dominion and its representatives.

MORALE UNSHAKEN

Sherbrooke, Que., Dec. 1 —(CP) —Despite their long, gruelling experience of battle, the morale of the people of Britain is "absolutely unshaken," Rt. Hon. Malcolm MacDonald, United Kingdom High Commissioner to Canada, said last night at a meeting of the Sherbrooke Chamber of Commerce.

FIGHT WAS BREWING

Los Angeles, Nov. 30 — (AP)—A hint that the savage fight between actor Jon Hall and bandleader Tommy Dorsey may have been brewing for several hours before they came to grips in Tommy's apartment Aug. 5 was made yesterday in the trial of the Dorseys and their friend, Allen Smiley, for felonous assault.

CLOSE JAIL AT GORE BAY

Toronto, Dec. 1—(CP)—Criminal activity has fallen to such a low point in the district of Manitoulin that the Ontario government has decided to close the jail at Gore Bay. In future, the Provincial Secretary's Department said yesterday, prisoners will be sent to the district jail at Sudbury.

London —(CP)— A mail-order system has been introduced to provide men discharged from hospitals outside London with the civilian clothing provided by the government.

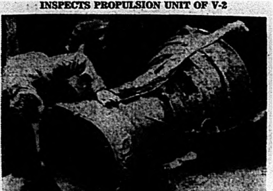
FRANKIE GIVES CLOTHES FOR "RE-MAKE"

Canadian bobby-sockers are literally getting the clothes off the back of swoon-crooner Frank Sinatra. In Montreal recently, Frankie gave one of his swoon-suits to the Re-Make centres operated by the Canadian Wartime Prices and Trade Board's consumer branch . . . It will be made-over into a smart suit for a high school girl and sent across Canada with the complete Re-Make revue wardrobe which shows the younger set how they can save material by making old garments into new. Here a pretty bobby-socker tries the coat on for a fit and receives smiling approval from Sinatra.

INSPECTS PROPULSION UNIT OF V-2



Bmdr. L. Snell of Orillia, Ont., is peeking inside the propulsion unit of a V-2 rocket bomb that landed somewhere in the south of England recently. The jets that drive the rocket are located in this part of the projectile. Some observers describe the rocket bomb as "resembling a light pole" or a lamp post. So far no one in Britain has seen a complete one.

Little Benny's Note Book

We were eating supper exter early on account of ma wanting to be all ready when Mr. and Mrs. Hews came to play bridge, and ma said to pop, I do hope you'll be sensible with your bidding for land sakes tonight, William, and not let your optimism carry you to the point of Pollyanna. The Hewses always seem to inspire you to your worst efforts. I remember we were playing with them the time you made your classic bid of 3 diamonds with nothing to base it on but six to the jack and a lonely outside ace. That was several months ago but it's still green in my memory, she said.

By gollies that reminds me, pop said. Benny must be punished. He's got to go without dizzert tonight, he said, and I said, Aw gosh, pop, why? G roosalem we've got chocklit layer cake for tonight. Good night, pop, I mean G wizzickers what's a matter, I mean what did I do? I said.

I'll tell you what you did, pop said. You worried your mother and me out of a night's sleep, he said, and ma said, My goodness William what was that, I mean when was that?

It was when he yelled his fool head off for half an hour without stopping, and we were sure there was a pin sticking in him, and here there wasn't a blessed thing wrong with him except a normal attack of colick, pop said, and ma said, William Potts are you sitting there and alluding to something that happened when Benny was infant?

Well, why not? pop said, I was only an infant myself, comparatively speaking, when I made that bum bid. Since then I've grown into a mental giant as far as bridge is concerned, he said.

The result being when Nora brought in the chocklit layer cake I made a special effort and ate 3 slices just out of pure relief.

GERMANS REPORT BUDAPEST WITHDRAWAL AMERICANS BATTLE INTO ROER R. BASTION

Reds Head Onto Plain Stretching To Austrian Border

Moscow, Dec. 2 (AP)—Russian troops, crossing the Mecsek mountains southwest of Budapest, headed today onto a plain stretching to the border of Austria 80 miles away.

In this expansion of Marshal Feodor I. Tolbukhin's offensive west of the Danube, the 3rd Ukrainian army overran more than 60 towns and villages and increased its pressure on the Hungarian capital from the rear. The Russians had beaten down hastily summoned German reinforcements.

To meet the Russian threat, Pest was being evacuated, the German radio announced. Pest is the major part of Budapest and lies on the east side of the Danube.

The Berlin broadcast said bridges were clogged with both military and civilian traffic but that the Germans were preparing for all-out resistance in Buda on the west bank of the Danube.

Tolbukhin's troops basing their drive from the captured Hungarian industrial centre of Pecs, punched into German defences in two directions yesterday.

Stronghold Outflanked.

Northward his forces pressed to the outskirts of Szekszard, 75 miles south of Budapest, and already had this stronghold outflanked although there was evidence the Germans intended to make a bitter stand in the town itself.

Other units hammered northwestward to Lake Balaton, capturing the fortified highway junction of Sasd and the village of Csikostottos on the Haber canal, 18 miles north of Pecs and 27 miles from the lake.

Force Ondava River.

While this climactic battle raged in southern Hungary, Col. Gen. Ivan Petrov's 4th Ukrainian army arriving westward through Czechoslovakia, forced the Ondava river on a 30-mile front and probed within 30 miles of the important railway and highway centre of Kassa (Kosice.)

Petrov's advance across the swollen Ondava in the midst of a slushy snowstorm bagged 3,000 prisoners in one day's fighting and severed the railway between Secovce and Satoraljaujhely by seizing Trebisov and Upor.

Sizable Majority Is Expected Confidence Vote

By D'ARCY O'DONNELL
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Ottawa, Dec. 2 (CP) — While parliament stood adjourned today for the weekend, attention turned from debate on reinforcements to conjecturing on how large a majority Prime Minister Mackenzie King's government will obtain on the vote of confidence motion.

There appeared little doubt even among opposition members that the government had survived the crisis and would be supported by a sizable majority when the confidence vote is taken, possibly on Wednesday. Some government supporters conjectured that the majority would range anywhere from 40 to close to 100.

Col. J. L. Ralston, who resigned as Defence Minister when the cabinet, certain ministers excepted, declined to accept his proposal to send Canada's 68,000 home defence troops overseas, has already announced his decision to support the government.

He said that if he had been in the cabinet last week when it passed an order-in-council making 16,000 of the draftees available for overseas service he would not have resigned, but he would have objected to the "piece-meal" method of supplying reinforcements.

Navy Minister Macdonald, Finance Minister Ilsley, Resources Minister Gibson, who were reported as being among those who supported Col. Ralston's stand in the cabinet, were to be satisfied with the order-in-council.

No cabinet minister has participated in the debate as yet. However, they could hardly vote against the government without first resigning. If they voted against the government while holding their portfolios they would literally be voting against themselves.

HUNS SAY LINDEEN RECAPTURED

London, Dec. 2 (CP)—A Berlin broadcast asserted the Germans had recaptured the town of Lindern, 4 1-2 miles northeast of Geilenkirchen. Today's Allied communique, however declared a German counter-attack at Lindern had been repulsed.

The broadcast described the battle before Cologne as a death mill, and said "in most sections of the Aachen front 30,000 to 60,000 soldiers are facing each other on every kilometre (5-8 of a mile) of the front".

POLES OPEN OFFENSIVE

New York, Dec. 2 (CP)—The Polish Telegraph Agency reported today in a London dispatch that strong Polish home army detachments have opened a wide offensive in the rear of German troops facing the Red army in the Carpathian hills, with hundreds of Germans reported killed and wounded and the destruction of bridges being used by the Germans fleeing from Soviet forces.

Six Ministers Of Greek Cabinet Have Resigned

Athens, Dec. 2. (AP) — All six Cabinet ministers belonging to the Left Wing E. A. M. party resigned early today in the dispute over disbanding Greek guerrillas.

John Zevgos, Communist minister of Agriculture, protested what he called the "unilateral decisions" of Maj.-Gen. Ronald Mackenzie Scobie, British commander of Allied troops in Greece.

Gen. Scobie was quoted by the Athens radio as saying he would "stand by the side" of the "present constitutional government" headed by Premier George Papandreou until it had a national army and was able to hold "free elections".

The broadcast said Scobie made his statement after informing the Greek people by pamphlets dropped by British aircraft that he had "undertaken to carry out" the premier's order on guerrilla demobilization.

The general was quoted as saying that he was "convinced that in many parts of Greece freedom of the people does not exist. There is still terrorism and deception. All this delays the distribution of food as well as general relief coming from Allied governments".

CHEFANG, JAP-HELD TOWN ON BURMA ROAD, CAPTURED

Only 24 Miles of Highway in China Remains in Japanese Hands

Chungking, Dec. 2 —(AP)— Chefang, next to the last Japanese-held town on the Burma Road in China, has been captured by Chinese forces, the Chinese High Command announced today.

Planes of the 14th Air Force assisted Chinese detachments in the seizure of the town, which left only about 24 miles of the Burma Road to be taken for assault upon the border city of Wanting.

Resistance was scant. Most of the defenders had withdrawn before the increasing pressure. As they retreated they set fire to nearby villages and bridges to delay pursuit.

Occupation of Chefang in the Yunnan Province offensive came at the end of a 12-day push after the capture of Mangshih Nov. 19.

Meanwhile, the Kweichow provincial government ordered evacuation of all its non-essential employees from the capital of Kweiyang, threatened by a Japanese offensive.

Many of the city's 300,000 inhabitants and thousands of refugees who had taken brief sanctuary there from other danger zones also were leaving.

Canadians Faced Toughest Fight In Holland

Ottawa, Dec. 2. (CP)—Canadians in Holland faced the toughest fight they have experienced yet and the toughest they are likely to face, Alan Randal, who has just returned to Canada after nearly three years overseas as news editor of the London Bureau of The Canadian Press and its war correspondent in Belgium and Holland, said last night.

"The Canadians did a splendid job in cleaning up the Scheldt Estuary", he said. "On the Antwerp-Turnhout Canal to the east of Antwerp, shells were on a rationed basis because of the 500-mile supply line from French ports.

"The opening of Antwerp as a port has overcome that and put us in a position to hurl everything we have against the Nazis. That was a job done by Canadians that will be the key to the fighting ahead.

"We are in a much more favorable position than ever before and it is only a matter of time, but the German troops are still good. There is nothing rougher and tougher than the Huns fighting defensively. Our casualties were heavy, the conditions deplorable and we were fighting against picked Germans, but the Canadians finished that job".

After a furlough Randal will go to Toronto as general night editor in charge of The Canadian Press report to morning newspapers throughout Canada. He returned from Britain by a 15-day corvette trip.

Bulk of Canadian Army Massed In Allied Nijmegen Bridgehead

London, Dec. 2 — (CP-Reuter)— With the bulk of the 1st Canadian Army massed in the Allied Nijmegen bridgehead, Field Marshal Montgomery's expected attack may be centred there, Capt. Ludwig Sertorius, military commentator of the German Transocean agency, said today.

Sertorius said the bulk of Gen. Crerar's army had been shifted "far to the east," and made references to the Canadians being relieved by British troops.

It was not clear whether the commentator was referring to a shift bringing the Canadians east into the Nijmegen salient after their clean-up of the Schelde campaign, or to some subsequent move.

He said the left wing of the British 2nd Army could be assumed to be assembled in the Gennep area and the right wing northwest of Geilenkirchen.

Recent front dispatches have reported that elements of the 1st Canadian Army have been engaged at the northern end of the western front, fighting on German soil just east of Nijmegen in the Netherlands, and in the area of the De Wyler Forest.

There has been no recent report of specific actions fought by the Canadians, although it was believed they were engaged in routine patrol activity.

Crisis Facing Govt. Appears To Have Run Its Course

By D'ARCY O'DONNELL
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Ottawa, Dec. 2 — (CP) — The House of Parliament stood adjourned today and the crisis which beset the government in mid-October appeared to have run its course.

Developments yesterday indicated that there would be no mass break of Quebec Liberals from government benches over the conscription issue, and consequently the administration would have considerable support on the forthcoming vote of confidence motion.

Joseph Jean (L-Montreal Mercier) opened the way for Quebec Liberals and other anti-conscriptionists to express their opposition to conscription without voting against the government on the main motion.

He moved an amendment urging that general service personnel in Canada and volunteers overseas be used to the best advantage to provide reinforcements without resorting to conscription.

Mr. Jean, who disclosed after moving the amendment that he had resigned as parliamentary assistant to Justice Minister St. Laurent, said conscription was not the issue before the House. Conscription was an accomplished fact and the question to be decided by the House was whether the present government was to remain in office or be replaced by another.

Want Amendment Accepted.

He knew there were many members in the House who still favored the voluntary system of enlistment and he asked that this amendment be accepted so that through it they could express their opposition to conscription.

Prime Minister Mackenzie King said he had accepted Mr. Jean's resignation because the member had wished to be relieved from duty so that he might stand out as doing something without fear or favor in any direction.

Replying to Gordon Graydon, Progressive Conservative House Leader, who asked if Mr. Jean had resigned, Mr. King replied that he had. However, he was not at all sure that a parliamentary assistant should resign simply because he moved an amendment to a government motion. He felt a parliamentary assistant should be as free as any member or cabinet minister.

Termed Halfway Measure.

Mr. Gray termed the government's overseas reinforcement policy "a halfway measure" but said he would support the government in its motion of confidence.

Mr. Gray said he had urged action to assure adequate reinforcements immediately after the casualties at Dieppe in 1943.

"When I find that the country is still to be saddled with two armies—one voluntary for service anywhere, another conscripted which may or may not be used—I must in justice to my constituents do my duty as I see it and with, I believe, their full support protest against this halfway measure," Mr. Gray said.

"There is no halfway house to victory. There must not be any halfway house in our effort now that this step has been taken."

Mr. Gray said he agreed with Prime Minister Mackenzie King that conscription was not an issue in the debate but it was true only in a broad sense. Conscription would continue to be an issue so long as Defence Minister McNaughton "clings tenaciously to the voluntary system."

Critical of Minister.

"Surely the Minister of Defence must realize that we have exhausted the alphabet in our endeavors to secure volunteers from the N.R.M.A.", he said.

"By that I mean from A—appeals to manhood—to Z—Zombie characterization—and without success. If you want us make the order cover any or all is their cry. By what magic does the Minister feel he can succeed where others failed."

Once the policy of conscription was settled it became only a matter of fair and equal application to prove it the most democratic system yet evolved.

"If we had taken a firm resolute stand on this issue, not the timid one suggested by the Minister of National Defence by which the draftee can proclaim himself a volunteer up to the moment he crosses the limits of our territorial waters, then we as members of parliament would have regained some of the respect we have lost over the years of hesitation and indecision," he continued. "As it stands now we are leaving our next step in doubt, a dangerous situation."

Fulfilled Duty

Mr. White said he had advocated conscription as far back as 1941. He said the men in the front line had "long past fulfilled their duty to Canada." They should be brought home and their places should be taken by men from the N.R.M.A.

Mr. White said the procedure in the House was ridiculous. There was no need of a vote of confidence to permit the government to enforce an order-in-council under a Conscription Act passed two years ago.

"I would like to ask when has it become the duty of the members of the opposition or the general public to raise recruits for the Canadian army," said Mr. White. "The raising of recruits is the sole and complete responsibility of the Minister of National Defence and the government."

Distribute Speech.

It came with poor grace from the Prime Minister to complain that the voluntary system failed because of lack of co-operation from the opposition and the press.

"Why should 16,000 men be discriminated against?" Mr. White asked. "I can not blame them for protesting."

"The order-in-council was only a half-way measure."

The Wartime Information Board, at public expense, had distributed 87,000 copies of Mr. King's recent radio address on the reinforcement question. In fairness, the Board should distribute 87,000 copies of the speech made by Col. J. L. Ralston, former Defence Minister, in the Commons Wednesday.

He believed that all home defence troops should be made available for service anywhere. He also believed that before the House adjourned cabinet should state publicly whether they are satisfied or not with the government's order-in-council.

Proposes New Government

Col. Ross said members of the House no longer had any confidence in the Prime Minister. They had confidence in only a few of the cabinet ministers. He believed that democracy should be allowed to function, and that it would be possible to form another government without an election. He proposed to suggest such a government.

The alternative to the Prime Minister was John Bracken, Progressive Conservative National leader, who has not a seat in the House. Mr. Bracken had in the House "at least six members who are stronger than the average of members of the present cabinet," said Col. Ross.

"He has, also, Charles P. McTague, who recently resigned from the Bench; Henry Borden, who was co-ordinator of controls in the Department of Munitions and Supply; James Macdonnell who has great experience in finance."

"There are many others. I am satisfied Mr. Bracken can obtain the services of strong and able citizens who have refused posts under the present Prime Minister."

To Support Motion

Mr. Mayhew said he would support the government. He had told officials in his constituency as early as last January that he would support conscription if it came before the House.

Mr. Mayhew read a message from a soldier member, Major Alan Chambers (L-Nanaimo). Major Chambers, serving in France, said if the only trained men available for reinforcements were not willing to go overseas they should be sent anyway.

Mr. Church said he believed that between 50,000 and 75,000 men would be needed overseas before next Easter. He felt that all home defence troops should be made available for service anywhere. Men with long service overseas should be brought home to stay.

AMERICAN IDEAS MAYPREDOMINATE AT AIR PARLEY

Three General Agreements Expected to Materialize as Conference Concludes

By C. R. BLACKBURN
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Chicago, Dec. 2. (CP)— American ideas represented at the International Civil Aviation Conference seemed headed for success today as delegates from 54 countries drove toward a wind-up expected early next week.

Last hopes of bringing the Anglo-American delegations into accord on the question of air freedoms faded at a plenary session yesterday.

It now is expected the conference, which opened Nov. 1, will have the following general results:

1.—Agreement on a draft convention setting up a permanent international air organization with limited authority but carrying annexes on technical operating standards for navigation and airports.

2.—Agreement on an interim organization patterned exactly on the lines of the permanent set-up to carry on until the permanent convention becomes operative.

3. Agreement by those countries accepting the United States point of view to provide to signing states the five freedoms of the air—open competition for global air routes. Non-signers would go on relying on Bi-lateral agreement as heretofore.

The much discussed "four freedoms," set forth in the original Canadian plan and opposed by none, are missing from the proposed draft convention because of the dispute that arose between the British and American delegations when the latter proposed the fifth freedom.

The original four freedoms gave privilege of innocent flight over signatory states, privilege of landing for non-traffic purposes, privilege to set down in one country passengers from the aircraft's home country, and privilege to pick up return passengers for the aircraft's home country.

The United States introduced the fifth freedom—privilege to pick up and set down intermediate traffic in states lying between the termini of global routes.

NOW ANOTHER "V" WEAPON

London, Dec. 2 (CP) — Nazi Labor Chief Albert Speer was quoted today as saying the third V-weapon —V-3—would be ready for firing against New York by the end of December.

The London Daily Mail in a Stockholm dispatch said Speer made the statement before the German war production board. No intimation was given as to the nature of V-3, if such a weapon had been perfected.

Britain's Home Guard of 2,000,000 To Disband After 4½ Years Service

By ALLAN NICKLESON
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

London, Dec. 2 —(CP)— The long alert has ended for the 2,000,000 men of Britain's Home Guard.

Tomorrow the streets of cities and towns, villages and hamlets, the length and breadth of this island will resound to the tread of their last parade. The Home Guard Britain's bulwark against invasion for 4½ years, has been stood down.

Officially the Home Guard has been at ease since a month ago, but the stand-down, involving the concentration of weapons and other equipment, is still in progress and this Sunday was set aside for the final formal parades. And this Sunday, too, was chosen for the King's broadcast to these men who served their country so well.

The Home Guard has not been demobilized and all members are liable to recall in the event of an emergency; but with Germany's own home guards now in the battle line few people expect tomorrow's parades to be repeated until the final victory march.

A long association through some of the tensest years in Britain's history ended with the standing down of the Home Guard. It began one evening in that dark May of 1940 when Anthony Eden, then Secretary of State for War, broadcast an appeal for "large numbers of men in Great Britain between the ages of 17 and 60 to come forward now and offer their services."

Two weeks later the Home Guard, then known as Local Defence Volunteers, numbered 500,000 men. That figure was doubled in two months, trebled in four and since then has risen close to the 2,000,000 mark.

Through their own strength the Home Guard, whom Prime Minister Churchill once described as "just as much soldiers of the regular army in status as the Grenadier Guards," were spared the reality of war which now is the fate of Germany's Volkssturm.

Yet, although they were never called upon to demonstrate their "determination to fight for every inch of the ground in every village and in every street," they were a vital cog in Britain's war machine. Without them soldiers of the regular army could not have been released in such great numbers for overseas service.

"I should like to see the great spirit which you have created permeate all our organizations in this country during the coming difficult years," Lt.-Gen. Sir Charles Lloyd, General Officer Commanding the London District, said at a stand-down luncheon.

Each man, however, will receive a certificate of service, signed by the King, telling him that "in the years when our country was in mortal danger" he "gave generously of his time and powers to make himself ready for her defence by force of arms and with his life if need be."

More than that they do not ask. It was their country, their homes and their families they were guarding.

Town of Linnich Important Outpost Cologne Defence

Enemy Expects Large-Scale Attack by Canadian Forces

By JAMES M. LONG
(AP Staff Writer)

Paris, Dec. 2 — (AP) — U. S. 9th Army troops battled into the Roer River bastion town of Linnich today, shoving the northern arc of the Cologne Plain within 15 miles of the Rhineland factories of the twin cities of Rheydt-Munchen Gladbach.

The 9th Army men hit back into Roerdorf and Flossdorf, lost to vicious Nazi counter-charges, and their U.S. 1st Army comrades farther south chopped slowly through fierce resistance toward Duren on the Roer.

Quiet was almost unbroken on the British 2nd Army front to the north in Germany and along the Meuse river in Holland. There were no reports of action from the front in Germany east of Nijmegen, last reported held by elements of the 1st Canadian Army.

A German propaganda broadcast said the Canadians had been moved "far to the east," and, with Gen. Crerar's troops massed in the Nijmegen salient, a large-scale attack was expected from that quarter.

Tanks of the U. S. 3rd Army lengthened the front on the Saar river opposite Merzig to 16 miles, Lt.-Gen. Patton's armor and men massed in striking positions along the Saar valley.

On the right flank of this assault base, 3rd Army forces were within two miles of Saarlautern, and farther east infantry was eight miles southwest of Saarbrucken.

Exploit Lorraine Collapse

U.S. 7th. Army troops were exploiting what seemed to be a collapse of the German line across northern Lorraine. They drove to the outskirts of Haguenau and in a sweeping flank attack reached a point ten miles northwest of the city—within ten miles of the German border.

Strasbourg still was under heavy German shellfire from east of the Rhine. The Germans tried to reinforce their tenuous and shallow bridgehead along the west bank at Strasbourg by boats under cover of a smokescreen, but U.S. artillery collapsed the attempt.

Infantry battled up the staircases of apartment buildings in the eastern suburbs in an effort to pinch out the bridgehead there. To the south, the Colmar Gap between the 7th. and French 1st. Army was squeezed down to not more than 30 miles, a front dispatch said.

On the British front in Holland, all was quiet save for patrol activities. A British staff officer declared the Germans all along the western front were suffering more casualties than they could replace with trained men. Company strength in some cases is down to 40 men, compared with the normal 160, he said.

A savage battle raged at Inden along the centre of the Bulge toward Cologne. First army troops fought to cross the Inde River to the eastern part of the town, but were brought under heavy mortar and artillery fire. Heavy guns supported the infantry.

The western part of Inden, road junction on the main highway between Geilenkirchen and Duren, had been cleared of Germans in house-to-house fighting, except for one pocket of infantrymen supported by tanks and howitzers.

The 9th Army fought into Linnich, and surged back into the lost towns of Roerdorf and Flossdorf to the south.

First army elements won high ground within 1,000 yards west of Gey, four miles southwest of Duren, and made moderate gains toward Brandenberg, seven miles southwest of Duren.

THREATENED MILK SHORTAGE AVERTED

Farmer suppliers of city milk assisted in averting a threatened shortage over the weekend by clearing their own roads and assisting dairy trucks to obtain at least part of their loads, it was learned today.

Consequently there will be sufficient milk "to go round" at least today and tomorrow. Monday's supply will depend on the antics of the weather-man.

One Prince Edward County farmer cleared a laneway to the highway with his tractor to assist milk delivery. On the other hand a number of suppliers found it impossible to "get out."

MISS MURIEL LEONARD WINS FUR COAT

Miss Muriel Leonard, of Marmora, is the owner of a $500 coat today following the draw for the Kinsmen fur coat which was held at the Capitol Theatre on Friday evening. Miss Leonard is on the staff of the Deloro Smelting and Refining Company at Deloro. The draw for the fur coat was made by little Miss Joan Shires, a small girl chosen from the theatre audience.

The fur coat will be purchased from Woodley's Furriers in Belleville, who will tailor the coat to the lucky winner's measurement. The coat will be ready for the winner in time for Christmas, according to Kinsmen officials.

CAR DAMAGED

When he retarded the speed of his truck to allow other vehicles to pass at the intersection of Dundas and Pinnacle Sts. on Friday afternoon Robt. Arnott of this city, was surprised when he felt a sudden jolt from behind. A motor car following behind and driven by Albert Alford had collided with the rear of the truck. The only damage noted by investigating police was to the radiator and front portion of the motor car. The street was quite slippery at the point of impact.

DOG RUN OVER

While proceeding along Cedar St. yesterday a city bus driven by Harry Calver, 136 Bridge St., ran over and killed a dog belonging to Harry Tamlin, 77 Cedar St. Mr. Calver reported the accident to city police after having completed his bus route, stating the dog had run beneath the wheels of the bus on an ice-covered street.

Small Attendance On City Market

Blocked sideroads and heavy going on the more-travelled district highways were a contributing factor toward the smallest attendance of the season on the local produce market on Saturday. Only a few farmers offered apples and potatoes on the outside market while inside attendance was almost equally as limited.

Eggs held at last week's figure of 45 cents for firsts with mediums being quoted at 43 cents. Overweights retailed at 50 cents the dozen with customers quickly buying up all available supplies of eggs. Chicken also was quickly taken up at prices ranging from 35 to 40 cents the pound.

Usual prices of from $2.50 to $3.75 for top grade Spy and McIntosh prevailed with Delicious, Spy and Macs bringing 50 cents the basket. Cooking varieties could be had at from $1 the bushel. Potatoes sold at $1.75 the bag.

For the first time this season there were no market gardeners on the market while no farmers offered young pigs or loads of wood.

Civic Candidates Air Views At Sparsely Attended Meeting Of Citizens Held in City Hall

Pre-Election Meeting Fails to Excite Any Great Amount of Local Interest

Facts About Monday's Civic Elections

On Monday, December 4, electors in the Belleville civic elections will:

Vote from 9 a.m. to 7 p.m.
Elect Mayor,
14 Aldermen
1 Utility Commissioner.
Vote for or against 2 bylaws, namely: 2-year term for council; Raising of $50,000 by debenture for completion of Riverside Drive.

In a colorful promulgation of their various viewpoints as to the best form of municipal government for the coming year, twenty-seven candidates for the mayoralty and aldermanic seats with two aspirants for the public utilities commissionership, aired their opinions before a now traditionally small crowd of taxpayers in the City Hall last night.

In fact the crowd was so small (32 by actual count when Chairman Harry Rollins finally called the delayed meeting to order at 8.35 p.m.) that the assembled candidates by a 19-3 vote decided to call the meeting off. This decision was offset when the chairman bowed to the will of the audience that the meeting go on as scheduled.

It was nearly 8.45 p.m. when the platform-heavy meeting finally got under way. Four potential aldermen were absent, when the roll call was taken. Time allowances for the speakers were announced by the chairman. Mayoralty candidates were allowed five minutes; public utilities commissioner aspirants ten minutes and the aldermanic hopefuls five minutes each.

Chairman Harry Rollins

Before the chairman had an opportunity to open his remarks a taxpayer rose in his seat and demanded that aspirants to the mayoralty and public utilities commissionership state their platforms regarding the operation of the Retail Store of the Hydro Electric Commission on Front Street. The chairman deemed it a fair question and passed it along to the candidates in question.

During the meeting a more or less excited taxpayer periodically interrupted the various speakers. He chose them at random but more or less directly chose the new bylaw to raise $50,000 by debenture for the Riverside Drive as his target. So insistent was he, that Mayor Rollins, who goodnaturedly had allowed the interruptions to continue for a lengthy time finally told the audience representative that he would get a hearing after the meeting.

"I won't be here after the meeting," shouted the irate one, "in fact I'm going home and you can stay here with your Home Rule".

In his early remarks the Mayor paid definite tribute to the general public and his council for the fine cooperation he received during his tenure as chief magistrate for the past two years. "I have tried in my humble way," he said "to give leadership and do honor to the office of mayor. Any success I may have attained has been due to the backing of my council and the ratepayers of this city. Anything I have asked of them they have backed me 100 per cent."

Mayor Rollins briefly outlined the bylaws which will appear before the voters of the city on Monday and urged them to support both. These include the two-year session for the first seven aldermen elected and the completion of the Riverside Drive by the raising of $50,000 by debenture. He emphasized the fact that council only asks for the authority to raise this money and not the privilege of raising the amount directly and to be spent immediately.

Alderman Frank Follwell

Alderman Follwell paid direct tribute to the leadership and good guidance of Mayor Rollins as head of the city for the past two years. He acclaimed the council and previous bodies and mayors as public-spirited men who gave freely of their time and efforts for the betterment of the city.

He felt, he said, that it was his turn for the mayoralty as he had already served four years as an alderman. He has served as chairman of Stationery and chairman of Light. With respect to the latter, he stated that already plans were under way to make Belleville the best lighted city in the province. He was not unmindful of the honors and duties that accompany the office of mayor and was aware of the bigness of the job.

He stood for an aggressive expansive industrial program as he felt the city could not progress if it did not have progressive industry. There must be jobs for all, and also more homes, for more homes mean lower taxes.

The city is in need of a recreational centre, he observed, and already the present council has made arrangements for outdoor rinks for skating and hockey. He felt that was a start of a really planned recreational program for this part of the education of youth. He stood for a cleaning of the waterfront, a complete investigation of the gas plant and a good system of sidewalk snow removal. He felt, if elected, this would be in effect next season. In answer to the question of the Hydro Retail Shop, Alderman Follwell stated that if returned as mayor he would use his best judgment in this matter.

George O. Tice

Stating that he expected to return to his former occupation at the first of the year and that he would have plenty of time to place at the disposal of the office if elected mayor, Mr. George O. Tice, former chief magistrate recalled his former years of service as head of the city council.

"I served you for four years as mayor and for six years as an alderman. These were the toughest years this city ever passed through and what I did then is the reason for my standing for election now."

"In 1931 I sold the gas plant for $325,000 to the Ontario Shore Gas Company, and retained a $1,870,000 equity. Two years later the council absorbed the equity, closed the mortgage and put the Company out of town when it was paying $4,000 rent and $1,300 in taxes. The gas plant stood as an essential thing to this city. I stand now and would have stood for the retaining of the plant."

He was not brought before the taxpayer as a mayoralty candidate by any political, church, or any other organization, but simply on his own ideas. "The four years of relief which came about when I was mayor stand as a record for me in what was done for this city."

He established a 40 cent rate for labor in 1932, Ex-Mayor Tice told his audience. "I was always for the underdog and I am yet. No ratepayer in this city has any right to say anything about what was paid in relief by this city. We supplied 5,800 meals in one day—yet we pulled through."

Mayor Tice stated that he was in favor of harbor and river improvements and would be watchful of the tax rates. He urged the ratepayers to get out and use their franchise. Asking their support, he mentioned that the city of Belleville had always elected good councils and fairly good mayors. With reference to the Hydro Shop question, he stated that he knew nothing about it, but if elected would investigate it and

Morley P. Duff

Standing pat on the successful operation of the electric and water utilities, which he claimed as good business administration, Public Utility Commissioner Morley P. Duff stood on his record in public service to the city as he appealed for the confidence of voters in Monday's election.

Speaking on the water utility he showed how consumers had been granted a 10 percent reduction in rates since the commission had taken over the department. An amount in excess of $3,400 had been paid back to the city each year with $1,000 returned to the council. "This had been taken care of out of earnings. The water department represented an investment of $711,000," he said.

The necessity of the water storage plant recently built was indicated through the vastly increased pumpage of water during the past summer. In August alone there had been 13 million more gallons of water pumped than in the corresponding month last year. "Undoubtedly the reservoir saved the situation," he said.

Valuable Utility

Turning to the electric utility Mr. Duff stated this represented a value of $425,000 to the city. To this had been added $176,000 in improvements, which had been paid out of earnings. "The system was free of debt," he said. Rates had been reduced until Belleville now enjoys the third lowest in the province, while rebates had been given to the consumers, last year's rebate alone amounting to $29,000.

In view of the investigation, which had been ordered into the gas plant, the speaker declined to discuss this matter. He indicated however, that the commission had no authority to close the plant, this power only coming through vote of the people.

Critical of Opponent

Ex-mayor George Reid, Mr. Duff's opponent in the fight for the one seat on the commission, was criticised by the speaker for his return to municipal life following his statement of last year, that he was through with public life. Mr. Reid's policy of wanting profits of the commission turned over to the city was termed by Mr. Duff to be contrary to regulations. "Profits from the electric utility must go back to the consumer in the form of reduced rates," he said.

Mr. Reid's advocacy of free water to building contractors was termed as a trivial matter involving only a few dollars, while the speaker denied the fact that Mr. Reid first recommended the purchase of the electric utility by the city. This he said had first been recommended by the Hydro engineer.

In closing Mr. Duff indicated he was in favor of retaining the local Hydro shop, while to a question put by a voice from the audience asking why misrepresentation had been made to the council regarding the necessity of gas to local industry, replied, that the recommendation was the result of a survey made of city industries.

George A. Reid

"I am not making any excuses for again offering myself as commissioner," stated Ex-mayor George Reid as he spoke to the rate-payers present. "The reason I am coming back is that I think I can do a service to the local taxpayer. He declared, that the policy of flat Hydro rates as recommended by himself would put electricity in every rural village and as result would mean 10 millions of dollars business to retail merchants in cities.

Admitting recommendation of purchasing the local electrical distribution plant from the Ontario Hydro came from the engineer, Mr. Reid nevertheless took credit for bringing the motion before council which was "THAT a committee composed of His Worship Mayor Greenleaf, Alderman Reid, Alderman Rollins, Alderman Walker be hereby authorized to arrange for a meeting with the Hydro Electric Power Commission at Toronto at as early a date as possible for the purpose of completing arrangements and proposed agreement to be submitted to a vote of the electors regarding the purchase of the Local Hydro System, said committee to have power to act in any manner they find necessary in order to further the matter of taking the required vote."

It was also during his term in council that Hydro rates to Belleville users had been reduced, he said.

"The false prophets on Front St. have stated that I was opposed to profits of Hydro going to reduce rates to the consumer but the record stands, that it was during my term as mayor that Hydro rates were reduced. Those reductions came while I was in council and not when Mr. Duff was in council," he said.

Defending his recommendation that building contractors in the city be given free water, Mr. Reid referred to instances where meters had not been installed when needed by contractors. He questioned the efficiency of the service department in this respect.

Favors Closing Store

The speaker asserted that he was definitely in favor of closing the local Hydro store asserting the Belleville Hydro shop to be the only one between Toronto and Ottawa which is operated by the commission. He said the store should be closed to keep the sale of electrical appliances open to the boys, when they return from overseas.

Turning to the gas plant Mr. Reid quoted figures showing how it had shown a profit during the first year of its operation by the city. Later years of operation had shown a loss. He was in favor of the investigation into the operation of the gas plant, which had been recommended by council and indicated that he wanted to be in council when the report was returned. "My record stands," he said, "and I think I deserve your vote on Monday."

H. J. Allin.

Alderman Jack Allin stated that not being chairman of any committee he had no sins to answer for, but pointed to his nine years experience as member of the Board of Education and his equal period of service as alderman. He had been in industry all his life and recognized the need of gas for industry. He termed the gas referendum which was to be put to the people as "immature" and as member of the industrial committee indicated he had been responsible for this gas inquiry being sent to industries, the result of which had been the recommended independent investigation into the operation of the plant. He declared himself as not in favor of the two year term for councillors and stated that he approved of the proposed Riverside Drive, although not for issuing of debentures.

Harold J. Armstrong.

As chairman of the public works department Mr. Armstrong stated this to be the most important of the city services. He reviewed the extra work of the department during the past two years which had resulted through the Bell Telephone putting their cable through the city and through the program of pavement resurfacing which had been undertaken following the release of building materials from the government restricted list. Included in the post war program for the public works was a sewage disposal plant for which plans are now being made. He pointed to the current building boom in the city as being a healthy sign. In closing he expressed his appreciation to members of the council, to the city hall staff and to public works employees for the co-operation shown him as public works chairman.

E. Ormonde Butler.

As chairman of city property Mr. Pringle jokingly indicated that he headed the only city department which annually showed a considerable balance above expenditures. He defended his stand on the gas plant situation when as the result of the plant getting further behind in repairs and showing increased losses annually, he had seconded Alderman Pringle's motion to have the plant closed. This motion had come following the commission's failure to carr out recommendations from the council, he said. The result of the motion to close the plant was the recommended thorough investigation of the plant operation, something which would not have come about, he indicated if the matter had not been brought to a head by the motion to close the plant.

After one of the worst early season's snowstorms to be received in the district in some years, Belleville and immediate vicinity today is slowly seeing vehicular transportation being returned to something like normalcy.

Provincial highways system are open while the majority of the main travelled county roads in the south Hastings area have either been plowed or are in the process of being opened for traffic today. In most cases, however, township roads are heavy or impassable for motorized traffic as snow plowing equipment owned by the municipalities in some instances was not yet ready for operation.

The going was particularly heavy on No. 2 highway east of the city all day Friday and in the vicinity of the Point Anne road was completely blocked. Snow plows endeavoring to clear the highway were also stopped and did not clear the road for traffic until early today, it was reported by provincial police.

Indicative of the fact that several north and south roads were passable was the fact that only two mail routes coming into the Belleville office failed to make their usual deliveries on Friday. Those failing to make delivery were the Frankford stage and the Ameliasburg stage. Frankford stage later made delivery by going around by Trenton in the evening. Mails from the north got through, although several hours late.

County Engineer Larry Langlois reported the county system being in much better condition today than on Friday with the Madoc-Foxboro; Foxboro-Frankford and the Queensboro-Cooper roads having been plowed. The Tweed-Sulphide road was reported open although not plowed. Roads north of Madoc were generally in a better condition as result of the north district not receiving as heavy a fall of snow as in the south.

Roads which were expected to be opened some time on Saturday were the Belleville to Wallbridge road; the Point Anne road; the Shannonville gravel north to the 4th concession and the second and fourth concessions of Thurlow to the Shannonville gravel. In the north the Marmora-Cordova and Deloro-Malone roads are being opened.

Penitentiary Terms Given Four Jail Breakers, While Fifth Goes to Reformatory

Quigley, Hawkins, Bell and Green to Serve Three Years

Four of the prisoners to escape from the Hastings County jail by violence a month ago were sentenced to serve three years in the Kingston Penitentiary, while a youthful fifth member was given two years less one day in the Ontario Reformatory by Magistrate T. Y. Wills in a special session of city police court held at the Court House on Friday afternoon.

"It is somewhat difficult to differentiate between these parties as they are all equally guilty of a serious crime. However, owing to the extreme youth of one Andrews, I intend to make a lesser sentence in this case," stated Magistrate Wills before passing sentence.

To 16-year-old Floyd Andrews was given a term of two years less one day in the Ontario Reformatory, while Martin Green, 19, David Quigley 18, Bert J. Hawkins, 18, and Norman Bell also 18 were respectively given three years in the Kingston Penitentiary after each had pleaded guilty to breaking jail by violence.

Jailer Testifies

The principal witnesses called were Jailer J. A. Samain and Deputy Turnkey Herb Urch, who were the victims of a violent attack at the hands of the abovenamed quintette on the night of Nov. 6th last, when the accused youths beat the jail officials sufficiently to effect escape.

Jailer Samain told of entering the jail block at the accustomed time of locking up, when he was first attacked by Hawkins. "He touched me on the shoulder and as I turned he struck me. Then Quigley grabbed me from behind and pinned my arms as Hawkins and Andrews attacked me with clubs," stated Jailer Samain in evidence. The witness also added, that Bell wielded a small paring knife while Green brandished a large 18-inch butcher knife at Turnkey Urch. The witness then told of escaping through a side door from where he raised the alarm.

When confronted with a large furnace shaker bar presented in evidence by Crown Attorney B. C. Donnan, the witness admitted it had been found after the jail break, but he had not seen it used by the escapees.

Upon cross examination by F. G. Gardner, Toronto barrister engaged to represent Andrews only, Jailer Samain admitted Andrews had but 24 days left to serve of a 60 day term imposed previously for theft.

"How was young Andrews' conduct?" asked Mr. Gardner.

"Very good, so much so we made him a trusty," replied Mr. Samain.

"Well, he knows his way around," replied Jailer Samain and there were no further questions. Mr. Urch corroborated the testimony of Mr. Samain and added that Green had threatened him with the large knife.

Records Introduced

After Dr. F. R. Ross testified as to the severe head injuries, lacerations and bruises sustained by the two jail officials, Crown Attorney B. C. Donnan introduced the records of previous convictions registered against the quintet of jailbreakers. It was then disclosed, that Andrews had been convicted of stealing bicycles in Toronto and also of robbery at Chatterton, for which he was serving a term when the jail break was effected. Green, Quigley and Hawkins all had records of car thefts, as did Bell, who had also been convicted of robbery with violence.

"These are offences of a grave nature. Only last week sentences of five years were given offenders for the same crime in Quebec and I urge a severe sentence," stated Crown Attorney Donnan, as he admitted Andrews' youthful age.

In speaking on behalf of Andrews, Attorney Gardner admitted the crime was of a serious nature. "I wish the court to know Andrews has three brothers serving in the armed services and maybe had he been born earlier he might have been with them. However, what I'm more concerned in is how can the good in such boys be salvaged? I would not wish my client to go to reformatory, where he might learn more crime, therefore I ask for a jail term here," stated Mr. Gardner, as he blamed war conditions for the erring ways of the present-day youth.

Counsel Speaks

Mr. R. A. Pringle, local barrister, representing the other four accused youths at the request of Crown Attorney Donnan. "I might point out that Hawkins signed up in the army, when only 15 and had to be released. Then he got into the air force and was dismissed on account of standing. However, on behalf of the four boys I merely wish to point out, that to send them to penitentiary is merely removing them from society, while at the reformatory they could be made into better citizens by learning a trade," concluded Mr. Pringle, who appeared without remuneration at the request of the court.

"You have all been found guilty of a serious offence of which the maximum sentence could be seven years. You made physical attacks upon two public servants, who were in the pursuit of their duties and the charge could well have been more serious. Unfortunately there is no institution in Canada with the provision of reform for youths of your age, such as they possess in England," stated Magistrate Wills in summing the case up to give sentences of three years in the penitentiary to Green, Quigley, Bell and Hawkins, while Andrews was sent to the reformatory.

In a subsequent charge of car theft, presented by Assistant Crown Attorney G. S. Robertson, the first named four pleaded guilty and received a concurrent sentence of one year. Inspector Wm. Lougheed of the C.I.D. acted as advisor to the prosecution.

GERMANSTRENGTH PROBABLY ABOUT 6,000,000 MEN

Correspondent Says of These About 1,250,000 Are Fit Men 19 to 46

By ROGER GREENE
(AP War Correspondent)

21st Army Group Headquarters, Dec. 1 — (AP)—Adolf Hitler now probably has about 6,000,000 troops to wage the climactic Battle of Germany, including about 1,250,000 really fit men between the ages of 19 and 46, according to the best available information here.

Under the leadership of three commanders, Field Marshal Walther von Model, Col. Gen. Kurt Student and Gen. Hermann Balck, with Field Marshal Karl Rudolf Gerd von Rundstedt as supreme chieftain in the west, the Nazi Fuehrer has more divisions massed on the Allied front in western Europe than on D-Day. But they are far inferior in quality.

On Western Front

On June 6 there were approximately 65 German divisions on the western front, compared with about 70 today, but now many Nazi divisions average less than 11,000 men, it is estimated, as compared with 17,000 men on D-Day.

In recent operations the Germans have been losing about six divisions a week.

On all fronts Hitler today has about 300 divisions. Information here divided them as follows:

Eastern front—130-140.
Italy—about 30.
Balkans—about 20.
Scandinavia—about 20.
Inside Germany—about 20.

The German high command already has bitten deeply into the class of 1928 — boys of 16 — and now has only about 150,000 left of that class to call upon for badly needed reinforcements.

MAJ. W. E. HARRIS WILL BACK KING

Says It Was Not True Govt. Had Not Provided Trained Reinforcements

Ottawa, Dec. 1 — (CP) — Maj. W. E. Harris, 40, (L—Grey Bruce), wounded in the fierce fighting near Caen last July, said in the Commons last night that it was "definitely not true that the government has not provided trained reinforcements."

Recuperating from a foot wound, Maj. Harris spoke from his experience overseas and said he knew that at times reinforcement pools were depleted and soldiers called for conscription. Always, however, a shipment came along from Canada and the pools were filled up.

He proposed to vote against all amendments and for the government motion of confidence.

Maj. Harris said he would vote against the opposition amendment which declared the government had not provided adequate reinforcements because it did not state the truth. When two great soldiers — Defence Minister McNaughton and Col. J. L. Ralston, former Defence Minister — were agreed on what was being done he was satisfied.

Never Any Shortage He says

In the armored corps in which he served there was never any shortage of reinforcements. It had been said after one good battle the Canadian Army would have no reinforcements.

"Well," he added, "we fought a good many battles and we beat the Germans and we are still fighting."

A campaign directed at soldiers' next-of-kin had been carried on to try to convince people that untrained soldiers were sent into battle. No commander in the Canadian Army would take responsibility for sending an untrained man into battle. Every reinforcement officer was responsible for seeing that every soldier who went forward as a reinforcement was trained.

The fact that 15,000 home defence troops were from Ontario showed that the draftee problem was not a Quebec problem.

Fought Alongside French-Canadians

In France he fought alongside French-Canadian troops and they fought as bravely as any others.

In Quebec there were mothers and wives who anxiously awaited mail from their loved ones overseas and feared the arrival of a casualty telegram from the Department of National Defence.

"On returning to this country I would have thought that we would be showing our appreciation of the services of these soldiers on the battlefields," he said. "Instead I find people adding to the suffering of these wives and mothers in Quebec by deriding the efforts of their loved ones."

Later G. K. Fraser (P.C. — Peterboro west) charged Maj. Harris with "befuddling the issue" on reinforcements by speaking of reinforcements for the armored corps when he knew nothing of anything else.

WOOLER

W. I. Members Are Entertained

Wooler — Mrs. Ervon Scott entertained at her home members and visitors of the Women's Institute recently. The president, Mrs. Lorne Whitney, presided. Prayer followed the opening hymn and the business period, after which came a program commencing with community singing. Mrs. L. H. Rowe gave a piano solo and Mrs. Harry Hubble, a vocal solo. Mrs. Redcliffe's report of the Eastern W.I. convention which was held at Belleville was very interesting. An added feature, was an address by Mrs. Ernest King, whose topic was "Mobile Canteens" in England. Mr. and Mrs. King who have spent several years in England engaged with war activities there, arrived here about three weeks previous and in future will be residing at Peterboro with their sons. A contest "Month" was conducted and Mrs. Harry Hubble captured the prize. In conclusion the "National Anthem" was sung.

Featuring the popular music of the "Austin Arcadians orchestra," the Wooler Continuation School held a dance on the evening of Nov. 24, in the Wooler town hall. Approximately two hundred people were present, and proceeds together with the lunch and door receipts, were $57.50. The dance committee comprised high school students assisted by the teachers.

The orchestra rendered musical numbers honoring two former pupils, Austin Leavitt, who is attending school at Picton and Jay Wessels of North Dakota who, with his wife is visiting with relatives. To Austin was played "I'll Walk Alone", and for Mr. and Mrs. Wessels, "How Many Hearts Have You Broken."

Mr. and Mrs. E. A. Bell were dinner and tea hour guests of Mrs. Marion Mitchell at Trenton on Wednesday.

Mr. and Mrs. Frank Robinson and baby of Madoc were recent guests of Mrs. Robinson's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Roy Fitzgerald for the day.

Obituary

LATE PETER McINROY

West Huntingdon — Funeral services were held on Tuesday afternoon in United Church, West Huntingdon, for the late Peter McInroy. An extra large number of friends and neighbors were in attendance. Mr. Kenneth Stewart was in charge of the service and was assisted by Rev. W. H. Walker of Stirling and Rev. O. S. Wagar of Ivanhoe. Mrs. W. J. Fitchett rendered a comforting solo during the service. A tribute to the esteem in which he was held was demonstrated at his funeral, when a large body of Orangemen from his own lodge, as well as outside points attended.

The beautiful burial service of the Orange Order was conducted at the graveside. Those in charge were Messrs. Sam Twiddy, Burton Woodbeck, Earl Benson and Ben Brough.

The pall bearers were: Messrs. Frank Ashley, Geo. Cooke, John B. Hagerman, Tom Fleming, Sam Donnan and Edward Benson. Interment took place in West Huntingdon Cemetery.

ONT. GOVT. PLANS LARGER POST-WAR ROADS PROJECT

Toronto, Dec. 1 — (CP) — A five-year post-war highway construction plan to cost approximately $250,000,000 has been drawn up by the Ontario Department of Highways.

This was announced last night by Premier Drew in an address to the annual banquet of the Automotive Transport Association of Ontario who said the program for "the whole five years has been worked out and investigation is proceeding of the various details, such as location, grades and the structures required along the highways."

The premier said plans also are being made for road development to be undertaken jointly by municipalities and the Department of Highways. This program also will cover a five-year period and is in addition to the plans for provincial highways. It will include the replacement of county and township bridges, which have become obsolete.

"These plans will make both commercial and private trucking possible on a scale never known before" and "with these changes there will be a tremendous improvement in the farm-to-market roads which connect the farming communities with the provincial highway systems."

Direct Concern to Everyone

While he did not divulge the plans or sites of any of the proposed new highways, Mr. Drew said he believed that the plans already made by the Highways Department "will lay the foundation for a vast post-war development in agriculture, in industry, in tourist traffic, in mining and in the use of our great forest resources."

"This is something which is of direct concern to every one in this province. Many cities and towns are entirely, or almost entirely, dependent on trucks for their milk supplies. More than half of our livestock is moved by motor transport. Nearly half of our fresh fruit and vegetables are carried in that way.

"I think it is no overstatement to say that to a very great degree the whole structure of our present way of living is based upon highways and the vehicles moving over them, and that the speed of our post-war development in this province will depend very largely upon our highways and the way we use them."

Mr. Drew said further that while "we now have a highway system in Ontario which compares favorably with that of any similar area in the whole world, we have only started to bring our highways into line with the development of the automotive vehicle and the great opportunities which lie before us."

Let Every Voter Vote

On Monday December 4th., 1944, voters of this city will have the opportunity of casting their ballots in the annual municipal elections. There are contests for the mayoralty, for the election of fourteen candidates as aldermen out of a field of a field of twenty-five candidates and for the election of a member of the Public Utilities Commission.

As in all elections it is essential that the vote be as nearly total as it is possible to have it so that the representative voice of the people may be heard. Elections are the democratic means of choosing a government, federal, provincial or municipal. In the municipal field every voter is keenly interested and therefore all who have the franchise should vote and record their preference for the candidates for the mayoralty and members of the incoming council and a member of the Public Utilities Commission. In recent years there has been seen the need of urging voters to go to the polls and vote. The reason is that for some time it has been felt that there should be a larger vote polled so as to make the total as large and representative as possible. No one can overemphasize the importance of a strong public interest in elections because municipal government is that which has to do with the town or city in which one lives and touches everyone very closely.

To have the right to vote and to exercise that vote according to one's own preference is the time-honored privilege which has come down through the generations. Therefore voters should exercise it every time elections come around and every time an opinion is sought from the people.

Let all who have a vote show their interest by casting their ballots in the contests for membership of Belleville's council in 1945, consisting of a mayor and fourteen aldermen and in the choice of a member of the Public Utilities Commission.

There are also two bylaws on which to vote.

All persons whose names are on the voters' list for the year 1944 are entitled to vote on the bylaw in regard to the length of the term for aldermen with election every year of half the aldermen for two-year terms. All voters are asked to record their approval or otherwise on this measure.

There is also the bylaw asking for authority to borrow money for the purpose of purchasing right-of-way and improvement to a proposed highway on the east side of the Moira River, namely Riverside Drive, on which only persons whose names appear on the last revised voters' list as being owners of property are entitled to vote. A letter from Mr. J. G. Galloway, chairman of the Merchants' Division of the Chamber of Commerce and Harold G. Woodley, chairman of Post War Planning in Friday's issue and a letter from Mayor Rollins in today's issue refer to this bylaw.

On Election of Aldermen

Voters in the municipal elections on Monday will have the opportunity of voting on the question whether they are in favor of electing aldermen for a term of two years, on these conditions, half of the aldermen to be elected each year for a two-year term and the first seven elected for 1945 automatically to be elected for the first two-year term and the remainder for one year only. Voters are asked to record their answer to this by "yes" or "no", whichever is the voters' opinion.

If the bylaw carries the first seven of the fourteen aldermen elected on Monday will be in office for two years and the other seven for one year, the term of the latter to expire at the end of next year when they can offer themselves for re-election if they so desire along with any newcomers who might wish to contest the elections for council seats. The two-year term will then be in full operation with half the council seats to be filled each year for two years.

The two-year plan has the merit if carried that it will guarantee that every year at least half the number of aldermen will be men who have had experience in the city council and municipal affairs. That would give a certain continuity not only to membership but also to any programs that might be under way. It is felt that elections every year of half the council for two year-term would stimulate interest in municipal affairs and offer the opportunity to newcomers to the council to be well trained for their office.

This plan would mean an election of half the council every year and with half the council closing their term of office each year there would also be the opportunity for the public to have an expression of opinion on the year's work of the council.

In our opinion it appears to be a constructive policy which should commend itself to the favorable consideration of the voting public.

Every person whose name appears on the revised voters' lists for the year 1944 is entitled to vote on this bylaw.

Strong Protest

O why did I learn to like milk,
  A fluid now fled to retirement,
When fate was preparing to bilk
  That innocent taste and requirement?
Vile Ministries sell me a pup
  With rationing rules and abatements—
Nay, further, they muck the thing up
  By rash and repeated mis-statements.

Two pints for a week, it was said,
  Next month would amount to my portion,
Which hardly came under the head
  Of rapacity, greed, or extortion.
November's allowance was bleak,
  Adjusted to chasten and sober;
But what about none for a week?
  And here we were still in October?

Rebellious and far from resigned
  I am ready to walk any distance
To see if the cow and its kind
  Are still in continued existence.
This crisis, its why and its how,
  I want them officially stated;
I should like to complain to a cow
  Or have they been all dehydrated?

The Leaking Roofs of London

(News of the World, London)

In the first sixteen days of October the rainfall over the country was precisely three times in excess of that in the corresponding period of last year. Ordinarily this would be a metereological fact of merely passing interest. But these are no ordinary times—not, in any case, for those tens of thousands of London's citizens who, morning after morning, awake to the damp and depressing discovery that there has been a miniature visitation of the Flood in the night. They are the unhappy people who have to sit and suffer in the bomb-damaged homes of the metropolis while the rain streams through roofs disfigured by wide open spaces, or percolates through sundry cracked tiles. That is not a pleasant experience in October. How much worse is the physical ordeal going to be as late autumn merges into advancing winter! The awareness of the responsible authorities to the gravity of the situation is not to be challenged, or their honest and conscientious endeavour to find, by improvisation and expedient, a temporary remedy. It is the urgency of London's broken homes and broken roofs that has to be underlined and emphasized again.

Excess either way shocks and every wise man should attend to this in his dress as well as language; never be affected in anything, but follow, without being in too great haste, the changes of fashion. —Moliere.

If thou be subject to any great vanity or ill, then therein trust no man; for every man's folly ought to be his greatest secret. —Sir Walter Raleigh.

LOOKING BACKWARDS

20 YEARS AGO

In the municipal elections yesterday W. C. Mikel, K.C., was re-elected mayor of the city for the year 1925 by a majority of 1,649 votes over his nearest opponent ex-Mayor Geo. A. Bennett and a majority of 958 votes over the combined votes of his three opponents who were ex-Mayor Bennett, Ald. W. R. McCreary and Ald. Harry W. Greenleaf. In every polling subdivision Mayor Mikel's majority was considerably in excess of all the votes recorded for his opponents. The electors were evidently not in favor of the proposition to adopt daylight saving during the summer months of 1925; it was defeated by a majority of 1,679 votes. In Coleman Ward there was a contest for school trustee and George Sprackett defeated W. J. Looker by a majority of 138 votes. All the aldermen were elected by acclamation and are as follows: George W. Dawes, Samuel H. Treverton, Joseph J. C. Manley, Philip Harrison, Allen H. Ketcheson, Robert J. E. Graham, Walter H. Patterson, Caniff A. Ruttan, Albert Robinson, George E. Foster, William J. Parish and Albert F. LaRoche.

Mr. James Anderson of Ameliasburg, the President of the Board during the past season, occupied the chair and the following made brief speeches in response to the usual toasts: Mayor W. W. Chown, ex-Mayor R. J. Graham, Dr. Simmons, J. S. Dench, J. T. Holgate, D. Derbyshire, M.P.P., G. G. Publow, T. Hodgson, A. W. Grant, J. Alexander, Col. J. Earl Halliwell, W. S. Morden. There was a large market today. Butter sold at 20 cents to 22 cents; eggs 16 cents to 20 cents per dozen; chickens 40 cents per pair; choice turkeys sold at $1 each, the ruling price, however, was 70 cents to 90 cents each; potatoes 50 cents to 55 cents per bag. Pravda Salutes Anniversary Of Teheran Meeting

Moscow, Dec. 1 (AP)—Pravda saluted the first anniversary of the Teheran conference today with eulogies of Allied military prowess and friendship and said all Nazi attempts to break the Soviet-British-American alliance had failed.

But at the same time the Communist party organ said that some Hitlerite sympathizers were still active in neutral countries and even in Britain and the United States.

"Remnants of fifth columns and collaborationists with Hitlerite Germany change their colors yet act in the latter's interest," Pravda declared.

The newspaper said that the Germans received hopefuly "different plans looking toward restoration of pre-war combinations and attempts to obtain a lenient attitude toward the aggressors and designs for a return to the old order, from which Hitler's new order originated and which is so dangerous for freedom loving people.

Los Angeles, Dec. 2 —(AP)— Seven were killed and 16 injured when a Transcontinental and Western Airlines passenger plane en route from San Francisco crashed in a heavy fog as it was nearing its destination at Burbank early Friday. The plane carried 20 passengers and three crew members.

LETTER TO THE EDITOR

INTERPRETATION OF BYLAW.

Editor,
The Ontario Intelligencer

Misleading interpretation of the bylaw authorizing the raising of $50,000 by debenture for the completion of Riverside Drive, the proposed roadway situated between the east bank of the Moira River and the rear of buildings on West Front Street is causing some confusion among taxpayers of the city.

I would like to ask each taxpayer to give this bylaw serious thought, and not to be misled by any tangled ideas or interpretations as to its real meaning.

Some are of the opinion that this year's council is asking for $50,000 to be spent outright on this project. This is definitely not the case.

All this council asks, and all the proposed bylaw calls for, is for the authority of the ratepayers of the city to raise this amount in the manner mentioned so that it can be used gradually as the occasion warrants. In other words, the council must have this authority in order to proceed periodically with the completion of the drive.

There is not the slightest doubt in my mind that the proposed roadway will be of the greatest benefit to not only the city as a whole but the taxpayer as well.

Traffic congestion on Front street even in these days of gasoline restrictions, has become one of the vital problems of the city of Belleville. If nothing is done about it, the problem will assume unheard-of proportions if and when normal traffic is resumed. Now is the time to find some method of alleviation, and in my opinion the completion and use of the proposed Riverside Drive is an important step in this direction.

Detouring of heavy truck and other vehicular traffic by means of the proposed drive will go a long way in relieving the congestion that is now cluttering the main street.

So, it behooves every taxpayer who has the welfare of his city at heart to seriously consider this question before voting on Monday. And I hope each will mark his ballot in favor of this bylaw so that each and every one of us as individuals, as well as the city as a whole, will benefit.

Signed:
W. Harry Rollins,
Mayor,
The City of Belleville.

Victory, Order And Fair, Free Election British Aim—Eden

London, Dec. 1 —(CP)— Foreign Secretary Eden told the House of Commons today in a reference to Prime Minister Churchill's visit to Moscow that "we hope in due course others will visit us here frequently as we have visited others."

Mr. Eden did not amplify his statement but turned to discussion of British foreign policy. He said that in dealing with European countries, Britain's aim was threefold—"victory, order and the fair and untrammelled election of governments, dynasties and parliaments alike."

"In Belgium," Mr. Eden explained, "we will support the authority which we believe has the support of the people and we can only judge that by the elected chamber and the way it expresses itself."

Mr. Eden said, "we are really not dominated as a cabinet by the desire to set up a government of the right in this place or a government of the left in another."

Dealing with the position in Italy, he asserted "we did not feel that Count Sforza was a particularly happy choice as foreign minister.

Mr. Eden said that in his judgment and according to his information, Count Sforza recently had been working against the government of Premier Bonomi "who has given us loyal support and fulfilled all his obligations towards us."

Mr. Eden spoke after private members in the Throne Speech debate demanded information on the government's policy regarding Belgium and Italy.

Labor member Aneurin Bevan, said that a "very ugly situation" had been created in Italy, where the British government insisted that the Italians should submit their own choice of ministers to them.

Mr. Pethick-Lawrence speaking on the Belgian question, said Gen. Eisenhower had declared his intention "of supporting the Belgian government by force, if necessary, against the pretensions of certain people in Belgium."

While not saying that Gen. Eisenhower was wrong Lawrence declared that where such a serious step was taken, it was up to the Foreign Secretary to explain the position to the House.

BELIEVE BRENNER PASS SEALED OFF

Rome, Dec. 2 —(AP)— Air Intelligence Officers said today they were reasonably certain that Allied bombs have sealed off the Brenner Pass to German military trains.

Aerial attacks almost a month ago were credited with shutting off that main rail route between Italy and the Reich, and since then it is likely that the pass has been kept blocked by continued raids.

SAYS REPORT MALICIOUS, SHOULD BE INVESTIGATED

Chungking, Dec. 1 —(AP)— A source close to Gen. Chiang Kai-Shek ridiculed today a report published in London that Chiang and his wife had separated. This source said the report was malicious and mendacious and should be thoroughly discredited.

CORONARY DISEASE AND ACTIVITY

A recent study of 500 cases of heart disease in workmen convinced Dr. Cadis Phipps (U.S. Bur. Labor Statistics, No. R-149) that the manual laborer who has heart disease but who, for economic reasons, must continue working has a better life expectancy and also a much later advent of cardiac incapacity (heart failure) than the so-called private patient or "white collar" worker.

Drs. Master, Dack and Jaffe analyzed 1440 cases of coronary artery occlusion, found that the circumstances immediately preceding onset of the attack were sleep, 22.3 percent of the cases, rest 31.1 per cent, mild activity 20.2 per cent, moderate activity 8.5 per cent, walking 15.8 per cent, and unusual exertion only 2 per cent. (American Heart Journal, Oct. '38).

Drs. Williams and Rainey (American Heart Journal, 15, '38) concluded from their observation of patients in Vanderbilt University Hospital and in North Carolina Baptist Hospital that the "three day cardiacs" (patients with congestive heart failure or loss of compensation who were kept rigidly at rest for three days after admission, were happier patients and there was no evidence of higher mortality among them than was found in "three week cardiacs."

Now if I had coronary disease (any serious disease involving the coronary arteries which deliver blood to the heart muscle itself) you may be sure I'd tuck my little vial of nitroglycerin (glyceryl trinitrate) tablets in my pocket and keep right on with my bowling, golf, horseshoes, walking, riding, light gardening, painting, carpentering, fishing of whatever moderately active game of recreation I liked. I believe such a program would give me a better chance to keep right on with my bowling etc., than would a morbid, fearful, depressing change to inactivity.

The thing for one with coronary disease or any serious heart disease to avoid is excitement, tension, anxiety, worry, emotion. Avoid entering competitions, tournaments or contests in which players become serious about the outcome. Play the game purely for fun amusement, and avoid it if you can't play it that way.

An attack of coronary thrombosis may keep the patient in bed for a week and it may force the patient to take things easy for another week or two. But the great weight of competent medical testimony now favors early resumption of moderate activity — no stress, no strenuous exertion or effort, just reasonable everyday activity.

In the booklet CVD (about heart and artery disease)—for copy send ten cents and stamped pre-addressed envelope) I give all the information I can about the emergency use of nitroglycerin for coronary disease (such as angina pectoris). It is neither a stimulant nor a cure for anything, but I believe it is harmless for any one with such heart or artery condition to use freely or rather frequently in dose too small to produce unpleasant flushing or throbbing head, and especially in any emergency when there is distress.

QUESTIONS & ANSWERS

But the Take is Juicy

We would like to hear your comment on the ethics of the American Medical Association's take from the full brand assertions that smoking a certain brand of cigarettes "cleared completely" substantially every case of irritation of the nose and throat due to smoking. (J. E. D.)

Answer—It is pretty silly, isn't it? But then the take is juicy, and so the claim becomes "scientific" in the judgment of the "medical authorities" who run the American Medical Association. Besides, probably the Council on something or other has duly "accepted" the brand of cigarettes that "cleared completely" irritation caused by other brands.

Weight Lifting

Is there any benefit to be derived from weight lifting? I read an article in (phony health publication) where they promise if you take up barbell training you will become much stronger and live a longer, more pleasant life. (D. W.)

Answer—Don't be gullible. Consult the physical instructor in your high school, the physical director in the Y, or get the book on "Exercise in Education and Medicine," by McKenzie, in the public library. Generally it is better to train for agility, skill and speed, not for endurance or abnormal strength.

YOU'D BE SURPRISED

By GEORGE W. STIMPSON

NUGGETS OF KNOWLEDGE

In Australia a large farm, ranch or plantation is called a "station."

Charles Wesley's famous hymn, "Jesus, Lover of My Soul," was published in 1740 under the title, "Jesu, Lover of My Soul."

II Kings 19:35 says: "And it came to pass that night, that the angel of the Lord went out, and smote in the camp of the Assyrians an hundred fourscore and five thousand: And when they arose early in the morning, behold, they were all dead corpses." The phrase "dead corpses" is also used in Isaiah 37:36 in reference to the same event.

This now seems quaint if not erroneous, but when the King James translation of the Bible was made "dead corpses" was good English usage. "Corpse" is derived from Latin "corpus," meaning body, and at that time a corpse might be either a living or a dead body.

Another case of this kind in the Bible is "widow woman." II Samuel 14:5 says: "And the king said unto her, What aileth thee? And she answered, I am indeed a widow woman, and mine husband is dead."

Nowadays "widow" means a woman whose husband is dead and who has not married again. But at one time it was perfectly good English to apply the term to a man as well as to a woman. "Widow" is derived from an old Indo-European root signifying "empty" or "separated" and probably is related in origin to Latin "vidua," meaning void.

The original and true "tortoise-shell" of commerce, used in making spectacle frames, combs and many other articles, is obtained from the shell of the Hawksbill turtle, scientifically known as Caretta imbricata the smallest but most beautiful of the sea turtles.

This species is peculiar in having thin, curved, horny plates on the back that overlap like shingles on a roof or scales on a fish, each plate terminating in a saw-tooth point. These plates are transparent yellowish in color, mottled with black and brown. The substance when heated in oil can be fashioned into any required shape.

Formerly tortoise-shell was obtained in some parts of the world in a barbarous manner. Living Hawksbill turtles were held over a fire until the plates separated from the hard shell and were then turned loose under the mistaken impression that the reptile would live and grow new plates on its shell.

A substitute tortoise-shell is made synthetically.

Complete turtle shells have been used for many purposes. It is said that Henry I of France was cradled in the shell of a large turtle.

ColdWaveSweeps Northern U.S.

New York, Dec. 1. (AP)—Extremely cold weather today swept the northern area of the United States from the Rocky Mountains to the eastern seaboard, while freezing conditions extended towards the Gulf of Mexico.

New England States experienced cold weather which added discomfort to communities lashed by wind and rain yesterday causing damage which was unofficially estimated in the millions.

At least five deaths in upstate New York were attributed to storm conditions which were expected by the weather bureau to abate. Nineteen inches of snow was reported at Syracuse.

The weather bureau said there was no immediate relief in sight for sub-freezing temperatures ranging eastward from the Rockies over the northern section of the country.

A 57-mile wind caused damage to signs and buildings cornices in New York City. Thousands of commuters were delayed yesterday when high tides stalled railroad and ferry traffic on Long Island and in New Jersey.

Many New England communities were without power and telephone lines in the storm which was described as worse than the September hurricane. Coastal communities were flooded by high tides and pounded by huge waves.

Hundreds of persons were evacuated during the height of the day's high tied. Indications were that others might have to be taken from their homes during today's cold spell. Town officials pointed out that many furnace fires were extinguished by water in cellars.

Thousands of trees and many telephone poles were down in the Cape area. The Cape Cod canal burst its banks for the first time since the 1938 hurricane and scores of families in the vicinity were evacuated.

Inrushing tidewater at Camden, Me., smashed a storage tank pipe and an estimated 10,000 gallons of fuel oil poured into the harbor.

In Boston, the tide rose to 13.8 feet, equal to the second highest tide ever recorded here.

TESTIFY 40,000 JEWS GASSED

London, Dec. 2 —(CP Reuter)— Moscow radio announced Friday that witnesses in the Maidenek death camp trial revealed that 40,000 Jews brought from the Warsaw ghetto were gassed at the camp in three weeks.

The radio reported that the interrogation of defendants and witnesses at the Lublin court, trying the six Germans accused of murdering and torturing inmates of the Maidenek death camp, near Lublin, had been completed.

Collegiate and Vocational School Commencement Inspiring Event, Students Receive Awards, Diplomas

Stanley Wiggins Valedictorian for Wartime Class (1939-1944)—Manufacturers' Scholarships Presented for First Time—Gala Scenes at Ceremonies—Addresses Praise Faculty and Students—Spirit of School Emphasized

"Courage, an open mind, a loving heart, work and belief in God are five of the things we expect you to bring to life," said Rev. Dr. A. J. Wm. Myers, Minister of Tabernacle United Church, in his very inspiring oration to the graduating class of Belleville Collegiate Institute and Vocational School at the evening Commencement Exercises on Friday in the auditorium of the school.

Graduates and Faculty Congratulated

Dr. Myers, primarily congratulated the graduates and the faculty of the High School for their splendid record and achievement. In continuing, he turned his attention to the graduating class, and asked the question, "What do you bring to life? What are some of the things we expect you to bring to life? Courage is one of the first. Life is never perfect and to whine when everything is not rosy is not an example of courage. We expect you to have moral courage. Stand up for what you believe to be right. Your lives will be full of difficulties at times, but fear only magnifies them."

Eagerness to Learn

"Secondly," said Dr. Myers, "you should bring to life eagerness to learn . . . an open mind. This night of graduation is only the commencement of your education. The third thing you should bring to life is a fervent resort to do good honest work. Life is not all a gay merry-go-round. Do not leave a task undone. Fourthly, you should have a loving heart and a helpful spirit. There are five goals in life. Finally, convince yourself that there is something bigger in life than yourself, all men and the universe. Identify yourself with some church."

Dr. Myers was introduced to the assemblage by the chairman of the evening, Mr. C. D. Crosby, Chairman of the Board of Education.

Mr. Crosby, in a brief chairman's address, expressed his pleasure at being present for such an occasion, not only as a citizen but as a representative of the Belleville Board of Education.

Scholarships Gift of Manufacturers

The highlighting feature of Mr. Crosby's remarks was his mention of special scholarships made possible through the generosity of manufacturers of Belleville. A total of $850. was donated by manufacturers, and on behalf of the Board of Education, Mr. Crosby expressed his sincere gratefulness.

Mr. Crosby went on to speak in glowing terms of the teaching staff of the Belleville Collegiate. To the graduates he concluded with these thoughts: "You have arrived at one more milestone in your lives. Success to you in whatever profession you chose. It lies within the man to do the things he desires to do. With courage and faith and the tools to do the work, he will arrive at the summit in time."

674 Ex. Students in Services.

Mr. Harold Mott, of the teaching staff, gave a resume of the school war effort. "Boys numbering 646 and girls totalling 28 have joined the service," he said. "Fifty-three have paid the supreme sacrifice, and nine have been decorated for gallantry."

The Valedictory address was delivered by Stanley Wiggins, who was introduced by Mr. W. S. Turner. "What is the meaning of a Valedictory address?" he asked in his opening remarks.

"It means farewell. So, on behalf of the graduating students, I say farewell to B.C.I."

Class Valedictory.

Stanley told of entering high school, and of the first year's experience with ideas so new and so different from those of Public school. "We had to adjust ourselves" he said. "In Grade ten, however, we had a better idea of what to accept. In Grade eleven, many boys left to join the services. In that same year, Mr. Turner became Principal of the High School. We then went to Grade twelve and when we completed our course we received our secondary school diplomas.

"In our final year, many boys received their call-ups. The teachers did a splendid job in drilling us in the form which bridged the way between high school and University.

Wartime Years.

"We were attending high school in all the years of war, entering the institution in 1939 when war broke out. During that time, our minds and consequently our ideas changed. We gained much from the extra-curriculum ideas, the Glee Club, the band, and personal relationships we made with our teachers".

In again saying farewell to B.C.I. Stanley said, "It has fitted us for the tasks we undertake". He expressed gratitude to the teachers, and to the parents who made this possible.

Mr. W. S. Turner, principal of the High School, extended thanks to everyone who had contributed to the success of the Commencement Exercises.

More and More Education.

Presiding for the afternoon session was Mr. W. H. Finkle, in the absence of Mr. A. H. Jones, chairman of the Advisory-Vocational Committee, Board of Education. Mr. Finkle congratulated the scholars on their fine achievement.

"More and more education is stressed today for everyone", he stated. "We must learn how to produce. By production, we will be strong. Only the strong will be free".

Invocation at the afternoon exercises was given by Rabbi G. Felder, of the Jewish Synagogue. In the evening, it was delivered by Rev. H. O. Eastman, minister of Victoria Avenue Baptist Church.

Delightful interludes of music and song were contributed to the program by the School Glee Club and the school band under the direction of Mr. Geo. N. Maybee.

Following the commencement exercises in the evening, the annual graduation dance was held in the Girls' Gymnasium.

The Experts Say

By the Canadian Press

Ottawa, Nov. 30 —(CP)— APPLE TALK: Most varieties of apples are at their best and juiciest in early fall. By wintertime, when they've been stored a while, they made need a little pepping up as far as flavor is concerned.

The economists of the Agriculture Department Consumer Section suggest some ways of doing this with two of the most popular apple dishes: applesauce and apple pie.

APPLE SAUCE: It takes well to shavings of lemon rind, nutmeg, cinnamon, or a little peppermint flavoring. Mint flavored apple sauce is especially good with roast lamb.

Thick apple sauce placed in a baked pie shell and topped with a sprinkling of grated cheese makes a speedy and delicious dessert.

APPLE PIE: Variations of this good old standby include Apple Custard Pie. Pour uncooked custard, made with egg yolks, over sliced apples in an uncooked shell and bake until the custard is set and the apples tender. Use the whites for a meringue topping. A cheese, oatmeal or wholewheat pastry add new flavor to apple pie too.

STOCKING CARE: With sheer stockings in short supply these days the best way to make your precious pairs last longer is to give them the care you used to give nylons . . remember? Wash them with the greatest care, says Byrne Sanders, director of the Prices Board's Consumer Branch, and allow them at least 36 and preferably 48 hours to dry before wearing.

SWEET POTATOES: At this season of the year when sweet potatoes are at their best it's good to know that besides being delicious party fare — American GI's had them for their Thanksgiving dinner last week — —the Nutrition Division recommends them for their nutritive value.

Sweet potatoes are an energy food, easy to digest and an excellent source of vitamin A. They belong to that group of "green, leafy and yellow vegetables" that Canada's food rules advise serving daily. Their vitamin A helps to maintain health and reduce susceptibility to disease. Vitamin C, in which sweet potatoes are comparable to white potatoes, helps to promote growth, helps in the formation of teeth and in building up resistance to disease.

COAL SAVERS: You have probably heard the slogan for this season's coal shovellers: "Save one shovelful in five," but that doesn't mean the powers-that-be expect you to freeze this winter. It does mean not to waste a fuel for which there are added wartime needs.

To make sure your house is not a coal waster check these: Is your house well insulated? Do the storm windows fit snugly? Is the temperature kept at 69 degrees fahrenheit . . better for health as well as the coal bin. Is the air in the house fresh? Fresh air is easier to heat than stale as well as being much better for those living in it.

WASHING MACHINES: There is good news about these laundry day lighteners . . authorization has been given for manufacture of an additional 10,000 machines this year. Shortage of workers and difficulties in getting important parts from the United States hindered production last year when a smaller quota was allowed. But this year there's light ahead.

Fashion Flashes

LOOKING ABOUT, it is clearly evident that the purple tones are on their way out, giving way to fuchsia shades. Light fuchsia is used for a long silk crepe dinner dress with a feathery front design from shoulders across the bodice and slanting down the skirt in slightly deeper sequins.

NEVER NICER is the verdict on spring prints. Black crepe printed in white wisteria and soft green leaves is used for an afternoon dress with collarless neckline with a deep slit, and draped peplum that works into a centre front cascade on the skirt.

NO, IT'S NOT ERMINE, but how pretty it is — that cape of snowy white lamb made for wear over youthful evening fashions. Wide shoulder yoke, collarless neckline, separate bow-tied scarf to match the bright fuchsia lining are details of a pretty evening wrap.

PRETTY hats are available in conservative designs as well as in the dress-up and so-called glamor variety. There's a beautiful beret of pistachio green felt trimmed with flat sprays of matching roses tinting to brown at the edges to match a cobwebby brown veil.

MUCH NICER, so we think, than a coat piled indiscriminately with fur, is a coat of velvety black woollen, lined in red satin and made with round collar and narrow rounded tuxedo edge of mink.

HUGE COAL SHIPMENTS

Coal shipments on the Great Lakes in 1944 are expected to equal 61,500,000 tons.

SEVERE BLITZ DAMAGE

German bombings have damaged 2,750,000 houses in the United Kingdom.

ARMY-NAVY GAME BIG ATTRACTION OF THE SEASON

Army Favored to Break Six-Year Domination of Navy Squad

By FRITZ HOWELL
(Associated Press Sport Writer)

And, as the chips went into the pot for the municipal stadium showdown between the United States' two top-ranking elevens, plenty was at stake. To all-victorious West Point victory meant the National title and the first unbeaten season since 1916.

Navy, 14-point or 3-to-1 underdog, had to win to stretch its victory string over the cadets to six straight, longest domination in the bitter pigskin rivalry dating back to 1890. Of the previous 44 contests Army won 22, Navy 19 and three were deadlocks.

A portion of the expected crowd of 70,000 purchased war bonds reported worth $50,000,000 to obtain tickets after the annual classic was transferred from the comparative seclusion of nearby Annapolis.

A two-week layoff from competition put both squads in tip-top physical shape for the crucial clash, and each coach fractured all the rules by admitting his team had a chance to win the contest getting under way at 2 p.m. E.D.T.

In winning eight straight this year Army rolled up 481 points to 28 for the opposition, while Navy counted 220 against 64 in winning six of eight.

Sport Roundup

By HUGH FULLERTON, JR.
(AP Sport Writer)

New York, Dec. 2 —(AP)— So many new pro footballs leagues have sprung up in the United States in the last few months that the prospective customers have begun to distinguish them by the names of their organizers . . . The two good names—National and American—already have been pre-empted, so why not go all the way and officially name them for famous football figures of the past? . . . The "Walter Camp" league or "Jim Thorpe" league would be a handier tag than "All-American" or "Trans-America." . . . The same idea might be applied to the minor baseball leagues that will be revived or started up after the war . . . Baseball has shown a great lack of originality in making its circuits after states and sections, so why not honor some of the baseball greats identified with the regions in which the leagues operate? . . . Of course, it might be hard to get the right players for a "Dizzy Dean" or "Bugs Raymond" league,

SAINTS LEADING OHA SENIOR RACE BY SECOND WIN

Defeat Toronto Staffords With Concessi Enjoying a Field Day

By The Canadian Press

St. Catharines Saints attained undisputed leadership in the senior O.H.A. series at the expense of Toronto Staffords last night by making a runaway of the fixture on St. Catharines ice 11-4 for their second straight win of the young season. Staffords fell deeper into the cellar on their third successive loss against no wins.

Umbo Concessi, ace of the Saints, enjoyed a field day with five goals to return him to the top of the league column for individual scoring while Wallace had a nice evening with no less than six assists. Frits and Tottle notched two goals each and Bellinger and Goble one apiece. The Toronto scorers were Moorehouse, Dafoe, Carr and Strongman. There was nary a penalty.

In the junior "A" series, Port Colborne, finally won a game, after 3 defeats, by turning back Toronto Marlboros 6-4 at the Port, thus leaving Galt Red Wings in sole possession of the bottom rung in the standing.

Most everybody had a finger in the scoring pie because Matheson of the Ports was the only puck-chaser to find the mark for a brace of goals. For the winners, markers were registered by Savicky, Cunningham, Kodatsky and Bowen. Marlies' goals went to McMahney, Lovelace, Raglin and Mitrsiak. There were 11 penalties.

KATAN TEAMED WITH DUNLOP IN RETURN BOUT

Watson and Collins Laugh as Dunlop Blames Rasputin for Defeat

When Al Dunlop accused Ivan Rasputin of leaving him in the wrestling lurch during Wednesday night's team grappling bout at the Hume Arena, apparently "Bunny" had some grounds for his accusations. At least he had sufficient verbal power to convince Promoter Frank Tunney he had battled "Whipper" Watson and Tom Collins practically alone and Tunney went for Dunlop's plea for a new partner just like a cat goes for milk.

"Give me 'Honest John' Katan for a partner. Toss the rules and regulations aside and let us at 'Baby-face' Watson and that 'Pretty-face' Collins. We'll show the fans what a team of he-men like Dunlop and Katan can do to such alleged scientific grapplers as Lawson's pet and that Buffalo pretty boy," challenged Dunlop, who was quickly accommodated.

After all Promoter Tunney always has an eye on the gate receipts and realized the drawing power of a team like Dunlop and Katan with the result Belleville wrestling patrons are about to see the curtain rung down on the 1944 wrestling season with the greatest attraction ever attempted in the Hume Arena, when team wrestling again goes in a battle royal. Without comment Collins and Watson merely signed the contract papers and then reverted to Whipper Bill's private training camp in East York Township to perfect a new style of team wrestling for the benefit of Belleville fans.

To start this colossal show off next Wednesday two guaranteed Queensbury A.C. preliminaries will open the show.

What's Doing in Sport

Mark Fry, an unknown player from Oakland, Calif., grabbed the lead in the 72-hole open golf tournament at San Francisco yesterday with a 69 for the first round against par 72. One of five golfing Fry brothers and a former California State open champion, he was two-up on John Geertsen of Salt Lake City and George Fazio of New Jersey. The co-favorites, Byron Nelson, winner last year, and Sam Snead, victor in Portland's open last week, turned in 72s, as did Fred Wood of Vancouver, B.C.

Because of a shortage of attendants, the wives of Geertsen and Leonard Ott, the latter of Denver, served as caddies. Both women pushed small carts to transport clubs around the course.

A navy team from Quebec, representing H.M.C.S. Montcalm, has been booked to play five clubs of the Eastern U.S. Hockey League in a series of games opening against the Olympics at Boston Jan. 26. The matches will count as league fixtures for the America teams.

New York State derived a revenue of $27,847,214 from pari-mutuel betting from the tracks within its territory during the past season, an increase of almost 50 per cent over the receipts for 1943, the previous record.

A crowd of 10,446 racing fans, instead of the 25,000 predicted by President James Donn of Miami, attended yesterday's opening card at the revived Gulfstream Park track. Outsiders, Firepower and Good Going, won the two divisions of the $2,500 inaugural handicap.

It was announced at Hagerstown, Md., last night that Toronto Leafs of the International Baseball League would train in the Hagerstown stadium next spring, through arrangements made with the parent club, Philadelphia Athletics. It was also stated that first-baseman Harry Davis had been appointed manager of the Toronto team.

LEAFS CAN REGAIN LEADERSHIP OF NATIONAL LOOP

Rangers Fresh From Win Over Canadiens Play in Toronto

By BOB NIELSEN
Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Toronto Maple Leafs can regain the leadership of the National Hockey League tonight by beating the team that gave them the opportunity —New York Rangers. The Blueshirts, in upsetting Canadiens 7-5 at Montreal Thursday, froze the Frenchmen's margin over Toronto at a single point.

Although Rangers are winless in two games with the Leafs this season, they may be hard to beat. In their only previous appearance at Maple Leaf Gardens Frank Boucher's men chilled opening night fans by holding a 1-0 margin most of the game, only to succumb to a two-goal Leaf rally in the final period. The R home-ice showing was less impressive, ending in a 6-3 defeat.

The New Yorkers, heartened by the Montreal victory and reporting no casualties, are in prime mental and physical shape to extend their newly-cast "Giant Killer" role. The Leafs are not so fortunate. They still lack two main offensive cogs, wingers Sweeney Schriner and Lorne Carr, through injuries. Wally Stanowski, former star Toronto defenceman recently discharged from the air force, has been turning out with his old mates but will not play until he learns whether the Canadian army wants him.

A Ranger victory would lift them to within two points of the fourth-place Boston Bruins.

Cornwall Cookies Lose First Game On Home Ice

Cornwall, Dec. 2 —(AP)— Cornwall Cookies lost their first game on home ice last night when beaten by Valleyfield Braves 3-2 in an Interprovincial Hockey League tilt here. The victory sent the Braves further ahead in the standing, giving them a six-point edge over Cornwall.

Bobby Carragher started the scoring for the Cookies with Frank Burr earning the assist and for a time it seemed like the Cookies were going to continue their winning streak. Toward the end of the first period, Bissette equalled the score and in the second period went ahead on Joannette's goal. Bissette added another for Valleyfield in the third and Marshall scored the last Cornwall counter.

Toronto, Dec. 2 —(CP)— In whimsical mood the other night, Dick Irwin cooked up a scheme, purely imaginary, for paying his players on the merit system. Dick's idea, as outlined to Elmer (Montreal Herald) Ferguson, is approximately to wit: Sign each man to a $1 contract, then set a maximum rate of $100 for each of the 50 scheduled games—making a maximum salary of $5,001 . . . Then, according to the kind of a game he played, each man would get $100, $80, $60 and so on down the scale . . . Thinking sadly of the 2-0 defeat handed his Montreal Canadiens by Toronto last Saturday, Dick averred heatedly there were a couple of men that night who wouldn't have received a cent. In fact, they should have paid Irwin $25 each "to soothe my harried nerves . . ."

International Brigade:

Mike Rodden of the Kingston Whig-Standard isn't at all certain enough French-Canadian players could be gathered together to form a football team. In fact, says Rodden, if Eddie Quinn of Montreal enrolled all the Habitant players who displayed any marked brilliance in the Canadian game for the past 25 years, "he would still have to call on their Irish, English and Scots" to make up a team. If Eddie has visions of a professional team made up exclusively, or almost so, of French Canadians . . .

Here and There:

Vancouver baseball men are apparently none too hopeful they will ever get a franchise in the Pacific Coast League, and are turning in other directions. It's reported the Western International League may operate again next year in Spokane, Tacoma, Salem, Yakima, Vancouver, and Victoria. . . . Frank McCool, Toronto goalie, is plugging along just behind Montreal's Bill Durnan for the N.H.L. netkeeping honors—all that and stomach ulcers and a broken toe as well, so Coach Hap Day just disclosed. We wonder what McCool would have done if he had been in perfect health. . . .

Fred G. Chamberlain.

"We now have in Belleville first class pavement roadways and walks, all of which are practically paid for and we must see to it that they are kept in good condition even to the extent of raising the tax rate to do so but this should not be necessary. What is necessary now is a program for the development of our natural facilities such as water front, parks, playgrounds, etc., slum clearance, housing plans and sewage disposal and a vigorous campaign of publicity setting forth the advantages of Belleville as an ideal industrial location. This will mean some large capital expenditures and an increase in our capital debt, but if we are going to be a progressive city we cannot sit back and say our capital debt is being reduced each year which would naturally mean a much lowered tax rate. If we are going to progress and I trust we are, we must spend, but the expenditure can only be met by taxation. I believe each year some definite plan should be laid out and carried to completion as much as possible on a pay as you go system keeping a strict watch on the tax rate that it does not soar to the figure it was a few years ago.

Must Spend Some Money.

Other cities of comparable size to us, without half the natural facilities to develop, have far more to offer than we have and I feel it is now high time Belleville awake to the fact that we have these facilities and we must avail ourselves of them, spend some money and make it the best place in Canada to live.

I have held no chairmanship during the past year, however, I have endeavored to follow the activities of all departments of the city and we have had some very important decisions to make. The chairman of Finance has given you a most complete report on the finances of the city, which shows Belleville to be in a very high position in this respect. Our debenture debt is gradually being reduced due to the maturity of our bonds, but this does not mean that our debt will eventually be wiped out. If we are to be a progressive city we must face the fact that we will be called upon to issue debentures for further extensive improvements required, and, while I as a tax payer do not wish to see the tax rate increased, still I think that sometimes too much stress is laid on cutting the tax rate to the detriment of the progress of the city.

Avoid Capital Expenditure.

During these past years of war we have had to avoid all expenditures on capital account. You are now being asked to ballot on the initial [illegible] for [illegible] esplanade along the river front on the west side of Front Street. In the very near future it will be necessary to face the fact that we will have to provide a system of sewage disposal and, if we are to keep abreast of the times as a tourist centre, we will surely have to clean up our harbor and water front. The wall around Victoria Park, to which at one time numerous visiting yachts could tie up, has been allowed to deteriorate to such an extent that there is now no accommodation for visiting yachts and consequently Belleville is black listed as a port of call. This condition could have been avoided by a small annual expenditure on the park wall each year. This is one instance of cutting the tax rate to the bone and letting capital investment go by the board.

Clarence R. Clapp.

After thanking his sponsors for the nomination Ald. Clapp stated he had served for six years in the council and had been chairman of Public Works, Fire and this year Regional Planning and pointed out that he nor the council was in favor of issuing debentures to build the Riverside Drive and that the passing of the bylaw did not necessarily mean that the whole $50,000 was going to be spent. He spoke of the street signs and stated all of them would be in place in the near future, but the work had been held up by the labor situation. Ald. Clapp stated he had opposed the closing of the gas plant and that $218,000 had to be paid by 1960 and he thought that money should be protected as well as the initial investment. "I have always advocated expert opinion being sought on the gas plant and that is what the Department of Municipal Affairs told us when they interviewed the council," said the speaker. He stated he was not in favor of the two-year term for aldermen and asked for support at the polls on Monday in conclusion.

H. J. Clarke.

"For the past five years I have represented you in council and for the past four years my associates have entrusted me with the chairmanship of the most important committee of the council, that of executive or finance. It entails a great deal of work outside a council as it is my duties to satisfy myself that the payments are properly authorized before countersigning the checks. And it is no small job to so examine and countersign checks covering upwards of half a million dollars, mainly in small amounts.

As chairman, you will naturally expect me to give you a general idea of your financial position, and ladies and gentlemen, what I say does not refer to me personally but to the entire council.

During 1944 no new debentures have been issued, but on the contrary your debenture debt has been steadily falling during my tenure as a member of council.

When I was first elected for 1940 your S. F. debenture debt was $[illegible]. Today it is $229,600 and $12,000 of this will be paid off on Jan. 1, 1945. You will understand that I am speaking in round numbers, but they are approximately correct.

Debenture Debt

Your serial debenture debt is now slightly over 1 million dollars ($1,108,932.85) and of this $84,600 are waterworks debentures carried as to principal and interest by the Utilities Commission.

During 1944 the following serial debentures were finally retired and cancelled: Pavement debentures $146,663.62; side walks, $16,608.11; relief $51,500; Total $214,766.73.

In 1945 the following will disappear: Jan. 1, sewers $4,348.83; Schools $7,704; July 1, sidewalks $15,789.35, May 1, highways $41,500, Total $69,341.18.

From our auditor's report on our sinking fund, presented to council, it was found that considerable amounts had been placed in that fund, that should not have been placed there at all. Without going into details, it was found that the S. F. was over accumulated to the amount of $88,949.53. (I have the details if any one wishes to see them.) A committee from council waited on the Minister of Municipal Affairs and the Municipal Board and after presenting our case to them, we were given permission to take from the over-accumulation the following: $5,500 profits on the sale of debentures to pay a maturing debenture to be applied against the operating deficit in the gas department to the end of 1943. We'll still have to pay them $4,500 to wipe out this operating deficit to the end of 1944.

Given Authority

We were also given authority to use $18,000 of the surplus to recondition the pavements that have been fully paid for and are showing signs of breaking up. You have seen the results of this treatment and I believe you will agree that a good job has been done.

It has been suggested from time to time that we use all that over-accumulation in S. F. to reduce the tax-rate. Ladies and gentlemen, that is a legal impossibility, and as long as I am in your council, the law will be respected. Money once placed in S. F. whether rightly or wrongly, can only be taken out on the authority of the Municipal Board and they are extremely careful to protect the interests of our bond holders and rightly so.

Special Property

When I entered council five years ago the city was carrying a large amount of property, acquired at tax sales. This was largely vacant lots and producing nothing, about 600 of them. I was made chairman of a special committee to sell this property I have held that position ever since, except for a few months when the late Ald. Thomas Marshall acted as chairman. At present the committee consists of our efficient Comptroller and myself. In 1940 we sold nearly $10,000 worth of this property. Today we own very few lots, suitable for residential purposes. A few weeks ago we took Mr. Carver of the Ont. Intel. around the city to see the working men's homes that have been erected on these lots. At the end of our tour he remarked "There are over 300 of these nice little houses." Incidentally the taxable assessment has gone up materially, and more assessment means more help in raising the necessary revenue.

By-laws

You are being asked to vote on two by-laws (1) To change the mode of electing your aldermen. It was thought that the proposed plan would ensure continuity since each council would contain at least half with previous experience. It was also thought that with only seven to be elected after the coming vote, you would have a larger field from which to select those seven. I would not influence your vote if I could. Vote as you see fit.

(2) The other by law involves a considerable amount of money, a very large amount. You are asked to authorize a debenture issue for $50,000 to start the Riverside Drive. The ultimate cost will be far more. Vote as you choose but bear in mind that by the time this work is completed the present vote of $50,000 will look quite small.

I have served you to the best of my ability for five years, four of them as chairman of the most important committee of the council. You know me and you know my record. If it has met with your approval, ask your support on Monday, and if I am elected, and I expect to be, I shall continue to give you my best service in whatever committee my colleagues may place me.

William Harvey.

Mr. Harvey stated he had served the city in an official capacity on the Board of Education and in the council for 32 years and he was pleased to see organized labor taking part in municipal affairs. He promised a year of service if again elected and wished all the compliments of the season.

"I have served on the Board of Education and the city council for some years" said Ald. Hyde and "I make no apology for any vote that I have given and I have always voted in my belief for the best interest of the greatest number of the electors." He stated he could see no advantage in the two-year term for alderman and it was his intention if elected to pursue a course that would eventually clean up the river and harbor. "Personally I don't see how this can be accomplished without the installation of a sewage disposal plant," said Mr. Hyde. He was of the opinion that the city lacked park space for recreation and play grounds for children and he asked for the support of the electors at the polls on Monday.

Lorne McDougall.

Ald. McDougall stated that he was a strong advocate of industrial expansion and sewage disposal in this city and if elected would bend every effort to bring this about. "I am sure that the city is going to be ordered to instal a sewage disposal plant at anytime by the Department of Health in Toronto and it will entail an expenditure of some $600,000 but it will be well worth the cost," said the speaker. He showed that Kingston has appropriated a million dollars for this work. He was also in favor of flood control and would seek to have a Moira River survey the same as was held at Port Hope. He defended the two-year term for aldermen stating that the Board of Education and Utility Commission members were elected in this way because he said "electors only vote for five or six at anytime and by a two-year term for the seven highest a high calibre of aldermen would result. Ald. McDougall voiced his approval of the Riverside Drive but that it should be built gradually and he was also in favor of a municipal airport for this city.

Alderman Robert Pringle.

Using a current police court case of four youths sentenced to a penitentiary term, Alderman Pringle advocated the construction of a recreational centre for this city.

Speaking with reference to industry he stated that an industrial program was a question that vitally affected Belleville. For the past four years he said, he had contacted industrial centres and Belleville had ranked as high as any town in Central Ontario.

"If the industrial program as laid down by the committee is carried out, houses outside the city will be in the centre very shortly," he said.

Alderman Pringle stated that the gas plant must be maintained in order to hold city industry here. If necessary it should be maintained by subsidy like any other losing utility. The council must be prepared to spend money on this utility for the city will not have the plant unless it is prepared to pay for it. The question has come up that the plant should be placed under different management. "In my opinion, it should," he said.

Alderman J. J. Trudeau.

Stating that he had served one year as chairman of the Tourist and Publicity Committee Alderman Trudeau urged for a city council ready to take advantage of post-war tourist trade. During his tenure as chairman, many improvements had been made in the tourist park here. Trees and buildings had been moved. Decoration had taken place and plumbing and other facilities bettered. As a whole the park had been generally improved and this, he felt, had been an important item in attracting tourists.

"In 1942 tourist trade here had been 17 per cent. In 1943 it increased to 33 per cent, and I feel that we can look forward to a big increase after the war in this important industry. Belleville, I feel, should be ready to take advantage of this," he said.

He stated he was ready to support anything that tended toward the betterment of the city.

Alderman Newton Wilber.

A Front Street business man for a number of years. Alderman Wilber felt that his business experience fitted him as a city councillor. He had served well during the past year, he felt and if elected would use his best judgment for the betterment of the city and its citizens.

Alderman Harold Woodley.

Unavoidably absent due to the fact that he had to attend a function of the Collegiate Institute. Alderman Harold Woodley was represented by Alderman Clarke who really can appeal for the support of the taxpayers at the forthcoming elections."

J. Bentley.

"I am a new man in municipal government," stated Mr. Jule Bentley, "and if elected will conduct a straight labor ticket. I have some experience and ability in labor and feel that I am capable of using it to good advantage."

What he wanted the people to know, he stated, was the fact that he was not representing any political or labor organization. He was representing labor strictly as a personal matter, "for Labor has been a side issue in previous governments of the city". He deplored the river and harbor conditions and stated that now he had some time on his hands, he felt he could be of some use to the laboring people."

Reuben Cooper.

In a very brief address, Mr. Cooper reminded his audience that he had been a member of city council in 1940 but resigned to join the army. He promised to do the best for the residents and for the city in which they lived for he felt Belleville should be the finest city of its size in Canada. In his experience in travelling from coast to coast he had seen but few its equal and he would like to see it prosper. He respectfully requested support.

Edward E. Follwell.

"Apparently those present are interested in civic affairs. There has been considerable said about the lack of interest in municipal business, but I sincerely hope the electors show more interest on Monday than they have here tonight," stated E. E. Follwell, who has served on the Board of Education for two years and now offers his services as alderman.

"Two years ago you placed me at the top of the polls for Board of Education, during which time I endeavored to advance that confidence. Today I am glad to report that the Belleville Collegiate Institute is rated as one of the best in Ontario. I might add that during my regime with the Board I helped to forward the kindergarten movement and also the provision of school grounds for the purpose of free skating rinks for our children," stated Mr. Follwell, who assured his listeners he was in favor of the establishment of a civic park. "We haven't a good municipal park in Belleville and that is one of the principal ventures towards the establishment of prosperity for the future of this city," concluded Mr. Follwell as he spoke in favor of rehabilitation program for the boys returning from overseas. "However, the principal idea of a democracy today is to get out and vote, that is our heritage," he added.

AT THE McCARTHY — Boris Karloff with the woman he loves and murders, played by June Vincent, in the Technicolor musical drama, "The Climax," now at the McCarthy Theatre.

Charles McKenzie

Stating he was new in civic affairs, Mr. McKenzie said he was offering himself for alderman with the thought he could be useful in the service of the city and its residents.

"Our firm has been in business and as a property owner in Foster Ward for the past 20 years I feel that it is time Foster Ward had a live energetic representation in the council. I also feel, that this city is large enough, if properly administrated, to look after its own, especially in the post war period. Industry and business should combine to give all a square deal", concluded the speaker.

Clare Ridley.

"I represent a labor organization in Belleville. As a matter of fact I'm proud to say I am president of the local branch of the U.A.W.-C.I.O. Labor is making a stand on this continent and Belleville should be represented when this movement forges to the front. I am in favor of the one-arm labor movement of the Political Action Committee, that was strongly instrumental in the election of President Roosevelt in the recent election in the United States.

"We have never had a real labor man on the city council and I'm here to say our organization is working in the interest of the working people of this city and as their representative I have the interests of the workers at heart," assured Mr. Ridley as he urged the labor class to exercise their franchise in favor of a labor candidate.

A. G. Stackhouse.

"After being a property owner in Belleville for eight years I am offering my services to the city of my adoption. When I came here this city was known as 'Belleville the Beautiful' and I might say we have taken care of our street pavements and other improvements, but what of the sidewalks that are used by the pedestrians? They are sadly in need or repairs and I for one want to see that it is done.

"It has been rumored about that I am being sponsored for groups or parties. That is not true. I offer myself to the electors on Monday as an independent taxpayer and property owner and if elected will serve in that capacity", assured Mr. Stackhouse as he assured his listeners he would be able to vote in the interest of the property owner on such questions as a proposed sewage disposal plant, water front and post war questions.

Isaac Stephenson.

"Having been a citizen and business man in Belleville for over 30 years again I am seeking the support of the electors for council. I have served on the Board of Education and Board of Health in Belleville. As you know I have two sons serving overseas, both of whom have been wounded fighting for democracy. Here I'm willing to fight and serve you for the same purpose. I am satisfied I can do what previous aldermen have promised and failed to do on such subjects as the esplanade, sewage disposal plant and gas plant, all of which could have been a success if properly managed," assured Mr. Stephenson as he added the season's greetings.

* * * *

When the hour became late Thos. Gill, Ray Vickers and G. E. Thompson were absent when called upon to address the meagre gathering.

Everett Wood.

"This is my first time on a public platform. I haven't been in the council before and therefore have nothing to be sorry about.

"I have lived in Belleville for 18 years, of which I have been in business for 15. If elected I will work in the interest of the city at large and lastly I can assure you I am willing to learn and work for the interest of Belleville," Mr. Wood stated.

CHAPTER 4

"His name is Arthur Stephen Fraser Fox. He's Canadian," said Fanny, not daring to show how pleased she was at the reaction to this announcement. "But I was going to say," Fanny went on "was that you will be the greatest blessing to my mother after I go away. You see, she's delicate and she only goes out to walk around the garden or perhaps be taken to a concert or a little drive with Dad, and she gets lonely. My sister Nini is away at school, and that means that Rod will be the only one at home—Rod and Marcel."

"Marcel?"

"He's a young doctor — French. D'you speak French?"

"A little. I don't know how well. We had it at St. Dominic's."

"Well, he speaks perfect English, of course; he's been here since he was about fifteen, I think, but he loves to gabble his own tongue. He's living with us; Dad knows his adopted mother—He's a war orphan. She found him in France after the big war and educated him—medical school, year in Edinburgh, everything. Now he's doing post-graduate work, and Rod and he were pals in college, so he lives with us. The reason," Fanny went on, "that I felt a little sorry about you and Larry Ingersoll—who is really terribly nice—was that I feel sure that both Marcel Villard and my brother Rod will fall for you in a big, convincing way!"

Dusk had closed down upon the world when they reachd San Francisco. They went all the way to the water, skirting the cliffs above the Golden Gate and stopping finally at the entrance to a pleasant walled garden, in which stood a gray timbered house with white doorway and window sashes. The house was one of a rambling, garden-enclosed row that faced the city, standing only a few feet from the cliff, below which the waters of the bay rolled pebbles upon a narrow strand. To the left were the outlines of the Gate, spanned by a mystic arch of bridge in the dimming light; to the right the bay spread itself between Angel Island and the Sausalito shores, with a chain of tiny, faraway stars twinkling to show where lay Berkeley and Oakland.

There was a lovely brightness and color about the house. White-curtained windows followed the stairway up; flowers everywhere; chairs and davenports covered with gay-flowered chintzes. It was not like Loveday's conception of a city house; there was an airness and spaciousness about it infinitely homelike and welcoming even at this first bewildered glance. One would never feel shut in in this house, shadowed under trees; and the moving waters of the bay below, and the Gate where ships came out and in, and the far mountains glinting with the lights of a thousand homes.

In a spacious back bedroom, in a pillowed chair close to a stretch of wide windows, a gray-haired woman with a fresh, smiling face was seated. She held out her hand as Fan and Loveday came in. Loveday, going forward to take the hand and to stand shy and nervous and smiling before Laura St. George, felt herself drawn down for a kiss and seated on a chair beside her.

"Well, Loveday Gurney," said the motherly voice, "I'm so glad to have you here!" Loveday's eyes filled; she could not speak.

"Come on, Loveday, I'll show you to your room. You're next to me, and we'll have to mark up our bath hours the way they do on ships." Fanny got to her feet, tall and graceful and weary, her fur coat over her arm. "Isn't she nice?" she asked her mother.

Mrs. St. George's wise eyes moved to Loveday smilingly.

"She's lovely. She's so different from all your Sicilian bandits that I'm going to love looking at her. Oh, here's Marc."

A young dark-eyed man had come into the room; he hesitated when he saw that the expected stranger had arrived. Fanny and Loveday paused on their way to the door, and Loveday saw that the newcomer was small and sinewy, with strong glasses, long hanging arms and big hands, and a dark, smiling, monkeylike face.

"Mademoiselle." The bright eyes were full of admiration and interest; Loveday and he, whose destinies were to be so strangely interlocked, looked at each other a moment, then the girls went on to their own apartments.

For the first few dazed weeks, when everything she had ever known had been swept away from her and everything about her was new and strange, Loveday lived much in the pleasant bedroom of the mother of the family. Fanny was taken up with wedding plans and brought them all, with engagement presents, dress samples, fashion magazines, announcement lists, into her mother's apartment for endless consultations. Rod came in for a few minutes every morning and evening. Warren St. George was usually there when he was at home. But there were quiet midday hours when Loveday and her hostess had the house to themselves, and at those times Loveday was the happiest.

Mrs. St. George, despite her semi-invalided condition, was an active worker in a dozen different causes and had many private charities as well. In the pleasant foggy mornings they worked away busily at desk and telephone, and at these times Laura St. George chatted away easily about her husband and children; Loveday was enabled to see through her pleasant gossip a hundred phases of her new family and their lives that might have been much longer a mystery to her. The mother's pride in them, her old nursery anxieties, the problems that Fanny, Rodney, and Nini had presented in turn were of absorbing interest to Loveday; sometimes her "Aunt Laura" would laugh at the serious face with which she considered them. them.

There was an older son, of course, Chris. Loveday remembered Chris. He was the big brother who with such superb efficiency and strength and general grown-up superiority had lifted her down from the shed roof upon which the teasing other children had stranded her when she had been a frightened little girl. Evidently magnificence was still the attribute of Chris.

Chris, in his family's eyes, was different from everybody else in the world. Nobody was ever so successful or so handsome or so clever or so funny as Chris. At the State University in Berkeley he had carried all literary honors casually; almost, Loveday suspected, disdainfully. He had gone on to Harvard for a post-graduate course in letters, somewhat to his father's uneasiness.

"But before that year was over Chris had sold his play," his mother told Loveday in quiet triumph. "That answered Dad's misgivings as to his being an idler—playing with writing."

"Chris was how old then?"

"Twenty-four."

"Imagine it! And did you all go on to see the play?" Loveday demanded at this point.

"No. I don't know," Mrs. St. George said thoughtfully, "that we realised at the time exactly how important that was, what an extraordinary thing for a boy his age to do. It was only afterward, when they made him a member of clubs, when he went to the London opening, that we realised that our duckling was a swan."

It was said with a gentle laugh of motherly pride. Loveday's eyes were glowing.

"He was married then?"

"Oh yes." Was there the slightest flagging in tone, the least possible flagging of enthusiasm? Loveday fancied she perceived it sometimes when Merle was mentioned.

But the St. Georges were loyal. Merle was Christopher's wife; by that circumstance alone she was above criticism.

Rodney, Loveday thought, must be entirely eclipsed by the brilliant older brother. Rodney was as nice as he could be, but dull. Little excitable Marc Villard was much more amusing than Rodney and Larry Ingersoll far exceeded him in magnetism and force.

"How nice things can happen!" Marc said enthusiastically one day when he and Loveday were walking on the windy cliffs.

"Like what, Marc."

"Like—well, you are not there, and then you are there, and we are all in love with you! We are rich before, but the thing happens and we are richer."

"You say that so nicely! But I can't quite imagine what I would have done if Uncle Warren hadn't come to me when Mother died."

"But what else can he do? We are at breakfast when your telegram arrives. 'My God, that child! Owen's child,' he says, and within an hour he is off. And Fanny and Rod, they follow,- and then they bring you here. And believe me, you do us all good and are beloved."

She laughed, although tears were in her eyes.

"You're all just overwhelmingly good to me. But it's the way you put things, Marc. 'You are beloved.'"

"Well, are you not?"

"I hope I am."

"Then how would you say it?"

"I suppose I'd have said, 'They all like you.'"

"My English!" he said ruefully.

"Your English is simply amazing. If I could ever speak French like that! Did you speak it when you were quite small?"

"Yes, I think so. I was born only three years before the great war, you know, and shifted about from place to place. We were of Lorraine. I can remember moving from some place—they were driving cows, I know. . . ."

"Oh, what a terrible memory!"

"Then someone telling me that it was peace, and horns blowing, and my nurse crying with her apron over her eyes—and the ship—we were on a ship."

"Coming to America?"

"To China. And we must have gone back, for I remember India again, and riding on a camel, and then Paris. And I was fifteen before we came to America to live."

"Your father and mother had you through all this?"

"No, they were dead. There were many of us, I suppose—small children, whose lives were completely broken up. And then a kind American lady took charge of me, sent me to college and to medical college, et voila! And I come to San Francisco just in time to meet the lovely Miss Gurney."

"I thought," Loveday said, laughing at him through a veil of blown hair, "that the St. Georges were being especially kind to me, and I was afraid it wouldn't last. But now I see that they're that way to everyone. They're just—that sort."

"And Rodney will be more than kind to you when you will let him," Marc said seriously, catching her elbow so that he might steady her—or rather that they might steady each other against the wind. Her color rushed up; after a moment she said:

"Rod knows that I am engaged to Lawrence Ingersoll."

"But you know when you love a person, Loveday, you don't believe that!" Marc said eagerly and apologetically.

"Well, but he must believe it!" she said with a hint of impatience. "Not—not that I think it goes very deep with Rod," Loveday added, quickening her step to join Fanny, who was waiting for them in the shelter of a clump of windblown pines, "but if it is going to make him unhappy it will make me unhappy too!"

"I'll tell you who it will make very unhappy," Marc said. "Aunt Laura."

"Oh, but she has no right to feel that way!" Loveday said, distressed. "She knew—I told Uncle Warren; I told them all, one time or another, just how it was."

"I know. But she is very fond of you, ma cherie."

"And I'm so fond of them, all of them! How could it be any other way! Only—a promise is a promise," Loveday argued.

Now as spring came on, and when she put on the new clothes that Fanny had helped her buy, the trim black suit with the white frill, the soft gray silk dinner dress that so quaintly touched the floor and that with its severe collar and snug white cuffs somehow made her look a little like her Quaker grandmother, Loveday felt herself an entity, a loved daughter of the house, whose presence was welcome to them all. And gradually a little reluctance began to mingle itself in her feelings when she thought of Larry. He had been a darling—or had he? What did she know of him or remember of him? After a few letters, he had been strangely silent. Within the first week of their separation he had written twice: a letter from home, where, he said, he had told the whole family of his sweetheart at Indian Hill, a letter from the train. A third letter, briefer than the others, had come from Florida; it was all swell, he had written, except that everyone said that nobody could live there through the summer.

Meanwhile the excitement of Fanny's wedding absorbed her. They all loved her here; they kept her busy; she could laugh again; she could feel herself needed.

Three days before the wedding she came in from a walk flushed and deliciously weary. She had gone down to Van Ness Avenue with Fanny for a last fitting of the wedding gown; she had left Fanny and her mother there and had walked the three miles home. Now for a bath, ran her thoughts, and an hour with a book before dinnertime.

She turned into the library to find something to read, saw a tall, dark man rise from a red leather armchair, and went to him at once with a smile, their hands met.

"You're Chris, aren't you? But you weren't coming until tomorrow! What sort of a trip?"

The man looked down at her, smiling. He was tall, but he looked like the other St. Georges, only more distinguished, she thought. He wore a small mustache and big black-rimmed glasses.

"And you're Loveday Gurney. Of course you are. But you've slimmed out since you got caught on the roof of the chicken house."

"Oh, remember that!" They were at ease at once. "I'm disgracefully untidy," Loveday said. "But it's such a wonderful day I walked home from Van Ness."

"Just about three. It took me a little less than an hour and a half. But tell me, you've driven all the way from New York? Was it hot? Was it lovely? I've always thought I'd like so much to do it! And where's . . . . Your wife's with you?"

"We got into Stockton this morning; we were to stay with Merle's people tonight. But her sister is there with measly twins—twins who have the measles, I mean. So I left her and came on down."

They were seated now; afternoon light, coming in at the western windows, shone on Loveday's fair skin and made an aureole of her gold-tipped hair. She took her hat off with a childish snatching gesture and shook the loose waves free.

"Where's everyone? I thought Mother would be home. I can't scare up a soul."

"Fan and Nini are having fittings and Aunt Laura went along to be sure everything was all right. Nini's to be maid of honor, of course."

"What about your dress?"

"I know," he said quickly, apology and sympathy in his tone. "And I'm glad," he added in the little silence, "that since it had to be that way you could come to my family, because they're the grandest people alive, aren't they?"

"You don't have to tell me that. And how goes the play?"

"We think it's all right. You know I'm working with Ehrlen. We idea and Ehrlen's experience. We think it's going to be good."

"It seems such a miracle to me. I think of it every time they talk of you," Loveday said, her eyes glowing. "To have written two plays, and now to be working on another!"

"The first play ran eight performances," Chris said, smiling; "the second was lucky."

"It was so lucky it got the Pulitzer Prize!" Loveday supplied. His eyes danced.

"Oh, you know that? But that doesn't make one any less nervous about the new one," he said.

"Well, here's the thing I was thinking," she said ingenuously; "you don't make much money on that, do you? But you go on, and you have a penthouse in New York and a car and all that, and what . . . what pays you?"

"That," he said, "is indeed the question. "Well, I'll tell you.

Horse Sense Bridge

LESSON NO. 567

By SAM GORDON
The Kibitzer

The uppercut is a bridge haymaker that too many partners muff. When not ignorant of that play, they are looking out of the window. Or they are too mad at partner for not leading something else.

Move in on this deal:

♠ 2
♥ 9 7 6 5
♦ A J 6 4 2
♣ A Q J

WEST
♠ A 10
♥ A K Q 10
♦ 10 8 5 3
♣ 10 4 3

EAST
♠ J 3
♥ 8 4 2
♦ K Q 9
♣ 9 7 6 5 2

SOUTH
♠ K Q 9 8 7 6 5 4
♥ J 3
♦ 7
♣ K 9

North was the dealer and passed. When east passed, too, south stepped in with an opening bid of four spades. It was intended as a shut-out sacrifice.

In answer to such an opening, partner is asked to pass unless he has three aces and a king, or better. So, north passed. And west started out with an opening lead of the heart king.

When dummy hand went down, south was tickled with the outlook. His pre-emptive game bid expected to take a loss. But now it looked as if he could take the ten tricks called for in his contract.

He saw that he must lose two hearts at once. But, if he can confine his trump loss to only one trick, his game is in the bag.

West took the first two heart tricks and south trumped the third round of hearts. He led his lone diamond and won in dummy with the ace to lead the lone trump from there.

East plays small and south plays the spade queen. West wins that trick with the ace and after that it looks as if declarer will have no trouble.

Because south can win the next trick no matter what west leads back. And a lead of the trump king will pick up the two outstanding trumps to give declarer everything that is left.

But he did not reason with the uppercut. West led back the fourth heart and east did his stuff by trumping his partner's heart trick. East used his trump jack for that purpose.

What happens now? Declarer is sunk. If he lets east hold that trick, it is the defeating trick. If he overtakes the east jack with the trump king, the west trump ten will take a defeating trick.

It looks like a tough play to ask east to make. But what does he expect to do with that trump jack? Pickle it?

CANADIAN Y·M·C·A WAR SERVICES

The Green Group of the Red Triangle Hostess Club arranged and conducted the activities at the Y.M.C.A. for the service personnel this week. In charge of this particular group are Jean Vickers and Arlie Gilbert.

On Monday evening, there was instruction in dancing for the airmen under the direction of Mr. Harold McKeig. The bridge class and the serving of refreshments comprised the Tuesday night program. The same evening, three bus loads of Club members were entertained at a dance at Mountain View Bombing and Gunnery School. The weekly dance was held in the gymnasium of the "Y" on Wednesday evening. A number of the girls enjoyed the dancing at the Trenton Main Air Station on Thursday evening. On Friday night, an excellent program for Music Appreciation under Margaret Houston's capable leadership was enjoyed. Delicious refreshments were served.

Emily Carr, 74, Noted Artist Busy Despite Infirmity

Victoria, Nov. 30 —(CP)— Emily Carr, top-ranking Canadian artist who wil be 74 years old on Dec. 13, continues to write and paint despite a stroke two months ago that affected use of her left arm. Miss Carr says the arm makes an admirable paper weight.

Before her birthday arrives Miss Carr plans to publish her latest volume, "The House of All Sorts," successor to "Klee Wyck" which won the Governor-General's Award in 1941, and "The Book of Small," published in 1942.

She told an interviewer she intends to write a fourth book—"to be published after my death; I don't want it in print until after I go."

"The House of All Sorts" is a series of sketches describing the difficult time in Emily Carr's life when critics and public alike made life unhappy for her by rejecting her new style of painting. This was in the days before the Group of Seven had convinced the Canadian public that there was a new way of interpreting Canada to the world through the medium of art.

Operated Guest-House.

To make a living Miss Carr ran what is politely called a guest-house, and her new book (Oxford University Press) describes the people she met and the incidents which occurred during that period.

Miss Carr's studio is the room where her sister Alice, now blind, formerly taught private school classes, and is crammed with canvasses. Her favorite rocking chair faces a wood heater that she prefers to the huge, old-fashioned fireplace. "When you get old you need real heat," she said.

Her one-storey dwelling is just behind the 80-year-old Carr family home. The big main gate is closed but signs direct traffic: "For Miss Alice Carr take the path to the right. For Miss Emily Carr take the gravel path to the left."

"I liked that old home," Mis Carr said. "Some of my friends didn't think I should live in a working class district. Why shouldn't I? They were honest, friendly people, as friendly as the birds and animals I had around me. But someone bought the house and Alice wanted me to come here, so I came."

Referring to her indifferent health, she said: "Let me get outside in the open air and I'll be all right. This wet weather keeps me in the house and the only thing I can do is paint."

Little Benny's Note Book

Me and pop were starting to take a walk before supper, and ma said to pop, William, on your way back I wish you'd remember to stop at the market and get me half a dozen grapefruit.

Yee gods, are you sure you dont want half a dozen watermelons? pop said, and ma said, Now William I know you have an unreasoning prejudice against carrying things through the street, but considering the difficulties of marketing nowadays I should think you'd be only too willing to put a small shoulder to the wheel.

It seems to me more like putting a big wheel on both shoulders, pop said. I wouldn't mind carrying anything within reason, like a half dozen postage stamps, but for Pete sake anything as unwieldy as a half dozen grapefruit, that's a load of a different color, size and weight. Of course I could let Benny struggle with it, but then people would glare at me accusingly, and I wouldn't enjoy that either. But all right, all right, if you really insist I'll swallow my pride, turn a deaf ear to my better judgement and betray my higher instincts. I'll do it. I'll reel and stagger home with your half a dozen grapefruit, he said.

Oh keep quiet and hush up, ma said. I believe we still have one or 2 grapefruit in the house, and rather than listen to your agonized outcries, I'll compromise and ask you to bring me half a dozen lemons, she said, and pop said. That's different, that's something I can let Benny carry with a minimum of private qualms or fears of public censure.

The result being he let me carry them till I pretty near dropped the bag twice and really dropped it once, and then he carried it himself the rest of the ways looking as if he still thought the whole thing was a bum idea.

Indian Troops Of British 8th Take Alberto

Rome, Dec. 2 — (CP) — Indian units of the British 8th Army have captured the town of Albereto, scene of three days' bitter fighting, five miles northeast of the Italian road junction of Faenza. Allied headquarters said today.

Meanwhile, Monte Giornetto, 11 miles west-southwest of Faenza, fell to the Allied 5th Army without a struggle.

The withdrawal from Monte Giornetto appeared to be a continuation of the enemy necessity of pulling out of the deep bulge he has been holding in the northern Apennines, in order to prevent his forces from being trapped.

Farther west on the 5th Army front several German counter-attacks were beaten back in the vicinity of Bombiano, 25 miles southwest of Bologna, and subsequent attempts at infiltration were smashed.

In the west coast area, south of Massa the enemy is employing smoke screens in order to conceal movements, an official report said.

Despite unfavorable weather Mediterranean Allied airforces flew more than 700 sorties. Three planes were missing.

Nazis Threaten To Abandon Warfare Code

London, Dec. 2 — (CP) — The German high command says it is considering abandoning international agreements on the laws of war, which among other things ban use of poison gas and provide for humane treatment of war prisoners.

Provoked by the proclamation of French Maj.-Gen. Jacques Leclerc that unless sniping ceases in Strasbourg five German hostages would be executed for each Frenchman shot, the Nazi high command said yesterday, that the "strongest counter-reprisals against French prisoners in Germany would be taken as a result of such a step."

"As conditions are, an inquiry is already in progress as to whether Germany should continue to regard herself bound by the Geneva and Hague conventions, respectively, as well as by other international agreements about the laws of war, insofar as they have been broken by our enemies," said the high command statement, broadcast by the official German agency DNB.

Before Leclerc and his French 2nd Armored Division had a chance to carry out his proclamation they were moved from Strasbourg. It appeared that his order — scheduled to have gone into effect today — would die a natural death.

It has been pointed out previously that execution of hostages in reprisal for sniping could be done within the bounds of the Geneva convention, as long as the hostages were not prisoners of war.

The German high command statement asserted that the inquiry into whether the Nazis should adhere to international rules of war was taken "in view of the increasing infringements of international law by our enemies." These infringements, said the Germans, "can only have been perpetrated intentionally."

Fanatical Japs Make Repeated Suicide Charges

General McArthur's Headquarters, Philippines, Dec. 2. (AP)—Fanatical Japanese made repeated suicide charges south of Ormoc against the U.S. 7th Division, closest American unit to that vital port, but were beaten back after suffering heavy losses, a headquarters communique reported today.

At the northern end of the Ormoc corridor, rain-sodden, mud-caked troopers of the American 32nd Division inched forward for a slight gain after three days of absolute stalemate under tropical deluges.

The 32nd's pace was slowed by quagmire conditions as it pushed to a point 1 1-4 miles south of Limon, which it captured last week. It was at Limon the enemy had elected to make a determined stand.

As the battle for Leyte Island entered its seventh week today, the torrential rains, coupled with stubborn Japanese resistance, put an end to any American hopes for an early conclusion to the struggle considered of crucial importance in the campaign to liberate all the Philippines.

Weather also retarded air operations by both sides.

Japanese casualties in the Leyte fighting, and in attempts to reinforce their garrisons there are believed to be approaching 100,000.

Ottawa, December 2 —(CP)— Facts and Figures! From a crowded office in the Wartime Information Bureau's suite in the new Post Office Building overlooking the Canadian war memorial here, a group of industrial researchers and writers prepare a monthly record of "Canada at War"—and they call their attractive booklet just that.

The booklet tells about the armed forces, the industrial front and bacon production. Graphs show the division of mutual aid, casualties, services intake figures and production fluctuations.

Quiet, capable J. Robert Herbin, native of Wolfville, N.S., and alumnus of the Saint John Telegraph-Journal and the Toronto Star, is the chief of the section in charge of the booklet's production. He is assisted by Miss Magdalena Polley of Calgary.

Last month, 191,500 English copies and 50,000 French copies were distributed. They go to various foreign countries, to the armed forces, newspapers, libraries, schools, trade boards, trade unions, universities and individuals. The armed forces take nearly 50,000 copies and the United States takes about 20,000.

The booklet also has been published in Spanish and Portuguese and distributed in Latin America.

In Manhattan

By MICHAEL O'MARA

New York, Dec. 2 —(CP)— Biggest, shiniest and generally most fabulous event in Manhattan during the past week was the opening of the Metropolitan Opera season Monday night.

Quebec-born Raoul Jobin as Faust and veteran basso Ezio Pinza as Mephistopheles had themselves a vigorously vocal evening on the stage, pouring out Gounod's music in manner which was good enough to be enjoyed if anyone happened to pay any attention. But New Yorkers do not go to opening nights at the Met for anything so naive as to listen to music.

The women go to show off their latest dresses and furs and jewelry, and peer enviously—albiet condescendingly—at the like ornaments on other women. The men go, it would seem, because the women tell them to.

The greater part of the evening is spent not in the plush seats of the theatre but in Sherry's Bar upstairs, where celebrities may be inspected alternately through lorgnettes and the bottoms of tumblers.

Most notable of the elite gathered in the Met Monday was Princess Alice, wife of Canada's Governor-General. But her Royal Highness actually sat in her box and listened to the opera.

From Philadelphia the tip—that Billy Rose's highly-publicized, ultra-expensive revue, "The Seven Lively Arts," is just about everything its backers claim. New York critics who slipped out of town to review the show before it hits Broadway this Thursday were unanimous that Rose has one of the biggest hits ever. The name-value of its cast alone—topped by Toronto-born Beatrice Lillie making her first New York appearance in several years—already has sold out the house for more than 10 weeks in advance.

REDS WITHIN 72 MILES OF AUSTRIAN BORDER

MOP UP LAST DEFENDERS IN SAARLAUTERN

Crack Lines Along Slovak Border By Capturing Miskolc

Germans Say Major Red Force Reaches Lake Balaton

London, Dec. 4 (CP)—Russian troops smashed ahead in southwestern Hungary today within 72 miles of the Austrian frontier, and cracked strong enemy defences along the Slovakian border with the capture of Miskolc and Satoraljaujhely.

A German broadcast early today said a major Russian force had reached the area of Lake Balaton, 60 miles southwest of Budapest and at some points on the far shore only 45 miles from the Austrian border.

Miskolc, a vital military supply centre for German and Hungarian armies, fell yesterday to Marshal Rodion Y. Malinovsky's 2nd Ukrainian army, elements of which joined with Gen. Ivan Petrov's 4th Ukrainian army in taking by storm the communications junction of Satoraljaujhely, 45 miles to the northwest. Miskolc is 85 miles from Budapest and was bitterly defended by the Germans for several weeks.

In the drive west of the Danube toward the Austrian frontier, Marshal Feodor I. Tolbukhin's 3rd Ukraine army captured Tamasi, 21 miles south of Lake Balaton, in an 11-mile advance, and seized Kaposmero, in the closest approach to Austria.

These forces also drove northward 5 1-2 miles along the west bank of the Danube, capturing Dunafoldvar, 43 miles south of Budapest, in a push to take the Hungarian capital from the rear.

Engulf 80 Communities.

The sweeping gains of Tolbukhin's army engulfed more than 80 places in a steadily expanding front south of Lake Balaton, guardian of strategic approaches to Austria, and won for him a 36-mile stranglehold on the Budapest-Zagreb-Trieste railway connecting German defenders of Budapest with German forces in Yugoslavia and northern Italy.

The Russians also were within 36 miles of Nagykanisza, junction of another major railway line between Budapest and Zagreb.

In addition to capturing Miskolc, Malinovsky's troops seized Homrogd, 11 miles to the northeast, and the Soviet communique said they took 21,745 German and Hungarian prisoners in the fighting along that front from Nov. 8 through Saturday.

Strengthens Junction.

The Fall of Satoraljaujhely strengthened the junction of the two great Russian armies, while to the north Petrov's troops increased pressure on the Slovakian communications centre of Kassa (Kosice) prime objective of the sweep west from Ungvar. Celovce, 17 1-2 miles southeast of Kassa, was taken. Farther north his troops were within 15 miles of Kassa.

Perhaps even more significant were the triumphs of Tolbukhin's army, which has been advancing at a rate of 10 to 20 miles a day south and southwest of Budapest.

The sustained success of these forces gave rise to the hopes his drive would soon accomplish the three-fold tasks it faced when he breached the Danube a week ago; storming Budapest from the rear; gaining the Austrian border in a strike due west, and cutting off escape routes from the southern Balkans by swinging along the Yugoslav frontier toward Zagreb.

Girl Tricks Policeman, Makes Escape and Locks Cop in Detention Cell

Hamilton, Dec. 4. (CP)—Margaret Mello, 17, escaped from the women's detention cells at Central Police Station last night after tricking a policeman whom she locked in the cell in her place. She was being held in connection with an escape from a girl's delinquents' institution in Toronto.

The station duty officer was called by the girl, who said she wanted a bench moved in the cell. The policeman entered, and while he was moving the bench, the girl ran out and locked the door.

The officer was freed a few minutes later when his shouts attracted another member of the force. The girl has not yet been found.

Japs Penetrate 35 Miles Inside Kweichow Prov.

Chungking, Dec. 4 (AP)—Japanese troops have penetrated 35 miles inside Kweichow Province and today were battling Chinese defenders seven miles west of Tushan, only 75 miles southeast of Kweiyang, strategic Burma Road town and capital of Kweichow.

Associated Press correspondent Clyde Farnsworth, writing from Kunming, said it was quite possible the Japanese, aiming at least for Kweiyang would also strike for Kunming and Chungking in an attempt to offset the prospective opening of the Ledo-Burma Road from India.

He said the Americans may be forced to take extraordinary measures to save a tremendous military investment declaring the Japanese already had neutralized partially the value of the Ledo-Burma Road by their offensive in the southeast against Chinese troops who were ultimately to be equipped with material sent in over that supply line.

It was announced yesterday that there had been an increase of 400 per cent in the total tonnage of equipment carried over the hump during October by the air transport command for Burma Road engineers hastening completion of that vital supply line.

GREEK PREMIER DECLARESMARTIAL LAW IN ATHENS

Charges Left-Wing Factions Deliberately Fomenting A Civil War

By STEPHEN BARBER
(Associated Press Staff Writer)

Athens, Dec. 4 —(AP)— Gen. Catsotas, acting military governor of Athens, gave armed formations of the Leftist E.A.M. 72 hours notice today to quit the area as a consequence of Sunday's violent clashes.

Twenty-one persons were killed and 140 injured in the clashes with police yesterday. A general strike ordered by the E.A.M. had the Greek capital in a tense grip today.

Numerous incidents developed into night-long shooting last night. The E.L.A., the armed formations of the E.A.M., seized two government police barracks at Piraeus, the port of Athens.

The streets of Piraeus were filled with striking dock workers armed with staves, knives, sticks and a few firearms. They were parading and shouting slogans.

Unorganized Formations.

Apparently unorganized formations had taken up positions in air raid trenches with machine-guns and had posted themselves in other points of vantage.

E.L.A.S. besiegers worked their way over the top of Philoppos Hill back of the Theseum, which is near the Acropolis, this morning. From this position they were firing down into the Theseum quarter, which faced attack from three sides. The sound of rifle and machine-gun fire could be heard almost continuously.

Column Disarmed.

British troops surrounded and disarmed a column of 800 E.L.A.S. marching on Athens from the Thebes district last night without a shot being fired, headquarters of Maj.-Gen. R. M. Scobie, British commander in Greece, announced.

Another band of 1,200 was disarmed by a British patrol north of Athens and the "officers and men put in confinement," the official Greek News Service reported.

The first court martials were put into operation today under newly proclaimed martial law.

Catsotas ordered the E.L.A.S. who seized the Piraeus barracks to withdraw from the buildings or take the consequences.

British troops in trucks were stationed at several strategic points in Piraeus. The first British casualty was a Royal Navy rating who was shot in the hip while riding from barracks to naval headquarters in Piraeus.

1st Canadian Army Front Quiet But Night Patrols Keep Troops Alert

By DOUGLAS AMARON
(C.P. War Correspondent)

With the 1st. Canadian Army in Holland, Nov. 4 (C.P. Cable) — December finds the 1st. Canadian Army holding a static front.

It is the quietest front of any Allied army in western Europe and the least interesting. At army headquarters they tell you two days out of three there is "nothing to report" and at battalion headquarters where the war is more personal you heard "just patrolling."

Farther west the Meuse River separates German and Allied troops and this flooded swift-flowing river is a barrier to anything but small-scale patrolling.

But in the Nijmegen salient there is land contact between the Germans and Canadians. In patrolling here on this front there are tangles with the Germans every night, never in much strength but frequently enough to keep the night alive with machine-gun and mortar fire.

Lieut. L. A. LaVoie, of Matane, Que., whose French-speaking regiment from Quebec Province claims the distinction of being the first Canadian formation to enter Germany in this war, led a typical patrol a few nights ago.

(A dispatch last week from Maurice Desjardins, Canadian Press war correspondent, idenfied this unti as Le Regiment De la Chaudiere of Lake Megantic, Que.)

The object of the patrol was to capture a prisoner.

LaVoie's platoon went out from woods into flat flooded country below and made for a dike the Germans were believed holding. They crossed a canal in rubber reconnaissance boats, stirred up three Germans behind the dike with grenades, killed two and captured the other.

That is what is happening every night. The Canadians probe into the Germans' positions and the enemy try to infiltrate into those of the Canadians. Then when dawn comes these night prowlers from both sides return to their fixed positions or to outposts in front of them.

Troops of this formation are living under cover but in open ground farther away Central Ontario soldiers call dugouts and slit trenches their home. These men and Manitoba troops on the Canadian front are holding flooded land and some of their companies can be supplied only at night and by boat.

Germany To Suffer Greater Raids Than Ever Says Eaker

Rome, Dec. 4 —(AP)— Lt.-Gen. Eaker, Mediterranean Allied Air Force Commander, declared today that "German targets are due for the greatest weight of bombardment they have ever received, and winter weather will not protect them."

He told a press conference that big bombers of his command, more numerous and more effective than ever before, were being equipped in ever-increasing numbers, both for instrument bombing through clouds, and for night raids over the Alps into Germany.

To written questions why British and United States correspondents cannot work freely in the Russian-occupied Balkans, Eaker replied:

"We prescribe regulations for correspondents in enemy areas we captured, and we must be equally generous to the Russians. I hope patience and understanding of all the factors involved will be employed."

More Than 114,700 Tons of Bombs Dropped on Germany in November

London, Dec. 4 (CP)—Five rail arteries feeding supplies to German front lines were smashed today by 1,200 American heavy bombers, escorted deep into western Germany by more than 1,000 fighters.

Headquarters of the United States strategic air forces in Europe said railroad yards and adjacent industrial installations at Kassel, Mainz, Giessen, Oest and Bebra were the targets of the heavy attack by British-based bombers of the U.S. 8th air force.

First group returning reported German fighters failed to molest the bomber formations. Heavy clouds obscured the target areas and bombing was by instrument.

Mainz Yard Hit.

Only one of the yards is on the Rhine—that of Mainz. The others are far in the rear of German supply lines. The Soest rail facilities are seven miles southeast of Hamm.

Uncertain weather and diminishing hours of daylight curtailed heavy bomber operations from Britain during the weekend but 1,000 fighter-bombers based in Belgium and France continued the Allied air offensive with a sharp Sunday punch on the left wing of the western front.

Nazi Jet Fighters Withdraw

Brief morning sunshine brought out almost 100 German jet fighters yesterday but they withdrew before cannon-firing R.A.F. Tempests. One was shot down near Rheine, beyond the British 2nd. Army sector.

More than 700 sorties were flown by the R.A.F. 2nd. Tactical Air Force during the day. Eight locomotives were destroyed and railway road beds torn apart in 29 places.

One fighter-bomber operation was flown on the U.S. 3rd. Army front, a dive-bombing attack on Zweibrucken, in the Saar Basin east of Saarbrucken.

More than 300 sorties were flown in support of U.S. 1st. and 9th. Army troops attacking in the Julich and Duren areas, on the approaches to Cologne. One plane was lost.

British Mosquito bombers hammered objectives in western Germany last night without loss. The target cities were not identified.

November Records Highest

Allied planes broke all records in the aerial offensive against Germany by dropping more than 114,700 tons of bombs during November, it was disclosed yesterday.

Britain-based bombers of the R.A.F. and R.C.A.F. accounted for 59,000 tons.

U.S. heavy bombers based in Britain accounted for 37,800 tons of this total and heavy bombers of the 15th. Air Force stationed in Italy loosed the remaining 17,830 tons.

Some Guilty-Minded Bulgars Commit Suicide

Rome, Dec. 4 —AP)— Some Bulgarians accused of abusing captured American airmen before Bulgaria surrendered have committed suicide rather than face trial, Lt.-Gen. Eaker, commander of the Mediterranean Allied Air Force, said today.

Eaker told a press conference the United States military mission in Bulgaria was making "excellent progress" in determining those responsible for mistreatment of the imprisoned fliers. He said he was certain none of those guilty of harming the Americans would escape.

INDUSTRIAL TOKYO HEAVILY HIT IN LATEST RAID

In Sunlight B-29's Unload Bombs With Pin-Point Accuracy

Saipan, Dec. 4 — (AP) — Industrial Tokyo lay in fresh ruins and flame today in the wake of the 4th thunderous bombing raid — and the most successful — by Superfortresses based on Saipan.

A sizeable force of B29s, striking in mid-afternoon yesterday, found the Tokyo area clearly outlined in sunlight and for 1 1/2 hours unloaded their bombs with pin-point accuracy, despite intense ack-ack and swarms of interceptors.

Results were good, said the 20th Air Force communique. One squadron reported 75 per cent of its bombs fell within the target area.

The prime objective was the Musashima engine factory of the expensive Nakajima aircraft plant, one of the enemy's top producers of military planes. The plant, built of one-storey concrete structures, was the target of the initial Tokyo B29 raid Nov. 24 when considerable damage was inflicted. Last squadrons to reach the target found large fires raging.

One Superfort Lost

One Superfort was acknowledged lost.

(A Japanese communique claimed that 14 Superforts were shot down and seven more probably downed. It admitted six interceptors were lost, including several that were said to have made suicide crashes into the big raiders.)

The U. S. communique said the late formations over Tokyo knocked down four fighters for sure and probably eight others.

Admiral Nimitz announced at Pearl Harbor, meantime, that Army Liberators on Thursday carried out their fifth raid in four days on Iwo Jima in the Volcano islands, which lie athwart the aerial route from Saipan and Tokyo. More than 57 tons of bombs were dropped on Iwo Jima's airstrip and other installations.

Japanese raids against the 21st Bomber Command headquarters at Saipan have been launched from Iwo Jima since Nov. 26.

'Overnight Sanatoria' Industrial Health Experiment by Reds

Moscow, Dec. 4 — (CP)—Moscow is trying a new experiment in industrial health—"overnight sanatoria" where workers can rest in their off-hours and obtain treatment for minor ills which do not necessitate stopping work.

Most of the sanatoria are maintained jointly by factory managements and trade unions.

Workers are taken to the plant for the noon meal, rest until time to start work again, and return after work for dinner, to spend the night and have breakfast. Doctors examine each worker daily and physiotherapy is prescribed.

In some cases the patients live there for two or three months.

NO1.AIRCOMMAND HEADQUARTERS AT TRENTON, JAN. 15

Air Vice-Marshal Adelard Raymond Of Montreal Will Be In Command

Ottawa, Dec. 4. (CP)—Air Force Headquarters announced today the amalgamation of No. 1 and No. 3 Training Commands, at Toronto and Montreal, respectively will become effective Jan. 15, with headquarters at the R.C.A.F. Station at Trenton, Ont.

Air Vice-Marshal Adelard Raymond of Montreal, Air Officer commanding No. 3 Training Command, will assume command of the new district, to be known as No. 1 Air Command.

Air Vice-Marshal A. T. N. Cowley, Air Officer commanding the present No. 1 Training Command, will be retired.

The amalgamation, first announced in September, is part of the reduction of the Commonwealth Air Training plan.

Two other commands already have been amalgamated—No. 2 at Winnipeg and No. 4 at Calgary. They were fused Dec. 1 as No. 2 Air Command with headquarters at Moose Jaw, Sask.

The September announcement said the amalgamation program also would result in a reduction in the Air Council from 11 to seven members because of lessened responsibility.

Lends New Importance.

The fusion of the four training commands into two air commands is expected to lend new importance to the western air command and the recently-created northwest air command. It is assumed they will continue as separate operational commands until the defeat of Japan.

In November, Maj. C. G. Power, then Air Minister, announced that the air training plan would not be extended beyond its March 31, expiration date and that it would be succeeded by a "shadow" scheme of small dimensions. Coupled with the reduction is a partial demobilization of the R.C.A.F.

Group Captain A. D. Bell-Irving commanding officer of the Trenton Air Station stated today that the amalgamation would not affect the status of the station as a training centre.

The staff of the new training command will be superimposed on that of the station staff, and will be housed in the station proper.

British Forces Advance 1,000 Yards to Venlo

By JAMES M. LONG
(AP Staff Writer)

Paris, Dec. 4, (AP) — Siegfried Line guns threw salvoes today at the captured Saar River Bridge inside Saarlautern while U.S. 3rd Army troops, storming across the intact span, fought the last spotty German defences in that second city of the industrial Saar.

The British 2nd Army advanced 1,000 yards to the demolished Meuse River bridge outside the Netherlands road centre of Venlo mopping up the last Germans west of that water barrier. The Tommies took part of Venlo's suburbs west of the river.

Other men of Field Marshal Montgomery's 21st Army group encountered foot-deep floods in the Arnhem and Nijmegen area, opposite which the 1st Canadian Army has entered Germany within gunshot of the northern end of the Siegfried line at Kleve.

Americans of the 1st and 9th armies fought inside Julich and Linnich on the Roer river before Cologne and crept slowly and painfully toward the third bastion on that flooded stream, Duren.

Four Towns Fall

Four towns went down before those armies Sunday in one of history's most violent battles of attrition. These were Inden, a battleground for a week although it had but 100 ruined houses; Lucherberg, Luchem, and Brandenberg. The armies stood on the Roer for 20 miles but at no place had that river, 20 miles from Cologne at Duren, been crossed.

Third army infantry fought deeper into venerable Saarlautern. Some of the Germans encountered beyond the Saar River in the eastern part of the city of 32,000 were members of the hastily-mustered home guards.

The fortifications of the Siegfried line are just beyond Saarlautern and the Saar river is like a moat protecting the pillboxes, tank traps and artillery emplacements.

The Germans had blown four other bridges spanning the Saar between Saarautern and Merzig to the northwest.

The 3rd was at the Saar on a 11-mile front. The battle was violent but the prize was immense. The Saar prdouces eight per cent of Germany's coal and 11 per cent of her iron and is the third major centre of heavy industries in Germany after the Ruhr and Silesia.

Attack Toward Saarbrucken

Lt.-Gen. Patton's tanks and infantry continued attacks toward Saarbrucken, capital of the Saarland, and Sarreguemines on the frontier. The cities were eight and seven miles distant.

On his right flank, the 7th Army fought in the southwest edge of the major Lorraine communications and supply base of Hagenau, 31 miles southwest of Karlsruhe. A column eight miles to the northwest had outflanked the city.

Troops of the 7th also fought in the streets of Selestat, 25 miles southwest of cleaned-up Strasbourg, at the western edge of the Alsace Plain.

The French rail town of Sarre Union was captured and troops advanced two miles east.

The 3rd Army bridgehead across the Saar in Saarlautern was solid and being expanded despite the heavy barrage laid down by the Siegfried Line artillery. The bridge coup apparently caught the Germans off balance.

On the critical Cologne front, 1st Army men, battling along the "Superhighway" from Aachen to Cologne, were 23 miles from the great but battered city on the Rhine, whence roads and rails fan out into the very heart of Germany.

Mile Closer to Duren

The 1st Army poured on its power with gains which folded back German defences a mile yesterday on the whole arc west of Duren, a city of 39,000. The Inde river was crossed. Lucherberg is just north of the Superhighway. Beyond Luchem, the Americans pushed onto the concrete road. An advance beyond Brandenberg into a woodland carried within half a mile of the Roer.

Beyond the Roer, still to be negotiated, flows the Erft, which likewise must be crossed before Cologne and the Rhine are reached. South of Holland, the whole western front was greyed out with low clouds which negated air support.

But north and east of Nijmegen, near where 1st Canadian Army elements were reported holding a strip of enemy territory, rocket-firing fighters struck at enemy machine-gun and mortar positions and fighter-bombers hit enemy communications at Arnhem and Amersfoot and other Netherlands points.

Rain slackened on the U. S. 1st and 9th Army fronts and the ground hardened with frost, permitting increased use of tanks and mobile guns to add to the weight of American metal crushing at the dozen or so German divisions on the Roer.

Faversham, Kent, Dec. 4—(CP)—Thirteen years ago level-headed William Robert Macey won $135,000 in the Irish Sweepstake.

When the telegram came telling him about it he just went down to the nearby pub to buy his first pint in two years. He gave up his $15 a week job in a timber yard and began drawing $22.50 a week from the bank. A year later he built a $4,300 house for himself, his wife, four sons and a daughter.

And that's about all he did with his $135,000.

Last July he died and now the story of his quiet life has been told in his will.

He left $153,000. The extra $18,000 was mainly the interest he hadn't spent.

Mrs. Macey was left $1,350 in cash and almost all the $153,000 was left in trust for her.

"But I shan't be moving from here now," she said. "I'm not a one for great extravagance either."

SENTENCED TO DEATH

Paris, Dec. 4 — (AP)—L'Agence Francaise De Press reported Saturday that Angely Angell, former regional prefect who ordered the internment of Edouard Herriot, French political leader, during the German occupation, had been convicted of collusion with the enemy. He was sentenced to death by a collaboration court at Lyon.

Investigations Support Belief Future Events Can Be Predicted

By RUSSELL LANDSTROM
(A. P. Staff Writer.)

London, Dec. 4 (AP)—The age-old belief that human beings can, at times and in certain circumstances, obtain fleeting glimpses of future events is supported by the results of experiments conducted for three years by S. G. Soal, of the Mathematics Department, Queen Mary College, London University, it was announced today.

Prof. Ifor Evans, principal of Queen Mary College, said the strange faculty which the tests are alleged to affirm is known as precognitive-telepathy.

Soal experiments with a professional photographer and a pack of cards. Placed in a room apart the subject guessed, not the card chosen for him, but the one to follow, and he did this often enough, Soal said, that "the odds against the whole series of tests being due to chance are stupendous and are represented by a figure consisting of 10 followed by 34 noughts."

The work developed from earlier experiments by Soal who tested 160 persons and accumulated more than 128,000 guesses of cards bearing different geometrical symbols. He found that two of the 160 had registered a number of "hits" far above chance coincidence on both the preceding and the following card.

In each instance the cards were exposed for a few seconds to an agent who was with Soal behind an opaque screen.

"One day the interval between the successive card presentations was reduced from 2 1-2 to 1 1-2 seconds, and the subject ceased to guess correctly the next card, but began to score 'hits' on the next but one.

Sports loving younger generation of Belleville and district realized their first taste of winter sports for the current season when over the weekend they took advantage of the recent snowfall to get in a bit of skating and skiing. EAVESTROUGH FILLED WITH ICE CRASHES TO WALK ON FRONT ST.

Large icicles, formed from melting snow from the roof overflowing the eavestrough and freezing was responsible, it is said, for the breaking away of the trough. Another section of the trough was dangerously weighted with ice on the south section of the building.

Public works men removed the smashed trough this morning.

A young black cocker spaniel with white spots on its hind legs was found wandering at large in the city over the weekend and is now a guest of city pound-keeper Thomas Thorne. CUSTOMS RETURNS SHOW DECREASE

Decrease in the excise tax on alcoholic spirits was responsible for a considerable dropping off in the customs and excise collections at Belleville for the month of November as compared with the corresponding month during 1943, according to figures released by E. A. Geen, local customs collector.

Revenue for the Belleville office for the past month was $275,195.22 as compared with $320,397.45 for the same month last year. This is a decrease of $45,202.22.

Congested Traffic On Front St. Tied Up Bus Service

Upwards of 7,000 passengers availed themselves of the Rawson Bus service on Saturday.

"It was the largest day's business we ever did, despite the fact we were unable to operate from 2.30 until 5.00 p.m. on Saturday afternoon owing to the congested traffic condition on Front Street. We had five buses ready for service, but it was impossible to make anything that resembled a scheduled run during that period," Mr. Fred Rawson said today.

"When we attempted the afternoon service on two or three occasions it took our buses 18 minutes to proceed from Victoria Ave. to our terminal at the intersection of Bridge and Front Sts. Our maximum scheduled time for this distance is but three minutes," added Mr. Rawson.

The traffic tie-up came after attempts had been made to clear Front St. of a heavy snowfall, but with motor vehicles parked on both sides of the street the snow plow could but pile the snow outside of the parked vehicles, making the lane of traffic limited to a single line of traffic at some points, thus impeding the double line of traffic that is needed on a Saturday. When the traffic congestion was relieved the bus service was resumed on the customary schedule.

Mr. Rawson said today he had $50,000 invested in buses for the service of the citizens of Belleville and expected delivery of another new bus early next month.

In order to encourage safety at all times Mr. Rawson has a standing offer to his drivers of $25 for each month the individual driver operates without an accident.

"After all it cost me $1,425 for damages to our buses last summer. This was all accumulated as the result of bumps and dents that resulted mostly along Front St. in the ordinary course of operating our schedules," the bus line proprietor said.

France Desires Rhine Frontier After the War

London, Dec. 4 —(CP)— The Paris radio said today that Gen. DeGaulle, now in Moscow, is believed to be discussing with Premier Stalin France's desire for a frontier on the Rhine after the war.

"It is safe to assume," the broadcast added, that Mr. Stalin will not oppose this desire.

Plans for French participation in the military occupation of Germany also are believed on the agenda for the Moscow talks, the Paris radio said.

Dispatches from Moscow last night said Gen. DeGaulle had his second meeting with Mr. Stalin at a long luncheon yesterday and declared the talks already had assured the basis for far-reaching French-Soviet understanding and collaboration.

Hamilton, Bermuda, Dec. 4 (CP) —The "lawlessness and criminal behaviour" of American naval personnel ashore in Bermuda was criticized by M. A. Gibbons, member of the colony's House of Assembly, at an Assembly session Saturday.

Squirrel Enjoys Home Life With Marmora Family

Marmora, Dec. 4 (Special) — "Cracker" is the name bestowed upon a black squirrel in the Marmora district who voluntarily chose to be domesticated. This little fellow commenced his frolics upon a wood pile in the back kitchen of the home of Mr. and Mrs. Harold P. Nayler on the evening of October 7th. The children invited him in and now he is established in that household with a prestige no feline can exceed. He enters and leaves the kitchen at will and comes out of any hiding place at the sound of his name. As he enters the kitchen he has the habit of springing from one occupant to the other. When Mrs. Nayler carries in wood she has difficulty in keeping him off her shoulder, especially if she is wearing her earrings, for he feigns a chew of them.

Sometimes he wanders to a neighbor's house where he will repeat the same performance of springing from one member of the family to the rest. When at home, he takes his drinks of water from a fish bowl in which there is a solitary goldfish. His diet is interesting to note. He has a partiality for apples and also relishes toast upon which peanut butter has been spread. For a pastime, he plays with the children's marbles, a veritable hide-and-seek game. A week ago, a flying squirrel, which had been captured was lodged in the same home but efforts to domesticate it having proved futile he was released. "Cracker" is there to stay.

While voters of the city lived up to their traditional slowness in going to the polls in the civic elections today, what may be judged as a criterion in vote volume is seen in the fact that only 48 voters took advantage of the advance poll.

Whatever the total vote may be at least the weatherman cannot be blamed for any lack of appearance of voters at the 27 polling divisions of the city. A clear, cool, crisp morning greeted electors and aspirants, and with city streets being gradually cleared of snow accumulation, the weather afforded no serious handicap to taxpayers.

Interest on the street during the earlier hours was lackadaisical. There was no great rush for the polls, but as in former years, the greater part of the vote will be cast during the luncheon hour, and the afternoon.

Election officials look for a vote that should equal if not better the 3,966 cast last year. This is a little better than fifty per cent of the 7,636 voters entered on the official lists.

Aspirants to all civic vacancies were around bright and early with automobiles ready for the transportation of the electorate to the polls.

Murney Reddick, R.R. No. 7, Belleville, walked into Pappas' pool room to enjoy a game of billiards on Saturday evening. Taken to Station

Two R.C.A.F. officers from the Mountain View Bombing School were escorted from the Trianon Ball Room on Saturday night after alleged disturbances during which they refused to leave when requested by the management. The officers were given into the custody of the R.C.A.F. service police and returned to Mountain View under escort.

40 Cases Liquor Taken From Store At Deseronto

Robbers broke and entered the Ontario Liquor Store at Deseronto over the weekend and stole assorted whiskies valued at upwards of $1,200. Some 40 cases in all were reported missing following inventory taken by Joseph Gaulin, store vendor, yesterday.

Following police investigation it is believed the robbers stole a motor car in Belleville, later obtained two crowbars and a sledge hammer from a railway section house between here and Deseronto and then broke open the main entrance leading into the liquor store. The robbery was discovered by Mr. Gaulin shortly before noon on Sunday, when he found the Deseronto liquor store door insecure. Inside were found two railway crowbars and a sledge hammer, all of which are the type used by railway sectionmen. Chief N. Langton, of Deseronto, was immediately notified and later Provincial Constables J. E. Doubliere and Chas. Siple of Belleville, assisted in the investigation.

Believed to link in with the robbery was the report of a stolen sedan in Belleville late Sunday morning. The vehicle taken was a 1939 model Packard sedan bearing licence plate number 32-R-67. This sedan is the property of the West End Motors here, but had been stored in Trudeau's Station St. garage from where it was stolen. The rear seat of the sedan had been thrown away and left abandoned before the vehicle was driven out of the garage. This car was later recovered in Toronto, where it was found abandoned.

Investigating police are of the opinion this sedan was used to transport the bulk of the stolen liquor to Toronto.

Flt. Sergeant Given Posthumous Promotion

Mrs. Marjorie McCaw, 178 Bridge Street, East, has received word from the R.C.A.F. informing her of the promotion of her son to the rank of Flight Sergeant following his being reported missing and later presumed dead as result of a flight over Berlin during March, 1943. The promotion procedure is made retroactive in order to extend the same recognition to those who have unhappily lost their lives.

Marmora and District

Marmora.—St. Paul's Ladies' Guild held a euchre party in the Parish Hall on Wednesday evening. Fourteen tables were in play. Honors went to Frank Leal and Mrs. George Kerr. Refreshments were served at the close of play.

Among those attending the induction service at St. Paul's on Thursday evening were Messrs. F. Smith, A. Warren and R. Grinrod of Madoc and Mrs. H. H. Alger and Mrs. A. S. McConnell of Stirling.

Although roads were very heavy here on Friday due to the snowstorm of the day previous, due to plow operations, there was no hold up of highway traffic. Children quickly donned skis at the close of the afternoon school session to enjoy the winter thrills once more.

PRICES CHANGED

Fredericton, Dec. 4 — (CP) — A general advance in prices of certain brands of spirits and imported wines ranging from five cents to $1, and a number of reductions in other brands from five cents to $1.25 were announced Saturday by the New Brunswick Liquor Control Board.

To the Citizens of Belleville:

Owing to an apparent widespread misunderstanding over the cause of the city bus service not operating during the period between 3.30 p.m. and 5 p.m. on Saturday, we feel that an explanation is due the general public.

The buses were unable to operate during that period because of traffic conditions on Front Street. This was directly due to the severe storm which resulted in automobiles being parked irregularly and at considerable distances from the curbs. As a result the drivers found it impossible for two buses to pass each other on Front St. for a considerable period on Saturday afternoon.

The service was continued as long as was humanly possible having regard to the safety of passengers and equipment. During the period on Saturday afternoon when the traffic was at its height, the buses were unable to operate on Front Street and the drivers were ordered to remain at the bus terminal until 5 p.m. when the crowded condition of Front Street had been considerably improved.

We hope that this regrettable inconvenience to the general public will not occur again.

FRED RAWSON,
RAWSON BUS LINES.

GREEK PREMIER

British-supported Premier George Papandreou charged the E.A.M. faction with deliberately fomenting civil war out of the struggle to disarm the E.L.A.S., the armed resistance formations of the Leftist E.A.M.

Martial law was declared in the city. British tanks and armed parachutists patrolled the streets. Greek and British planes circled low.

Athens was without electricity, gas or communications.

The radio was out and the government was unable to communicate with the people. A survey of hospitals in the city showed that yesterday's riot toll was 21 dead and [illegible] injured and wounded.

Martial law has been declared in the city.

The strike had been threatened earlier by the left wing E. A. M. (National Liberation Party) after Greek police forces fired yesterday on the crowds of E. A. M. demonstration.

The developments, accompanied by a pitched battle between Royalists and E.A.M. army members in an Athens suburb, intensified the crisis facing Papandreou who is attempting to reconstruct his cabinet following Saturday's resignation of six Leftist ministers.

(In a broadcast to the Greek people recorded in London, Papandreou declared that Leftwing leaders are "leading the country to civil war" and pleaded for unity to overcome the "mortal crisis" which he said was facing the state.)

Impose Curfew

In an attempt to prevent further violence the government last night imposed a curfew on Athens from 7 p. m. to 6 a. m.

The trouble began yesterday when Papandreou forbade an E. A. M. demonstration called in protest against his government's edict that all guerillas be demobilized and disarmed — a decree that has brought about the resignation of the six cabinet ministers.

After Sunday morning's shooting, British armored cars and tanks patrolled the streets while Greek air force and R.A.F. planes circled low over the city.

Leaflets Distributed

Leaflets were distributed among British soldiers urging them to disobey the orders of Maj.-Gen. R. M. Scobie, British commander in Greece.

Scobie posted an announcement throughout the city which said: "I reiterate that with the vast majority of Greeks I stand firmly behind the constitutional government and shall aid them to the limit of my resources until the Greek state can be re-established with lawful armed force behind it, and free elections held."

Affects All Utilities.

The strike affected all utilities except water. Even the unloading of relief supplies [illegible] giving point, in the E.A.M. territory, [illegible] only democracy.

British Sherman tanks and armed paratroopers repeatedly attempted to disperse the crowds peacefully yesterday but were largely unsuccessful.

Demonstrators paraded past the British Embassy with signs reading "British soldiers: Let us choose our own government."

Scobie said [illegible] clemency clearly [illegible] intention [illegible] as a whole [illegible] strike if possible.

On the other hand, the Secretary-General of E.A.M., [illegible] Partsalides, declared [illegible] we will fight [illegible] Papandreou and his government.

Asked if the E.L.A.S. military arm of the leftist E.A.M. would surrender their arms on Dec. 10 as ordered by the British-backed Papandreou government, the E.A.M. leader replied, "after this morning (Sunday) how can we?"

Goebbels and Hun Bottlenecks

Germany's shortcomings are to be guarded, according to an order by Goebbels, forbidding all public discussion of the war situation. He declares that this is necessary to conceal deficiencies and bottlenecks and then goes on to predict that Germany will be the better equipped to overcome these shortcomings if they are hidden from the Allies.

Goebbels admits that the countless decisions which have to be taken hourly and daily in all Germany's conduct of the war, "inevitably contain a certain proportion of mistakes" which he says are caused by human and other shortcomings which may well have regrettable consequences. Hitler, whose whereabouts and condition have been the object of considerable speculation never admitted mistakes, though Goebbels says mistakes are being made. Hitler has been credited with some of the gravest mistakes possible for any leader to make, the decision to war on Russia, the conduct of the German campaign before Stalingrad, and the campaign in North Africa which lost the Germans the northern fringe of the Continent of Africa which they had entered as the associate of Italy.

Goebbels' latest order is proof enough of the troubles facing the German state. Hitler, Himmler and Goebbels have been unable to prevent the Germans talking about matters he thinks they should not talk about. It is an admission of weakness though of course Goebbels must know that the Allies know of these from the results of the hammerings the Allied air power has poured upon German industrial centres and communications.

Wartime Inventions for Post-War Shipping

Although post-war ships will not have to dodge enemy torpedoes and mines, or ward off attacks from the air, even in peacetime they will apply many British wartime inventions to protect them against the ordinary maritime risks of ships at sea.

The Asdic—an unerring accurate device used to detect enemy submarines—can be used to locate the positions of wrecks, rocks, sandbanks and other obstructions, and it can be adapted to detect shoals of fish, and thus be of great service to the fish industry.

Radar, which at present detects enemy surface ships on the darkest nights and through the thickest fogs, in peacetime can be adapted to reduce marine collisions to a minimum. Radar gives the warning sufficiently in advance to avoid danger even when visibility is down to zero. If the Titanic—to take a classic example—had been radar-equipped, she would never have crashed into an iceberg.

Peacetime navigators may one day be able to set their course from radio "lighthouses" in the same manner that the radio beam is used to direct aircraft to its destination.

Despite the fact that nothing can be done about the weather, storms at sea have lost some of their terrors due to new life-saving methods. Life-jackets with flashing lights, and marvelously equipped fireproof life boats containing devices for making seawater drinkable, and many other inventions will do much to diminish the danger that men at sea must face in peace as well as wartime.

Paradise of Planner

(Vancouver Province)

Sir Ernest Simon, noted businessman, former Lord Mayor of Manchester and former Liberal M.P., opening a conference of landscape artists in London recently, compared town-planning in the Soviet Union with town-planning in Britain—greatly to the disadvantage of the latter.

Moscow, he said, was the only city in the world "to make fundamental decisions about the population and area needed for an effective plan before developing a great city. Moscow decided that the population of 3,600,000 should be allowed to increase to 5,000,000, but never beyond that number. Any obstructive private interests were ruthlessly swept away.

"Moscow," said Sir Ernest, "is the paradise of the planner, and the planners were determined to make Moscow the finest capital in the world."

Bamboo Harvest in Britain

(United Kingdom Information Office)

All around Britain a strange harvest is being gathered in—a harvest of bamboo cane. Before the war, only Cornwall grew this crop, but through the dying off of supplies from China and Japan the strong British cane has become of front-line importance. Its strength is the main reason why bamboo cane is indispensable for the support of heavy crops. There are bamboo groves even in the north of Scotland where some of the finest canes grow. The cane dealers (usually also growers) will travel to any part of the British Isles to buy the whole grove outright, so heavy is the demand for crop supports. Bundles of 100 carefully-graded canes are tied on a special bunlding machine, a rack with a strong foot pedal, which ropes them together.

Winter

Winter made its entry with greater emphasis this year than it has done for a few years. Everyone can recall a winter in the thirtees which opened in late October bringing snow which froze to the ground and did not melt until the next spring. But that was five weeks or more earlier in the season than this year's first storm.

The arrival of winter in 1944 is far later than the average. But it set a record for many years in the volume of the snow in the first storm of the season. One of the predictions going the rounds in autumn was the guess that this would be a mild winter and another was that the weather was to be very severe, support for the latter view being given it was claimed by the large crop of hickory nuts, the height of the muskrat houses, and other aspects of nature. While the winter has not been severe so far, the forecaster of a mild winter did not count on a thirteen-inch-deep deposit of snow so soon.

It All Depends

Adolf Hitler, January 15, 1934: "The Nazi racial idea does not lead to scorn or contempt for other nations but rather to the natural respect for the life and character of other people. The new German Reich has no wish except to live in peace and friendship."

Robert Ley (Hitler's labor minister), February 19, 1940: "The German race, that it our faith. It has higher rights than all others. A German laborer is worth more than an English lord. We have divine right to rule and we shall assure ourselves of that right."

Joseph Goebbels, November 24, 1944: "We Germans have never held the opinion that war is something to strive for. We do not feel ourselves superior to other nations."

Apparently, adds The Kansas City Star, it all depends on whether the Germans are preparing for a war, winning a war or losing a war.

Use of Lightning Bugs

The Japs at an advanced New Guinea base must remember their childhood love of catching lightning bugs, because they've been catching them in wholesale quantities, says The Army Officer. Some of our patrols reported that lightning bugs were performing mysterious gyrations along the jungle trails. They seemed to be signaling. Investigation disclosed that Jap patrol leaders had mashed up the tail lights off the lightning bugs, had smeared the phosporescent substance on their fingers, and were maintaining contact between members of their night patrols by signalling with their glowing fingertips.

Britain's Sea Record

The loss of 2,978 lives by enemy action in the course of 10,000,000 movements of British army personnel by sea up to the end of September represents only .0028 per cent of the total. This achievement was due not only to the safeguards maintained by the Royal Navy and the R.A.F., but to good planning work carried out by "Q" movements at the War Office.

JUST FOLKS

(Copyright, 1944, Edgar A. Guest)

By EDGAR A. GUEST

JACK MINER

When the geese come back in the spring
  And learn that their friend has gone,
I wonder will they take to wing
  And try to follow him on?

When they look for their friend again,
  As they've done in the years before,
Will they stay with us who remain
  Or seek him the wide world o'er?

They loved him, the young and the old
  Wild goose and the whistling swan!
What then, when the flocks are told
  The man who was kind has gone?

There were hunters wherever they flew
  And snares for the careless wing.
Now, they'll grieve for the friend they knew
  When the birds come back in the spring.

Federal Measures To Aid Canadians in Post-War Era

By D'ARCY O'DONNELL
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Ottawa, Dec. 4 — (CP) — The Dominion government during 1944 has rounded out its program for the rehabilitation of service personnel and adopted measures aimed at improving living conditions generally in Canada in the post-war period.

Priority was given measures aimed at facilitating the return of the service man and woman to civilian life, but attention also was given to a family allowance bill that will provide a monthly allowance for every child in Canada.

In first place among the rehabilitation measures was the war services gratuity bill, providing cash grants and rehabilitation credits to volunteers, draftees obligated to serve without territorial limitations or in the Aleutians, to members of the women's services, within a year after discharge.

The scale of the gratuities:

1. For every 30 days service in the western hemisphere, including Canada, the West Indies, Newfoundland and South America, $7.50.
2. For every 30 days service overseas, including the Aleutians, Iceland and Greenland, $15.
3. For each six months service overseas, seven days' pay and allowances.
4. Subject to certain conditions a re-establishment credit approximately equal to the total amount of the gratuity.

The gratuity payments, scheduled to begin early in 1945, in the case of death will be made to next-of-kin who were in receipt of dependents' allowances or who were dependent upon a man before he was killed.

During the year the government took steps to increase the clothing allowance to discharged personnel first from $35 to $65 and then to $100. Those discharged were allowed to keep one uniform.

They were entitled to a rehabilitation grant of one month's pay and allowances, to reinstatement in their peace-time job, to out-of-work benefits while awaiting employment, to allowances while taking vocational or university training, to allowances while awaiting returns from a business or crop, and to a loan for settlement on a farm under provisions of the veterans land act.

Pensions Revision

Pensions and disability regulations were revised and rehabilitation centres were set up for personnel who felt they were not fit to step out of uniform into civilian life immediately.

Veterans were assured preference in examinations for civil service jobs and steps were taken to return to Canada at the government's expense the dependents of Canadians who married while overseas.

The former pensions and health department was divided into two departments. A department of veterans affairs was set up to deal only with the affairs of ex-servicemen. Alongside it was set up a department of National Health and Social Welfare to handle legislation that would affect all Canadians in the post-war years.

The Health and Welfare department will handle the family allowance bill. The allowances will be payable after July 1, 1945, in respect of every child in Canada—it is estimated there are 1,500,000 children under 16. However, only 750,000 would benefit as the allowances paid to families in the higher income brackets will be drained back through income tax.

Allowances will be paid on a scale of $5 a month for a child less than six years old; $6 a month for a child six or more but less than 10; $7 a month for a child 10 or more but less than 13, and $8 a month for a child 13 or more but less than 16. The scale will be reduced for the fifth and subsequent children in families of more than four.

In another step to improve living conditions, the government guaranteed the loaning of $285,000,000 to prospective home owners, to slum clearance projects, to those wishing to repair their existing homes and to those who agreed to build low rental houses.

Measures aimed at keeping farm and fish prices at a steady level and at encouraging export trade also were approved by parliament.

No definite steps were taken to introduce National health insurance. Study of a draft insurance bill has been completed by a house of commons committee on social security, but further action was postponed until a dominion-provincial conference is held to iron out financial arrangements.

Commons, Senate Continue Debate On Conscription

Ottawa, Dec. 4. (CP)—The Commons and the Senate reconvene today following the weekend adjournment to continue debate on the conscription issue.

In the Commons, Leonard Tremblay, Liberal member for Dorchester constituency in Quebec, will resume the debate, in which some 15 or more members wish to take part before the vote is taken on Prime Minister Mackenzie King's vote of confidence motion.

The Commons is expected to take the confidence vote Tuesday or Wednesday, but in the meantime members are giving thought to the forecast made in the Senate Friday by Senator Norman Lambert (L-Ontario) that an extension of the life of parliament is more likely than dissolution.

Prime Minister Mackenzie King has said on several occasions that he hopes to put off a general election until after the war and also that he is opposed to an extension of the life of parliament which is scheduled to end on April 16 unless dissolved earlier.

Political circles on Parliament Hill figure that if the war lasts as long as now seems probable the prime minister will have to decide either to have another wartime election or agree to extending the life of parliament.

Members spoken to do not think Mr. King would countenance leaving Canada without a House of Commons for any unnecessarily long period between dissolution and a general election. If he decided on dissolution he would want the election of a new house as soon as possible—approximately 58 days.

Law experts, who have been searching the statutes, find nothing to prevent the government from dissolving parliament or letting it expire April 16, issuing writs for a new election but putting off the election date until the following December or January. All a government would have to provide against is the provision that the interval between the end of one session and the beginning of another not exceed 12 months. There would have to be a parliament ready to meet by April 15, 1946.

The impression here is that Mr. King would be emphatic that if this parliament is dissolved another must be elected in the shortest possible time and a member of his cabinet expressed the same view.

SAVE YOUR TEETH.

Man who says he is past eighty-five writes:

I attended a lecture delivered by you in Lincoln, Nebraska, some years ago, and ever since that night have been a follower of yours — belly breathing and the iodine ration have done wonders for me—my circulation has been improved to such an extent that I am no longer bothered with cold clammy hands and feet. (Signed D.D.)

Memorandum: We must be sure to include belly breathing and the iodine ration (my spelling Iodin Ration) in the booklet in preparation on "The Forgotten People."

After that lecture, believe it or not, I received an official communication from the Nebraska State Dental Society or Association (I forget the actual name), anyway some organization of dentists expressing approval of my teachings about the care of the teeth, oral hygiene, dentistry, etc.

I hasten to explain, however, that it was some time after that, as nearly as I can recollect, that I tossed toothbrushes and dentifrices out of the window, so far as preservation of the teeth is concerned, and probably few dentists in Nebraska have approved of anything I have said or taught about the teeth or their care since then. I mean officially or publicly.

Recently I revised the No. 1 Little Lesson in the Ways of Health—Save Your Teeth — it is No. 1 because I believe saving the teeth is the most important rule of personal health. I carefully deleted from the new edition (1) the trade name I tried to get the dentists to adopt for their office signs, professional cards, stationery, etc., and (2) mention of the peg tooth (that was a grievous error on my part and I have published here my acknowledgement of the error several times.) I have introduced into the new edition a chapter on Immediate Dentures, which, I suppose will not please practitioners of the nineteenth century school, but on the other hand it should help to promote wider recognition of this modern technique by people whose business, professional or social engagements would be too greatly hampered by the necessity of going toothless for weeks or months.

The new edition of Save Your Teeth is available to any reader who asks for it (clipping is not a request), incloses twenty-five cents and stamped envelope bearing his address.

So far only a few hundred dentists have asked for it. I hope five thousand will — dentists or physicians, of course, receive the book without charge—provided they ask for it themselves (not through the office boy) on stationery which shows what degree they have, and inclose a stamped pre-addressed envelope. I'll be grateful to any dentist or physician of standing who may offer any criticism of what I say or fail to say in the booklet—favorable or unfavorable criticism. In any event whatever a dentist or physician may say to me in such a communication is a confidential communication, unless the doctor gives his express consent to publication or quotation of his comment.

QUESTIONS and ANSWERS

Pimples and Sweets

I am fifteen and have a lot of blackheads and pimples. Mother says they are caused by sweets—I certainly am a candy and ice cream hound, so I cut out all sweets for six weeks, but still have as many blackheads and pimples. (A. Q.)

Answer—Not sugar, candy, sweets, refined carbohydrate—which most people, including your mother no doubt, consume in excess of normal requirement, but rather the lack of other elements essential for good nutrition and good health, accounts for the blackheads and pimples. However, your excessive intake of such sugar and starch so easily fulfills your caloric requirement your hidden hunger (for equally essential vitamins and minerals or rather for the natural foods that contain them) is for the time being blunted or satisfied. Send stamped pre-addressed envelope and ask for (do not use clipping) pamphlet on "Acne."

HORSELEACH'S DAUGHTERS

What is meant by the horseleach's daughters?

Proverbs 30:14-16 says: "There is a generation, whose teeth are as swords, and their jaw teeth as knives, to devour the poor from off the earth, and the needy from among men. The horseleach hath two daughters, crying, Give, give. There are three things that are never satisfied, yea, four things say not, It is enough: The grave; and the barren womb; the earth that is not filled with water; and the fire that saith not, It is enough."

The Hebrew "alugah" so translated is of uncertain meaning. Some authorities suppose it to signify "sucker" and to refer to a variety of the blood-sucking worms known as leeches.

The context of Proverbs 30:15 clearly relates the horseleach's with greed, rapacity and devouring.

Other authorities, however, believe that the passage in question is an allusion to a mythical vampire-like creature, perhaps the Lilith of Oriental legend.

"Leech," formerly spelled "leach," is derived from Anglo-Saxon "laece," one who relieves pain, which in turn is from "laecnian," to heal.

In the days when blood-letting was regarded as a virtual cure-all, blood-sucking worms were widely used by physicians in bleeding patients. The worms were probably called leeches because they were thought to be healers. In other words, the physician and the blood-sucking worm received the name leech for the same reasons.

A veterinary surgeon or horse-doctor was called a horse-leech, a name also applied to a European species of blood-sucking worm that was believed to attack the nose and mouth of horses while drinking but which is now known to feed chiefly on other worms.

Leeches, which are generally flat in shape and which have segmented and ringed bodies, are found in the sea, in fresh-water and on the land in many parts of the world. They are a common pest to both man and beast in Bible lands.

It is said that the leech is the only creature that can survive being turned inside out.

REV. A. E. PEPPER GOES TO ST. PAUL'S IN BROCKVILLE

Formerly Served at North Belleville Mission and Later at Shannonville

Announcement was made recently of the appointment of Rev. Allan E. Pepper, M.A., now rector of the parish of Newboro, to be rector of St. Paul's Church, Brockville, succeeding Rev. Canon L. E. Davis, M.A., who is this week assuming new duties as secretary of the synod of the diocese of Ontario in Kingston. Mr. Pepper will take up his new duties in Brockville on January 1.

Born in Ottawa in 1901, Mr. Pepper moved to Prescott as a small boy, accompanying his mother who took up residence there with her parents, the late Mr. and Mrs. Peter Allan, on the death of her husband. He attended the Prescott public and high schools and was brought up in St. John's parish there. After leaving school he went to Toronto and worked as a clerk for four years in the offices of the Harris Abattoir Co. and Steele, Briggs & Co. seed merchants, before deciding upon entry in the ministry.

Mr. Pepper pursued studies in Arts at the University of Toronto, graduating in 1927, and then entered upon the course in theology at Wycliffe College, from which he graduated in 1930. He was ordained a deacon the same year by the Rt. Rev. C. A. Seager and priested the following year by the same Bishop, being appointed to the North Belleville mission in 1930. There he served under the direction of the Rt. Rev. John Lyons, now Bishop of the diocese of Ontario, for some months until his appointment to be assistant curate on the North Hastings mission, with headquarters at Bancroft. In 1933 he went to the mission of Shannonville, staying until he was appointed rector of Tweed and Madoc in 1939. In November, 1941, he succeeded Rev. H. K. Coleman, B.D., now rector of Trinity Church, Brockville, as rector of Newboro, with additional congregations at Elgin and Portland.

Mrs. Pepper was formerly Miss Keitha MacDonald, of Point Anne, Ont., and they have one son.

MARMORA

Rev. J. Brownlie Installed Rector St. Paul's Parish

Marmora — St. Paul's Anglican Church, Marmora, was filled to capacity on Thursday evening, despite the inclemency of the weather when Right Rev. John Lyons, D.D., Bishop of Ontario, carried out induction and institution of the new rector, Rev. J. M. Brownlie, L.Th., S.Th., assisted by Rural Dean W. J. Robinson of Tweed and Rev. C. C. Bradill, rector of Stirling. Very Rev. R. Seeley, Dean of Ontario, who was to have been the special preacher, was held up at Deseronto owing to heavy roads and at the last moment, Bishop Lyons, in addition to exercising his office as arranged, generously took the Dean's place as preacher. He gave an inspiring address on the words of the great Commission: "Go ye into all the world." Adding to the dignity of the service was the presence of the choir in their new vestments made within the past two weeks by members of the Ladies' Guild. Before his sermon, the Bishop extended congratulations to the parish for this innovation as well as other recent accomplishments, such as the interior decoration of the Rectory and basement repairs to the church.

As the offertory was taken, a quartette, composed of Mr. and Mrs. L. R. Rundle, Mrs. P. Gray and Mrs. I. B. Nichol sang "Living for Jesus." A reception was held in the Town Hall following the service at which refreshments were served and short speeches were made by the Bishop, the rector, Rev. E. M. Cadigan of St. Andrew's United Church and prominent laymen of the parish, which now includes St. Mark's, Bonarlaw.

British Papers Criticize Stand U.S. on Aviation

London, Dec. 4 —(CP)— The British press today sharply criticized the American attitude at the international air conference in Chicago. The general view was that so far the conference has been a failure.

Some papers saw the race for air supremacy after the war as already under way following the announcement of the United States air agreement with Spain.

The Times said the first lesson to be learned from the Chicago meeting "is the danger of supposing that complicated and contentious international issues can be settled by the simple application of some broad general principle like 'non-discrimination or freedom of the air'."

Says America Using Big Stick.

The Daily Herald said flatly "the air conference in Chicago is ending as it began—with America using a big stick."

The Daily Mail said that "only semi-freedom" of the air can be expected as a result of the Chicago meeting and predicted that Britain's air will be closed to commercial traffic from other nations and "opened by separate negotiations until the Commonwealth's ideal of international control of world air space is achieved."

The Daily Telegraph said "with the failure of the Chicago conference on civil aviation after exactly one month's negotiation, a race for post-war supremacy in the air is threatened."

TRENTON

W. H. Ireland Suffers $7,000 Loss in Fire

Trenton, Dec. 4—Fire almost completely destroyed the residence of W. H. Ireland, 36 Marmora St., late Sunday afternoon with firemen working feverishly for more than two hours to control the blaze, which seemed to be leaping from every corner of the house.

Mr. Ireland, his daughter and two sons were away from the house at the time and Mrs. Ireland narrowly escaped being trapped. She had gone down to the basement and as she attempted to climb the stairs the flames leaped ahead of her and cut off her escape. Rushing to another door which led out of the basement into the back yard she had to step over fire to gain an exit. Running to the front she again entered the house and called firemen, who were quickly on the scene.

Had to Break Windows

Several streams of hose were brought to play and firemen had to break windows and put the water through with the hope of reaching the fire as they were unable to get into the house, so great was the conflagration.

It is thought the fire must have been burning, probably in the stairway for some time and when Mrs. Ireland, in opening the basement door, allowed the air to pass through, the entire building burst into flames.

Though much of the furniture escaped actual burning, it is estimated a probable damage of $6,000 to $7,000 resulted from smoke and water. Drapes, rugs, and furnishings of all kinds were completely destroyed.

Mrs. Ireland suffered slight burns to her arms as she rushed to the telephone to obtain help.

Arrives Home

Flying Officer Leonard McGaughey, son of Mr. and Mrs. I. McGaughey, 54 Benedict St., was among those to arrive home from overseas during the past week.

Overseas for the past two and a half years F/O McGaughey has made twenty-seven trips over Germany with the Moose Squadron and expects now to be posted somewhere in Canada. Luck in the form of a minor accident kept him from disaster when the balance of his crew crashed during their last trip recently. He was unable to go along as just the night before he had accidentally injured his hand and was sent to hospital.

"Most of my raids were without much incident" stated McGaughey, "but once we were caught in a cone light for more than nine minutes, while another time we were lost over Germany but finally made our way home. Caught in enemy searchlight gives one a feeling of hopelessness for a while," he said, "but luckily we came out alright, by the skill of a super pilot."

F/O McGaughey trained at Malton, Jarvis and Rivers, Man., receiving his Observer's Wing at the latter station in July, 1942.

While in England he married a Yorkshire girl serving in the WAAFS and she is expected to join her husband in Trenton in the very near future.

Awarded Scholarship

Frank Stojan, a last year's graduate of the Trenton High School, and who has recently been a medical student at Queen's University has been awarded the Second Carter Scholarship. Stojan, it is understood has now joined the Royal Canadian Army Medical Corps.

He will be remembered in Trenton as not only one of the outstanding students at the school but as being intensely interested in sports of all kinds in the town, particularly hockey.

$500,000 Fire At Cowansville

Cowansville, Que., Dec. 4 (CP)—Damage estimated by Mayor Eugene Boisvert at "about $500,000" was caused by fire which swept both sides of Main Street here Sunday and virtually isolated this eastern township centre.

The fire, of unknown origin, left 15 families homeless, a total of 45 persons, left the town without telegraph or telephone communications and cut off power so that candles proved the only light.

The town's two drug stores were destroyed and efforts were made to rush drugs here by trucks along heavily-drifted roads. There were no casualties and only minor injuries were suffered by a few persons. However, an 83-year-old woman, Mrs. P. E. Hauver, died of a heart attack when she saw neighboring buildings take fire. Her own home was spared.

Firefighters, rushed from Montreal, Farnham and Granby, put the flames under control after several hours' work. Seven buildings, housing stores, offices and apartments were destroyed.

POSTS RESERVED

London, Dec. 4 (CP) — As a recognition of the "special debt" owed by Britain to its servicemen, 75 per cent of administrative posts in the civil service, 66 2-3 per cent of executive posts and 50 per cent of clerical posts will be reserved for discharged members of the forces after the war. This policy was set out in a government white paper.

Ontario Services Club in London Most Attractive

By FRANK LOWE
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

London, Dec. 4 (CP) — They've plumped a bit of Ontario flush on the outskirts of Piccadilly.

This bit of central Canadian hospitality is called the Ontario Services Club and it is the brightest, most attractive hostel for servicemen and women in this city. Its spirit lives up to its appearance.

Opened September 12, the club is not quite completed yet but already is operating at top capacity with some 1,200 men and women in uniform using it daily while on week-ends this daily figure jumps to more than 1,500.

Built on a corner a block from teeming Piccadilly, it is one thing in the city you can't miss. Its gleaming white exterior with the big, display-room like windows, topped by a huge Ontario coat of arms, stands out like a Canadian accent in this city of old buildings with little glass.

Pushing open the swinging doors and stepping inside is a fast way to take a proxy trip home. Pretty girls of the Canadian Red Cross Corps greet you at the information desk. As you hang up your coat another tells you, "Have an apple, chum."

Chief attractions of the club to Canadians weary of spam and sausages are the canteens and snack bars where the food is as close to what "Ma used to cook" as rationing permits.

Off the main lounge is a library with some 600 books donated by English friends, looked after by two trained librarians.

Newest addition to the hostel is a room for Canadian servicewomen which will sleep 20 girls.

Heading the club is Mrs. Arthur Purvis of Montreal. Helping her is Mrs. R. S. Brown, Saint John, [illegible] Corps who heads the 44 Red Cross girls at the hostel.

Mrs. Brown says she "loves the work" and that the some thing goes for all the girls, too. It isn't necessary to take her word for it —her right hand woman, Miss L. E. Smallwood, of Midland, Ont., agrees.

Canadian Artillery Fire at Dunkerque Increased Say Huns

London, Dec. 4 (C.P. Reuter) — The German D.N.B. agency reported today that Canadian artillery fire against the fortress area of besieged Dunkerque had increased since yesterday morning. Lively troop and transport movements pointed to an early start of new large scale attacks, the agency added.

Except for this and other enemy reports there has been no official indication of Canadian activity against the Channel port which was left far behind in the Allied drive through France to the Low Countries and Germany.

D.N.B. said Saturday that Canadian troops after an artillery barrage of several hours had opened a large-scale attack on the eastern side of Dunkerque.

As the 1st. Canadian Army swept up the Channel coast and moved on into Holland during the summer, British units under Gen. Crerar's command were assigned to contain the enemy garrison in Dunkerque.

Later it was reported that a Czecho brigade of the 1st. Canadian army was laying siege to Dunkerque.

Sqdn.-Ldr. Gordon Lapp Of Medicine Hat Downs Messerschmitt 109

London, Dec. 4. (CP Cable)—F.O. "Judy" Garland of Richmond, Ont., downed one of the Germans' newest aircraft, one of the jet-propelled type, yesterday when nearly 100 of these planes went into action against R.A.F. Tempests over the western front.

"I got behind him and opened up with cannon", Garland said. "Next moment he spun into a wood near the Rhine and blew up."

Sqdn. Ldr. Gordon Lapp of Medicine Hat, Alta., brought the fighters' score to two for the day when he destroyed a Messerschmitt 109.

CANADA'S VETERANS

Their Post-War Opportunities

This is the tenth of a series of advertisements to inform the people of Canada of plans to re-establish men and women of the armed forces. To get the full details save and read every advertisement.

A Worthwhile Work For All Canadians —

THE COMMUNITY'S SHARE IN RE-ESTABLISHMENT

This is the final advertisement in the series dealing with Canada's plans for the re-establishment of its men and women in the armed forces. Previous statements have told of the Canadian legislation, and have outlined the opportunities open after discharge to the men and women in uniform. Cash grants paid on discharge have been reviewed and service men and women have been advised how they may take advantage of the post-discharge program. It is important that these things be understood fully, not only by those in the Navy, Army and Air Force, but also by all citizens of Canada.

ALL HAVE A RESPONSIBILITY

The problem of re-establishment, however, can not be solved alone by Parliament providing machinery and financing. Neither can it be solved merely by the men and women in uniform taking advantage of that machinery and that financing. To be fully successful the Canadian plan for returning its fighting forces to civilian life needs and must have the full support of all. It needs support from employers, and the help of organized labour, skilled trades and other workers. It needs, above all, the help of the communities from which these men and women come.

PLANS ARE WIDESPREAD

As has been outlined, the Canadian plan for re-establishment is so all-embracing that it has been described as the most complete of any of the United Nations. There are cash grants at discharge, coupled with the war service gratuity and re-establishment credit. There is protection against illness and unemployment, and pensions for those disabled as a result of service. Wide opportunity is provided for state financed training either on the vocational or university level, with assistance in financing a business or in returning to farms and commercial fishing. The home owning provisions are generous—and because Canada throughout the war, has guarded against inflation and has financed soundly, all this monetary assistance is worth one hundred cents on the dollar. Canadians who have served will return to a nation sound financially.

MANY ARE HELPING NOW

Already government authorities are receiving a great deal of voluntary assistance. Veterans' organizations, such as the Canadian Legion, the Canadian Corps Association, the War Amputations of Canada, the Army and Navy Veterans, and others are rendering magnificent service. Canadian service clubs, and women's organizations are doing excellent work. Several hundred communities across Canada have formed volunteer committees to aid with the community problems of re-establishment, but there is need for many of these.

THE FUNCTIONS OF VOLUNTEER COMMITTEES

Volunteer Citizens Committees are set up under a government order-in-council. They are an official part of the Canadian re-establishment machinery. In a broad sense their function is to assist in the community re-establishment problems. These vary in different centres, but in a general sense the committees:

1. Organize home coming receptions for veterans.
2. Give local publicity to the re-establishment program.
3. Give advice and counsel to veterans on their re-establishment problems.
4. Assist in securing employment.
5. Advise the government on policies and on local problems.

These, however, are only highlights of the work which can be done, for the field is wide and the work is well worthwhile.

HOW TO ORGANIZE

In many communities where Volunteer Citizens' Committees have been formed, initial leadership has been provided by municipal authorities and veterans' organizations. Usually service clubs, business men and other community bodies have been invited to assist. The co-operation and aid of government authorities is available, for the problem of community re-establishment is regarded as a most important part of the work. If your community has not already formed a volunteer citizens' committee, full details and assistance may be secured by writing to the Department of Veterans' Affairs.

VETERANS' WELFARE OFFICERS ARE STATIONED IN KEY CENTRES THROUGHOUT CANADA. THEY ARE THE FRIENDS OF EX-SERVICE MEN AND WOMEN. IT IS THEIR DUTY TO ADVISE AND ASSIST ALL EX-SERVICE PERSONNEL WITH THEIR RE-ESTABLISHMENT PROBLEMS. IF THERE IS ANYTHING ABOUT THE REHABILITATION PROGRAM WHICH YOU DO NOT UNDERSTAND CONSULT YOUR NEAREST VETERANS' WELFARE OFFICER.

VETERAN'S AFFAIRS

HARRINGTON—BATCHELOR

Trenton.—The Rev. J. D. Martin of King Street United Church, Trenton, officiated at the wedding in the parsonage on Wednesday, November 29th, at two o'clock, of Lois Evelyn Batchelor, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin Batchelor, became the bride of Pte. Peter Harrington, son of Mrs. W. J. Waldon, of Treherne, Manitoba, and the late Mr. H. Harrington.

The bride was charmingly attired in a floor length heaven blue sheer gown, fashioned with embroidered bodice, sweetheart neckline and long tight fitting sleeves. Her cape length veil was caught to her hair with orange blossoms, and she carried a shower bouquet of red roses and bouvardia.

Mrs. Clayton Heath, of Trenton, as bridesmaid, was wearing an attractive frock of pink sheer with shoulder length veil falling from a tiny hat in matching shade to her dress. Her corsage was of pink roses.

For the reception at the home of the bride's parents, the bride's mother selected a sky blue crepe ensemble, accentuated with black accessories and corsage of red roses, she was assisted in receiving by the groom's sister, Miss Clara Harrington attired in a blue dress with corsage of red roses.

On the wedding trip to Toronto and Hamilton, the bride selected a two-tone gown in sand and brown crepe, a top coat of brown muskrat and brown hat with matching fur.

Pte. and Mrs. Harrington will take up residence in Trenton.

Both the groom and groomsman have only recently returned from service overseas. Another brother is still on the fighting front.

Wife Preservers

With some scraps of lumber and a little ingenuity a simple rack for milk bottles can be made to hang to the side of the house. It keeps freshly delivered milk off the ground, away from prowling animals, and its convenience is much appreciated by the milkman.

"But personally I think the best way to get carbohydrates and proteins is in a lip-smacking bowlful of Grape-Nuts Flakes."

"You said a mouthful, Professor! What a mouthful of tongue-tickling flavor and good nourishment!"

"Yes, my little chickadees, and not only do Grape-Nuts Flakes supply carbohydrates and proteins, but also useful quantities of iron and phosphorus and other food essentials. Not forgetting their malty-rich, sweet-as-a-nut taste."

"I guess all that comes from being made of two grains—wheat and malted barley—and being blended, baked and toasted for grand taste and easy digestion. I must pick up a package at the grocer's."

GOOD MANNERS

Tell the Host.

Dear Mrs. Beeckman,

The other evening my sister, her beau, my girl friend and I dined together at an inn. During the evening, when she wanted another glass of water, she herself called the waiter and asked him for it. I let this go by at dinner, but when we got home I told her that she should have asked her escort, who had invited us to dinner, to call the waiter and tell him her request. She disagrees with me, says she did the proper thing, but now we've agreed to abide by your decision as to who is right.

Bob

You're right, sir, definitely right. Since your sister's beau was the host, she should have done just what you told her she should have done. The girl who knows what's what lets her escort handle the ordering that pertains to his hospitality. And he'll be grateful to her, proud of her, if she gives him the chance to exercise his host-privileges!

Golden Wedding Dinner.

Dear Mrs. Beeckman,

We are giving a dinner in honor of my parents' Golden Wedding. Are my mother and dad supposed to sit at the centre of the table, or one at each end of the table? If we have a priest as guest of honor, where should he sit? And what about the seating of my sisters and brothers (my older sister and youngest brother are married the others are unmarried)?

J. V.

At a wedding anniversary dinner, "the bride and bridegroom", should sit next to each other, the "bride" on the "bridegroom's" right as they sat at the original wedding reception. The priest, the guest of honor, should be given the place of honor at your mother's right. Your older sister might be given the place at your father's left. The other seating-arrangements would be according to your choice, but remember that, except for your mother and father, it is not correct to seat husband and wife next to each other.

Reply to Invitation.

Dear Mrs. Beeckman,

When you receive an invitation to a wedding, and on the same page an invitation to the reception which reads "and afterward at the reception at the church parlors", should the reception invitation be answered?

Beth

Yes. This reception invitation should be answered just as one should reply to a separate reception-card-invitation, and to an invitation to a reception to be held in some place other than the church parlors. This response is a courtesy to the hosts of the wedding who must be informed as to how many guests to provide for.

Advice to the Lovelorn

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX

Little Girl's Stepfather Is Kinder Than Her Own Mother

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I have been married five months to a woman who has been married before and has one child of seven years. My wife's nerves are in bad shape after a serious breakdown. I love her very much but we are having trouble on account of the little girl. My wife can't get along with the child, shows her no affection, and is always scolding her. That's the way she was brought up herself by a cruel mother who brought up her family by force.

I get along fine with the child because I give her affection which the child craves. But I'm afraid she will turn against her own mother, and then my wife will blame me. I love them both and want them to love me. How can I explain to my wife that a child can't be brought up by force, and that she needs love, too? The little girl is also inclined to be nervous which I think is the reason she does not want to obey orders.

Tony.

If it would be possible to send your wife to a good psychiatrist, more than likely it would be a solution to your problem. Her attitude toward her child is undoubtedly the result of her serious nervous breakdown, and it's too bad that the little girl's future may carry the marks of this unfortunate influence.

Has the child any relations who would be willing to take her 'til your wife's health has improved?

Soldier Asked Girl to Cease Writing

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I have been corresponding with a soldier who is overseas, ano as we had known each other for a long time we exchanged photographs. He has now asked that we cease correspondence, as he doesn't have time to answer my letters, and hopes we can renew our acquaintance after the war.

It's a mystery to me, but if he feels the way I think he does, I want my photograph back. Do you think I ought to ask him for it? I'd have to keep his until he returns to this country. I am 25 years old, and he is 32.

L. U.

Under the circumstances I think it would be the right thing for you to ask for the return of your photograph. And tell him in a nice friendly little note, making it brief and cheerful, that you will return his to any address he may designate. It looks to me as if he may have got seriously interested in some girl he's met overseas, and she probably has become jealous of his writing to you.

Mother Refuses to Allow Her to See, Talk or Write to Her Fiance

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I'm a girl of 17 and have been employed for about a year. I am secretly engaged to a boy of 20 who is in the Army. I've known him for several years, but my mother does not like him because of his religion. She thinks he couldn't support me properly, although he had a good paying job before he was drafted. Mother refuses to allow me to see, talk, or write to him, and I love him very much. We intend to get married when he comes home on his next furlough. What would you advise me to do?

Puzzled.

If you and your fiance decide to marry during his next furlough, there are several serious questions which should be settled. Is your mother the type likely to become reconciled? Believe it or not, mothers are "good risks" for young people to be friendly with, despite the sinister tag attached to the word mother-in-law.

As for the young man's religion, unless it has to do with Cannibal rites or devil worship, it would seem she might be glad to have a son-in-law who belonged to any decent religion in these days.

Then, my dear, if you should decide to be obedient, please remember that at 17 and 20 you still have some time for such an important decision as marriage.

80th Birthday Is Celebrated

A pleasant event took place at 8 Octavia Street, on November 30, when Miss Martha Hamilton and her sister, Mrs. Clare entertained their nieces and nephews and a few relatives and friends at afternoon tea, it being Mrs. Clare's 80th birthday. The tea table was centred with a three-storey fruit won by Mrs. Clare at Belleville Fair, when she bought the lucky ticket on a cake donated by the I.O.D.E. Mrs. Clare was the recipient of many gifts, congratulatory messages, telegrams and the best wishes of all for many more happy birthdays.

Incidentally, Mrs. Clare was very proud of the fact that she celebrated her birthday on the same day as Prime Minister Winston Churchill.

Very beautiful is the trimming on the bolero from showrooms and shops. Nice for afternoon wear is a costume in velvet, the skirt hem and collarless bolero both with scalloped edge. Bolero is worn over a gilet of pink satin.

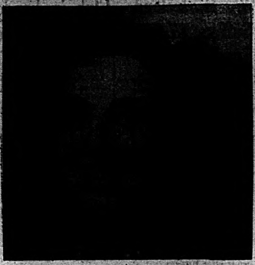
Toning Down the Sharp Voice



The softly modulated voice of screen star Sally Eilers is only one of her many charms.

By HELEN FOLLETT

HAVE you noticed that more women today have high, nervous voices than in the past? It puts a sharp edge on feminine conversation. It is the war, of course. Everybody is a bit more jittery, under increased pressure and strain—a state of affairs that expresses itself in the pitch of the voice as well as in the expression of faces.

Alexander Kipnis, distinguished basso of the Metropolitan Opera Association, believes that a shrill voice can ruin the charm of the most attractive women that a soft, modulated speaking voice can give the illusion of beauty to irregular features.

Voice Exercises.

He tells the girls what can be done to make an unpleasant voice lovely and attractive and suggests the following exercises:

Take a full breath, but not so deep as to acquire a feeling of rigidity. Then slowly sing a scale on the word "oh". Focus the tone forward in the mouth. Try to sing each note accurately, strive for as full a tone as possible.

For better control, take a deep breath and exhale, saying "ah" in a prolonged sigh. Then, in your normal speaking voice, begin the same way but start the "ah" very quietly, increasing the tone until it is loud and clear. Gradually decrease it until it trails off into a whisper. The progression from soft to loud, to soft again, should be smooth. The entire exercise should be in one breath.

Kipnis suggests that your voice should be pitched low. If it is naturally high or rises as soon as you are excited or enthusiastic, try talking at least one note lower than is natural for you. Do that for ten minutes each day. It may sound affected, but it will help you to achieve a lower natural pitch, and will make you more conscious of how your voice sounds to other people.

Remember what Shakespeare said about a soft, gentle, low voice? "It is an excellent thing in woman". Wise guy!

The Marry Go Round

Take it From Eve.

A girl can never resist the lure of a uniform. And neither can a man, apparently, in these days when the gals look so smart and snappy in them.

There are one and one-third women to every man in America. But don't worry. This won't lead to polygamy, so long as progressive marriage and alimonogamy are so popular.

Love, clothes and manners are practically all that distinguishes the civilized man from the savage. And they were originated and devised by WOMAN!

Losing a good cook may be one of the bitter adversities of war—but it has its compensations. "Since Maggie went away" and stopped loading the table with hot biscuits, fried chicken and other temptations, I can wear a size 18 and get into my favorite girdle again. Embonpoint doesn't come in a can!

"WHAT is the first necessary legal step toward a divorce?", asks Inquiring Bachelor. Answer: In your case, marriage.

The tenderest and most impressionable thing on earth is the heart of a brand new Reno-graduate. He or she seems eager to put the burnt fingers right back into the fire the moment the bandages are off.

Christmas Brides.

Every normal woman envies a Christmas bride. There is something about the combination of wedding bells and Christmas bells that tingles right through a girl and buttons up the back!

Add the glitter of a military wedding and there's the thrill that comes "only once in a lifetime"!

A man would usually rather just step off and avoid all the fuss and stage-effects in the war-time manner. But the girl knows better. She doesn't want to miss one of the very vital and definite joys of an otherwise tame and uncertain existence. It may be her One Big Moment! And no matter how the marriage may turn out, she wants the memory of her wedding to be thrilling and beautiful. That's why all women love a mistletoe wedding.

Here's to the Christmas Bride!

BEAUTY

By HELEN JAMESON

For the Girl Who Wears Specs.

Do you know that the skilled optical specialist is a beauty specialist, in his own cute little way? He realizes that the human countenance varies in contour and feature in innumerable ways, that glasses should conform not only to the features but to the type of person his customer happens to be. The newest glasses are tailored, with edges ground down or corners cut off, to suit the wearer. In most instances, the object is to make the glasses inconspicuous.

If you know your styles, you can date some of the individuals who still hang on to the types of lenses and frames that were popular long ago. Fashions in glasses have changed in every generation—even oftener than that—and they are still changing. In our own time, eye glasses with a black ribbon or cord over the ear have had a vogue, and the heavy "rubber-tired" spectacles have been in and out of fashion.

The history of specs is interesting. The discovery that glass discs —ground so that the surface curves, or is thinner or thicker at the centre than at the edges—would aid vision, make eyes see well that would otherwise see indistinctly or not at all, was startling indeed. The eyes are such delicate mechanisms that comparatively few are perfect in every detail, especially after the age of forty.

After lenses were made, the great problem was to make them stay put. All manner of devices were tried out. The Chinese placed them in the visor of a cap, but you can imagine how well that plan worked. They also used a wire headpiece. Wouldn't you look cute in that? At last some bright guy remembered the nose, devised a nosepiece that served the double purpose of separating the lenses and furnishing a support for them. Still, they were little better off than before, because there was nothing to hold the metal bridge on the human beak.

Then—and this is a good one—they tied strings on the outer portions of the lenses, fastening weights to the strings and passing the strings over the ears. The Chinese, ever desiring to be decorative, put fancy ornaments on the ends of the strings, which extended to the wearer's waist.

About three centuries ago, ear bows made their first appearance in Europe. Ears and nose combined to make a convenient anchorage for specs.

So you see, the general form of glasses, as we know it today, was a long time developing. Is represents an evolution almost as long as man's knowledge of lenses.

Now you have a wide choice of lenses and frames. When you get new eyes, take your time; follow the suggestions of the oculist, make a becoming selection.

Fashion Flashes

OF COURSE it's fine to be able to flaunt an opulent muff with evening things, but why must it be fur? Smart, yet sensibly priced, is a huge muff of black velvet strewn all over with aquamarine stones and trimmed with an elaborate design in gold sequins. Matching ascot.

A CHANGING VARIETY of evenig fashions gives interest to smart events. A collarless, fitted jacket in light pink satin tops a slim, black crepe skirt with four vertical ruffles of pink satin extending in front from knee to floor length hem.

A BIG FUTURE ahead for pink, judging by resort fashions and recent showings. Pink fleece is used for a new advance topper softly belted—except in front, where the shoulder flanges extend down to peg pockets.

QUITE A ZOO of animals cavorts over prints designed for Spring wear. Horses in brown and off-white in groups of three and four is the design used for sand beige crepe. Also shown in black and fuchsia on gray.

NOT ALL hats are feathers-and-flower trimmed. One of the season's prettiest hats is a small sailor of white felt, its brim trimmed with cleverly draped black faille held down here and there with tiny white velvet bows. Over all, a sheer black veil.

MEDICINE'S MODERN METHODS HASTEN RECOVERY FOR CANADIAN BATTLE CASUALTIES

Convalescents, crutches strewn about, lie on lawn of Oakville, Ont., cast and retraining centre to hear lecture by corporal on educational courses open to soldiers, airmen, and naval personnel in other branches of service.

Injured Canadian servicemen are getting the best in modern medical treatment at hospitals operated by the Department of Pensions and National Health.

An innovation in the practice of medicine but becoming more widely used, physiotherapy treatment has been instituted in the program of treating the injured. It provides treatment for nearly every type of illness, affecting the whole period of hospitalization and illness. Physiotherapeutic treatment has proved its worth innumerable times in rapidly bringing to returned soldiers the use of limbs injured by fractures.

Painful, incurable diseases and the aged, chronic sick cannot be treated by physiotherapy, nor is it used in the early stages of diseases whose treatment calls for a period of absolute rest.

Bed patients are treated individually before operations, particularly thoracic and abdominal surgery, by tutored breathing exercises to strengthen lungs and diaphragm, correct breathing so that post-operative treatment will be more effective. Other individual treatment to bed patients includes physiotherapy treatment in post-operative cases, recent injuries and in the early stages of certain medical conditions.

In groups in the wards treatment includes general exercises in the post-operative period and general and local calisthenics for treating recent injuries, and specialized, local and general exercises for medical conditions such as convalescent pneumonia, heart cases, arthritis.

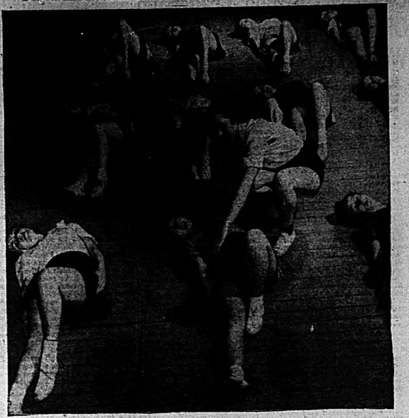
Medical officers and physiotherapy aides begin to treat chair patients in groups in the ward after they have progressed from the bed stage, doing stronger local and general exercises. The medical officer grades the patient up through six stages from almost complete immobility to fitness.

Ambulatory cases, those able to move under their own power, are treated in the gymnasium with progressively stronger exercises, until they are graded to the full physical training course given by professional physical training men. Finally, if necessary, armed services patients continue their treatment in a Department of Pensions and National Health hospital.

By physiotherapy, convalescence is shortened, the evil effects of the disuse of limbs and muscles is avoided, the "cripple complex"—a hindrance in the recovery of any injured person—is evaded.

In hospitals and army camps from coast to coast, topnotch medical men, husky physical training athletes and pretty physiotherapy aides are putting young men through a scientifically planned curriculum of exercises, keeping injured joints in movement; building up muscle preparatory to treating it, perhaps by surgery; breaking down atrophy of muscles and nerves by electricity and exercise.

All branches of the forces have their corps of physiotherapy aides and occupational therapists, university and hospital trained, who return from time to time to take refresher and advanced courses as the art of healing through activity in conjunction with medical treatment makes progress.

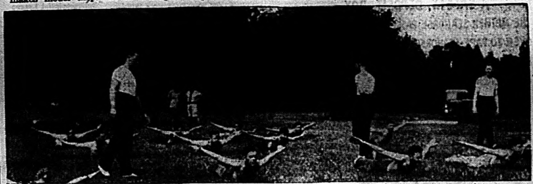


Second year therapy students at Toronto University take four hours a week of exercises in gym to keep them fresh in training, acquaint them with the difficulties of instructing others. One of the students acts as instructor.

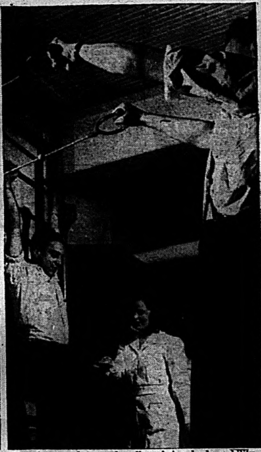
Sgt.-Major V. Wambolt, suffering from broken knee, practices walking again on treadle. Canvas belt on rollers gives walking sensation, handrail support.

Bed-ridden patients have their own occupational therapy jobs to do. This Christie Street patient makes model airplanes as therapist inspects work.

Circular and square boards with rollers tacked under them are excellent for foot exercises. First has a rotary motion, other moves back and forth.



Every day the men in advanced class take a 40-minute course in physical training. Some 20 men are divided into three teams under instructors, taking part in competitive but not rough games. They do physical jerks, bar exercises, leaping gym horse, are soon ready for reinforcement units.



Exercises on bars and pulleys bring back mobility, coordination, counteract stiffness. These forms of exercises aid back injuries, lamenectomies.

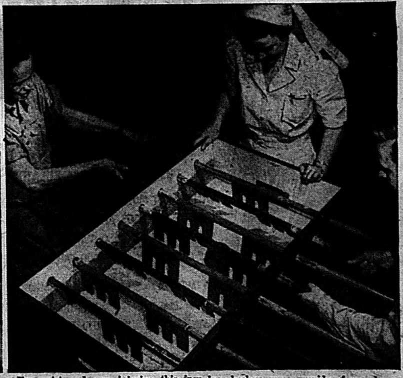
This group with curled toes is known as leg class at Oakville centre. They crawl with toes, wiggle them, twist feet to revive strength of muscles.



For wrist and arm injuries, this ingenious hockey game provides fun and a valuable competitive spirit to the men as well as excellent exercise. Game is designed to benefit injured elbows and wrists resulting in atrophy of muscles.

Canadiens Regain Leadership Of N.H.L. by Downing Chicago While Leafs Lose to Bruins

Toronto Defeats Rangers on Saturday to Go a Point Ahead

By The Canadian Press

Montreal Canadiens were back on top of the National Hockey League by a single point today after turning on third-period heat to down a determined Black Hawk team 2-1 at Chicago last night.

Meanwhile the Toronto Maple Leafs, after a 24-hour tenure of 1st place gained by a 4-3 Saturday triumph over New York Rangers, conceded a 5-4 decision to Boston Bruins.

Maurice (The Comet) Richard set the Canadien offensive in motion when he streaked by the Chicago defence for the game's first goal after 25 seconds of the third period. Pete Horeck tied it up less than 3 minutes later, aided by Joe Cooper and Bill Mosienko, but continued Montreal pressure paid off at 15:34 when Fern Gauthier fired the winning shot on a play with Buddy O'Connor and Dutch Hiller.

Come From Behind

At Boston the Bruins had to come from behind three times to subdue the Leafs, who were still playing without ace forwards Sweeney Schriner and Lorne Carr. It was Toronto's second loss of the year without victory, in the Boston Garden.

Scoring honors for the winners were shared by rookie Ken Smith and Bill Cupolo, with two goals each. Smith, outstanding with Canada's junior champion Oshawa Generals last year, also drew two assists. Ted Kennedy registered twice for Toronto.

Kennedy shot the Leafs into a 1-0 lead with the only score of the first period and Smith equalized in the second. Defensive tactics were taboo in the third when five goals, three of them by Toronto, were rammed home in the first five minutes. Nick Metz and Babe Pratt gave the Leafs a 3-1 lead on goals 28 seconds apart, but Smith and Cupolo came right back to square things again. Kennedy got his second at 4:30, and there was no further scoring until 12:23 when Jack Crawford made it 4-4. Cupolo teamed with Smith and Frank Mario for the clinching score two minutes later.

Stanowski Back

Walter Atanas and Fred Thurier gave the visitors a 2-0 lead in the first period, but Metz put the Leafs back in the game after 18 seconds of the second and got another unassisted after Ab Demarco had scored the final New York goal. Wally Stanowski, back on defence with his old mates after discharge from the air force, made it 3-3 before the end of the period.

Jackie McLean, University of Toronto student who plays Canadian games with the Leafs, scored the winner half-way through the third period and then engaged in a slugging match with Ranger centre Phil Watson to close out the night's activities. Each drew a major penalty.

WATSON and KATAN

Now that Al Dunlop has settled matters amicably with himself regarding teaming up with John Katan in a team bout of Katan and Dunlop versus Billie Watson and Tom Collins at the Hume Arena, Wednesday evening, Promoter Frank Tunney is busied these days endeavouring to procure two strong preliminaries for his closing bout of the season. "I hope to give Belleville wrestling fans something they'll talk about until we re-open here again next spring," promised Matchmaker Tunney today as he was quite satisfied the team wrestling would prove a crowd-pleaser.

"Rasputin gave me the business. He just laid down on me last week, but now I've got "Honest John" Katan for a partner and we'll annihilate that pair of bums—Watson and Collins," boasted Dunlop after spending the weekend at Katan's Palermo farm. In the meantime neither Collins nor Watson could be located. "The last I heard of them they were enroute to Buffalo to work out with "Irish Jerry" Monahan at the Great Lakes Athletic Club. They'll be on hand Wednesday night, however," promised Promoter Tunney as he continued to use the telegraph wires seeking strong preliminaries for Wednesday night. Incessant Storms Limit Activity To Minor Clashes

General MacArthur's Headquarters, Philippines, Dec. 4. (AP) — American airmen made wide-ranging stabs at enemy shipping and supply bases as Leyte Islands' incessant storms limited ground activity to minor patrol clashes.

Fighter planes bombed Japanese supply bases at Valencia, about the middle of the Ormoc corridor, through which the U.S. 32nd Division is driving.

Off the north coast of Borneo patrol planes sank two 1,000-ton freighters and probably sank another. In this area also Australia-based heavy bombers attacked an enemy convoy, sinking a 3,000-ton freighter with direct hits.

In the Samar sea light naval units attacked a 4,000-ton vessel off Southern Masbate, inflicting some damage, and shot down one Japanese plane. Presumably the ship was attempting to land men or supplies or both on Leyte.

Fighter-escorted attack bombers blasted installations on Mindanao, in the Southern Philippines, said a communique from Gen. MacArthur's headquarters.

CAPITALS MOVE INTO TOP SPOT OF WEST SECTION

In Weekend Fixture With Pittsburgh Hornets Teams Split the Points

By The Canadian Press

Indianapolis Capitals moved into undisputed possession of first place in the western division of the American Hockey League by defeating Pittsburgh Hornets 7-2 Sunday. Hornets had tied the Caps Saturday by their 10-5 victory over Providence Reds at Pittsburgh.

At Buffalo Sunday the Bisons trounced Cleveland Barons 6-2 to avenge a 5-2 defeat at Cleveland Saturday, while at Providence the Reds overwhelmed Hershey Bears 9-3. It was the Bears' second weekend defeat, the first coming on home ice Saturday at the hands of St. Louis Flyers, 2-1.

Tony Bukovich starred for Indianapolis in Sunday's game, scoring twice. It was the fourth straight victory for Capitals who have yet to be defeated on home ice this season.

At Buffalo the Bisons piled up a six-point lead before Barons' Lou Gasparini broke through for the first of his two goals midway in the second period. Some spectacular saves by goalie Lloyd Store, replacing the injured Harvey Teno, prevented further scoring by Bisons.

St. Louis Flyers, making their first appearance at Hershey smothered the best efforts of the home club to win their third victory in 16 games. Art Giroux and Nakina Smith scored for Flyers and Tommy Forgie made Bears' only tally.

At Pittsburgh Hornets' right winger Wendell Jamieson accounted for three and Gerry Plamondon two of Pittsburgh's 10 counters. Paul Courteau of Reds made the first score of the game unassisted within seconds of the opening whistle and notched up another in each succeeding period.

Earl Bartholome opened the scoring for Barons in the second minute of the game at Cleveland. By the end of the second period Barons had a 3-1 edge, which they increased to 5-1 in the third. Art Lazzard got Buffalo's second goal in the last minute of play.

What's Doing in Sport

By The Canadian Press

The U. S. Army team Saturday lived up to many predictions of final success by walking through Navy 23-7 before 70,000 fans at Baltimore to capture the country's mythical football championship with a perfect record for the season of nine successive victories, the first all-win campaign for West Point since 1916.

Notre Dame closed its grid season by chalking up a 28-7 victory over Great Lakes, this being the third straight success for the Irish after bowing to both Army and Navy. Texas Christian, championship outfit of the Southwest Conference, suffered a 9-6 defeat at the hands of Southern Methodist while Georgia Tech, picked for the Orange Bowl fixture New Year's Day, smashed Georgia 44-0.

Twilight Tear, Warren Wright's three-year-old filly, was voted the horse of the year in the annual poll of 28 turf specialists in the United States, it was announced at New York yesterday. Winner of 14 out of 17 starts and of $202,165 in prizes in two years of racing, she received 26 of the 28 ballots. The two other votes went to Pavot and Free For All.

Paper Boy, with Georgie Woolf up, captured the $25,000 American handicap Saturday at Hollywood Park, finishing a length and a half in front of Happy Issue. The crowd of 35,000 wagered $2,385,167 during the day's card.

In U. S. pro football Saturday, Detroit Lions walloped Boston 38-7 while Chicago ran up a 49-7 score against the Chicago - Pittsburgh Combines and Philadelphia whitewashed Brooklyn 34-0. The one close tilt was New York's 16-13 victory over Washington.

Sgt. Jim Ferrier of Camp Roberts, Calif., held a one-stroke lead over defending champion Byron Nelson of Toledo, O., as they teed off today for the final round of the 72-hole San Francisco Open golf tournament. Nelson, high money winner of 1944, was the choice as he set out in the same threesome as Ferrier, former Australian champion and a pro at Elmhurst, Ill., before induction nine months ago. The Toledo star gained a stroke on Sgt. Ferrier in the third round yesterday when he hooked a three-under-par 68 to the soldier's 70 but the latter clung to the lead he set up with a great 66 on the preceding day. At the halfway mark it was Ferrier, 141, and Nelson, 143. The third round established the Army's hope at 211 and the title defender at 212.

Sir E. Teichman Shot on Estate

Norfolk, England, Dec. 4. (AP)—Sir Eric Teichman, 60, veteran British diplomat in the Far East and one-time counsellor of the British Embassy at Chungking, was found shot dead today on the grounds of his estate "Honingham Hall". Police said the wound was not self-inflicted.

Sir Eric had served in British legations in China from 1907.

He was well known as a traveller and had written several books on trips through Eastern Tibet and Turkestan.

Lady Teichman said Sir Eric had been annoyed recently by poachers on his estate and when he heard shots yesterday afternoon he went out to investigate. He carried no weapons, she said.

Searchers who went looking for him when he failed to return found his body shortly after midnight in a wood about 600 yards from his home—a bullet wound in his cheek. Investigators said he had been dead several hours.

LACKING IN CARBON

Lignite or brown coal has the least carbon of any variety.

CASUAL COMMENT by K.J.C.

More Fruit

The park orator made frequent references to Darwin's "Origin of Species."

A tall man and his short companion hung on to the outskirts of the crowd, but were unable to get near the speaker.

"Eat More Fruit, I think," replied the other. "All he keeps talking about is Darwin's oranges and peaches."

It's the Army.

It was the first time in six years the Army boys of West Point had defeated the Navy gridders of Annapolis, but the "Kaydettes" did it in a most convincing style on Saturday when they downed the "Middies" 23 to 7 to finish the 1944 American football season undefeated and untied. The last time the Army won over Navy was back in 1938 and Saturday marked the first time Coach Col. Red Blaik had headed the West Pointers in a triumph over Navy since taking over the head coach's job.

It was Army speed against Navy line strength with the speedy Army backs showing the way. Coach Blaik's second-string quartette of Doc Blanchard, Glenn Davis, Dale Hall and little Eddie Kenna, the lad with the trick leg, were brilliant, but they needed a strong wall in front of them Saturday, to compete with the mighty Navy line. They did just this and won.

For Navy it was big Hal Hamberg of Lonoke, Ark., who paced the Middies to a 73 yard drive and a touchdown as Navy shaved a half-time lead of 9 to 0 to 9 to 7. At this point it looked as though Navy power was finally coming into its own when suddenly Glenn Davis leaped high to intercept a Navy pass and in the twinkling of an eye the picture changed as the Army speedsters moved into action for two major scores. There was Doc (Bull) Blanchard's 52 yard run for one score and Glenn Davis' streak for 50 yards down the sidelines for a second and before the stunned Navy rooters could realize what had happened it was all over. There were 70,000 fans in the Baltimore Stadium for the No. 1 football classic played in the U.S.A. Saturday.

However, the Navy halted the Army's "point a minute" scoring for the season. In nine games played this season the West Pointers have scored 504 points, the greatest number ever enmassed by any Army team. In the same number of games their opponents have scored but 35, less than an average of four points per game.

This and That.

Notre Dame beat the Great Lakes "Sailors" 28 to 7 on Saturday .... However, it was the first time since they first met in 1918 that the South Bend "Irish" have been able to get sweet revenge....Last year Great Lakes beat Notre Dame to mar a perfect season, but the Irish gained sweet revenge yesterday.... See where Texas Christian, selected for the Cotton Bowl game, was beaten by an under-dog Southern Methodist at Dallas Saturday, 9-6 ....Coach Red Blaik of Army, says Navy is the second-best grid team in the U.S.A.....Of course Red did get around to meeting up with the Ohio State "Buckeyes"....Georgia Teck, nominated for the Rose Bowl, drubbed Georgia 44-0....Heads of the big Ten Conference say a Rose Bowl game "is not a good thing educationally"....And we thought travelling tended to broaden the mind, so the "Buckeyes" of Ohio State can eat their New Year's turkey at home....The skating season was officially opened over the weekend with the lads and lassies gliding over the ice at the quarry and along the edges of the bay with grace and ease. The kids got in some enjoyable sleigh riding, while older folk hied themselves to the great open spaces for some long-awaited skiing out around Oak Hills.

Remember When.

Ottawa Rough Riders won the Dominion football title beating the University of Toronto 10 to 7 just 18 years ago today on a frozen field at Toronto's Varsity Stadium. Joe Miller was the outstanding star with his expert kicking for the Bytown Rough Riders that day.

In Training.

It is rumored that "Whipper Billie" Watson has gone to Buffalo to train with Tom Collins for Wednesday night's team bout here with Dunlop and Katan. Collins is a Buffalo lad and they'll both work out at Jerry Monahan's Great Lakes Athletic Club. With Monahan as their tutor Collins and Watson will doubtless be 'hep' to any villainous efforts attempted by either Dunlop or Katan. On the other hand Dunlop is boasting around Toronto as to how he and "Honest John" as he calls Katan, will annihilate the "pretty boys" Watson and Collins. Looks as though Marse Tunney's final show is developing into a straight grudge fight and at team wrestling for good measure.

Horse Sense Bridge

LESSON NO. 548
By SAM GORDON
The Kibitzer

I hate to play with Cupert Bop. He keeps the bidding too low. For, when I [illegible] he blows his top and sneers, "[illegible] goddaya know."

You are still brooding over this hand:

♠ Q 3
♥ A K Q J 10 8 6 3
♦ [illegible]
♣ A [illegible] 5

In a duplicate tourney, one player opened this hand with one heart. When asked why he started with a bid of only one, he said, "I like to keep the bidding low."

He kept the bidding low, all right. His partner passed and the bidding ended at one heart. If he liked to keep the bidding low, he certainly got what he liked there. But he lost a game bonus.

To keep the bidding low is the policy of good bridge players. But not at the expense of permitting the bidding to die too soon. Even a "keep the bidding low" expert is not that [illegible].

In any sound system, partner is not forced to bid in response to an opening bid of one. With less than the responding needs, the partner of a one opener may pass.

Consequently, if a player needs no help from partner to make a game, he should not open with one. Instead, he should open with a higher bid that will insist on reaching a game. Like a two bid.

This hand can make a game all by itself. There is no excuse for hiding that information from partner. Even if that excuse is a desire to keep the bidding low.

What is your main aim in keeping the bidding low? To be able to exchange enough information with your partner. But if you can say more with a jump, it would be unwise not to.

Furthermore, if you and your partner have such hands, you have no fear of a higher level of bidding. It is better to tell what you have at a higher level than hide it at a lower level.

Mess Room Chatter Of Canada's Airmen

By [illegible]

With the R.C.A.F. Overseas (CP)—FO. Ed. Moore of Enson, Alta., is billed by the RCAF as probably the first aircrew member to win the D.F.C. despite air-sickness on every bombing mission.

Moore is a navigator in the Thunderbird Squadron and has just finished a tour of "ops." He earned a solid reputation as a "game guy" because he carried on with brilliant navigating even when his stomach turned upside down every time the skipper started evasive action.

Bad weather late in October didn't stop the dive-bombing and ground-strafing of the Canadian Spitfire wing under Group Capt. G. R. McGregor and Wing Cmdr. Dal Russell of Montreal.

Laubman's men cut a railway line in three places and on the way home Flt. Lt. C. W. Fox of Guelph, Ont., disabled a locomotive. On a second sortie the outfit smashed another rail line and a road and hit marshalling yards in the area. Laubman wrecked an engine on the way home.

Olmsted's squadron smashed a rail target on its first miss and scored direct hits on a road on the second. On the return journey FO. Barney O'Sullivan, of Vancouver; FO. F. H. Young of Huntingdon, W. Va., and FO. Jack Lumsden, of Hamilton, Ont., teamed up to destroy three locomotives.

George Nickerson, of Kenora, Ontario, tall, rugged and only 24, has been promoted to rank of squadron leader and appointed a flight commander in the Bluenose Squadron. He has piled up 32 trips over enemy territory.

In the Thunderbird Squadron, Russ Cowans of (Chateau Apt.) Montreal, a former McGill University student, has been promoted squadron leader and appointed a flight commander. He is 23 and has 23 operational flights to his credit. He won his wings at Uplands, Ont., in 1940.

Odds and ends from Group Capt. McGregor's airfield in Holland: Flt. Lt. Hedley Everard of Timmins, Ont., veteran of Spitfiring in Burma and Italy, has been named a flight commander, succeeding Flt. Lt. G. W. Johnson, of Hamilton, Ontario, whose operation tour has ended.

Lack of equipment prevents regulation games but the boys get in a bit of football practice. Regulars in the light scrimmaging are Flt. Lt. Charlie Fox of Guelph, Ont.; Flt. Lt. Don Laubman, Edmonton; FO. John Barrowman, Toronto, and FO. W. H. Bellingham, of Magog, Que. Plans are under way for an inter-unit touch-football league.

Flt. Lt. Davenport of Russellville, Ark., was testing a Spit on its return from the repair line when he saw three German transport vehicles moving along a road. Result: One destroyed, two damaged.

Roslin

Roslin — The regular meeting of the St. Andrew's Helpers was held at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Elmer Cross on Tuesday evening. With the president in charge, the meeting opened in the usual way. A short devotional period followed. The remainder of the evening was spent in playing progressive crokinole, with six tables in play. Prize winners for the evening were: Ladies, Miss Audenchia Cross; men's, Mr. Harold Hart. A lunch was served and a social half hour was enjoyed.

Mr. and Mrs. Gordon Gray moved on Wednesday to the Walter Hall farm at Latta.

Mr. Harold Hart, RCNVR, who has been stationed at St. Hyacinthe, Quebec, is spending a two weeks' furlough at the home of his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Jos. Hart.

Miss Marion Fargey, of Toronto, spent the weekend at the home of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Milton Fargey.

Mr. and Mrs. Russell Elmy, of Kingston, were Sunday callers at the home of Mr. and Mrs. H. Chisholm.

Mrs. Milton Fargey spent the past week in Toronto with Mrs. H. E. Welsh.

The Women's Association of the United Church held a very successful pot luck supper and bazaar in the church hall on Wednesday evening. Around eighty sat down to the well laden tables. An apron, gift and novelty table was well patronized.

During the evening Rev. Mr. Heywood acted as chairman for a varied program which consisted of readings and instrumental numbers.

Messrs Donald Chisholm, RCNVR who has been stationed at the West Coast, and Walter Chisholm, RCNVR, who has been stationed at the East Coast, are spending furloughs at the home of their parents, Mr. and Mrs. H. Chisholm.

Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Wilkins, of Pickering, spent Sunday with friends here.

ST. MIKES GRAB CLEAR LEAD IN JUNIOR A RACE

Collegians Swamp Dominion Champs 12-1 Before Record Crowd

By The Canadian Press

St. Michaels grabbed a clear lead in the O.H.A. junior "A" standing by trouncing the Memorial Cup defenders 12-1 in Oshawa Saturday night, for their fourth straight victory of the season against no losses. The students have a one-game margin over St. Catharines Falcons and Generals are in third place with 2 wins and one defeat.

The Collegians literally overwhelmed the champions before a record crowd of 3,500, going into a 2-0 lead in the first period, running it to 8-0 in the second and holding a 10-0 score in the third frame before Freddie Petsura found the target for Oshawa's lone tally.

Johnny Blute of St. Mikes resumed leadership in the individual scoring race by coming through with 2 goals, although Joe Sadler and Thomson were the leading snipers with a trio of counters apiece. Singles were notched by John McCormick, Tod Sloan, Costello and Arundel.

Galt Red Wings, at home, registered their first triumph of the campaign by walloping Toronto Young Rangers 9-3 after losing two fixtures. Pavelich and Mayer each netted two goals while Curik, Babando, Mousseau, Small and Foglin accounted for singletons. The bellringers for Rangers were Ringer and McLernon. Galt led 3-2 at the first recess but after that it was the home crew all the way with six markers in a row.

Inter-Provincial Hockey League

Montreal, Dec. 4 —(CP)— Seven consecutive goals in a third period offensive gave Lachine an 11-5 victory over Cornwall in an inter-provincial hockey game at Lachine last night and gave them second place in the league.

Lachine drew first blood in a tally by Jean Paul Armand but Cornwall went ahead before the end of the first period as Perron and Gravel scored. Markers by Gravel and Carragher put Flyers three points ahead, but Lachine came back to tie the score as the second period ended.

Cornwall went ahead again in the third session on a goal by Dupuis before Lachine launched its seven-goal offensive.

Strengthen Hold.

Valleyfield, Que., Dec. 4 —(CP)— Valleyfield Braves yesterday strengthened their hold on first position in the inter-provincial hockey league when they trounced Shawinigan Falls Cataracts 7-1.

Joannette scored two goals for Braves, while the other points were tallied by McIntosh, Connelly, Poissant, Boyer and Bessette.

The lonely Shawinigan point was scored by O. Carnegie in the first minute of the second period.

Tie for Third.

Shawinigan Falls, Dec. 4 —(CP) —Shawinigan Cataracts Saturday night defeated Lachine Rapids 5-2 in an inter-provincial hockey league game, thus tying Lachine for third place in the league standing.

H. Carnegie scored two points for Cataracts while O. Carnegie, McIntyre and Despelteau each tallied one.

Terriault shot a goal for Lachine in the first period while the Rapids second point was scored by Morrow in the final stanza.

Fate of Reserve Army May Be Decided Today

By JACK BRAYLEY
(Canadian Press Staff Writer.)

Ottawa, Dec. 4 (CP)—The fate of the Reserve Army—Canada's part-time Home Gard—may be decided today by an answer expected to be given in the House of Commons.

On Friday, Prime Minister Mackenzie King promised Gordon Graydon, Progressive Conservative House Leader, he would consult the Defence Ministry and try to have an answer today on Mr. Graydon's question as to what was to become of the Reserve Army.

Mr. Graydon said the army of citizen volunteers—made up of 100,000 youths, veterans and essential war workers who drill twice a week and usually toil at weekend schemes—would like to hear "a definite and clear-cut statement of policy."

He added that attendance was tapering off and there was a general feeling of uncertainty among officers and men regarding the place the home army was to take in the future.

Still Enthusiasm.

However, there still is a great deal of enthusiasm for the "drill nights" and weekend bivouacs and the camaraderie they instill, especially among youths too young to go into the active army and just "out of Cadets" and first Great War Veterans, who form a large part of the officer and non-commissioned officer group. The army is directed by an administrative group of full-time paid personnel.

An important second-objective of the army is to graduate volunteer recruits into the active army and most of its battalions are reserve groups of overseas units. While no figures are available, an officer made a rough estimate that more than 50,000 Reserve army men had "gone active" since the start of the war. Several famous battalions active overseas are said to have received a large proportion of their reinforcements from this source.

Would Like to Quit.

Among the reports circulating in Reserve Army circles is that Maj.-Gen. Fred R. Phelan, its stubby, energetic Director-General is anxious to get back to his peacetime Montreal financial information agency. Other reports have said that if Gen. Phelan goes, his post will be abolished and the work absorbed by the Chief of General Staff, Lt.-Gen. John Murchie.

This would be part of a general army reorganization with the re-establishment of a non-permanent active militia, with emphasis on up-to-date training methods and equipment and real, tough army courses.

One thing seems certain: The Reserve Army will have plenty of the best equipment to draw from.

The War Today—

Is Clash in Greece Beginning Of Political Convulsion in Europe?

By DEWITT MacKENZIE
(Associated Press War Analyst)

The closer Europe gets to the end of the war, the more widespread becomes the political upheaval—the struggle between the left and the right—of which the bloody weekend demonstration in Athens is symptomatic.

We shall do well to recognize that the war is ushering a new political and social epoch into Europe. The war isn't the cause of this historic turn-over, but it's facilitating it vastly.

Little Greece of course is only one of many continental countries which are in the throes of this politico-social change, in greater or less degree we see it in Italy, Yugoslavia, Rumania, Bulgaria, Poland, Finland, France and Belgium.

Change Hovering Over Spain

We find it, too, hovering again over Spain in the form of a renewed challenge by the Republicans to the Franco regime which came to power through one of the most terrible civil wars of history. Hungary also is in the midst of internal strife which would be quite apparent to the outside world but for the fact that the Germans are using the country as a base from which to stand off the onrushing Red armies.

In several countries the question of a monarchy is involved and the way it looks from here several more crowns will be under glass cases in museums by the time Europe has passed this cataclysm. The monarchial form of government is under challenge in Greece, Bulgaria, Yugoslavia, Rumania, Italy and Belgium. It also is an issue in both Spain and Hungary, for Gen. Franco has been dallying with the idea of restoring the throne, and Hungary never has abolished the monarchy but has been operating under a regency.

Clash Not Isolated

The bloody Greek clash would have had less significance in connection with the European trend had it represented an isolated instance, for the Greeks are fiery in their politics, but the past few days have seen similar outbursts. There has been street fighting between political groups in both Rome and Brussels, where the governments are having tough going in the face of leftist opposition.

I think we can put all this down as just the beginning of the European political convulsion. The ending of the war will remove restraint in most of the countries and give full rein to the fight between the left and the right. The continent will indeed be lucky if it isn't the seat of widespread civil wars.

ENTERTAIN TROOPS

Lake Placid, N.Y., Dec. 4 —(AP) —Montreal Royals defeated the Royal Canadian Navy Signal School, St. Hyacinthe, Que., in two hockey clashes this weekend for the entertainment of war veterans at the army redistribution centre here.

The score Saturday night was 8-5, and Sunday, 9-3. Alex Smart, Royals left winger, made four goals to become high scorer.

The little Dutch boy with whom most of us are familiar is the one who kept a chubby finger in the hole in the dike. These little Dutch boys warm their chubby fingers over a fire at which the crew of a British Buffalo, (amphibious tank) are preparing tea during the Holland campaign. These Buffalo vehicles were made necessary when the Germans flooded large areas of Holland to hamper Allied operations.

AN APPLE FOR EVE

By Kathleen Norris

CHAPTER 5

"The penthouse belongs to a friend who lives most of the time in England and who loans it to me. But playwrights make money in other ways than writing plays. A few big fellers at the top write one success after another, see? Then other fellers write three failures and one half success and one whole success and then sixteen failures, see? And until we make a hit the rest of us do reviews and sketches for the weeklies and translations and odd jobs—rewrites, adaptations, scenarios. Somebody has to do a lot of writing on a thousand scenarios for Hollywood every year. Somebody has to write all the radio scripts that you listen to while you're doing the dishes every morning. I've taken a turn at all of them. It's a big field."

"But suppose this play you and Mr. Ehrlen are doing is a real success? Then there will be an opening night with all the critics there and everything?"

"Exactly," he said.

"Isn't that a perfectly glorious experience?" Loveday asked, choosing her words.

"It must be. If all goes well you'll be invited, and you can see for yourself."

"Oh, but I'd not have had anything to do with it! The fun would be having something to do with it."

He did not answer. He sat looking at her quietly, speculatively, until she was somewhat embarrassed.

"Ever get stuck on the top of chicken houses now?" he asked.

"No—not actual ones."

"Metaphorical ones?"

"Kind of—", she began hesitatingly. Exactly why she did not know, but she was conscious of a sudden inclination to tell him of her engagement to Larry and the change in her feeling about it now that weeks had gone by and he had written so little.

Fanny's Captain Fox arrived the next day—tall and ruddy and friendly, laughing joyfully at everything, and presenting Fanny with a diamond that had been in the Fox family for three hundred years. Merle, Chris' wife, came from Stockton. Chris went with the car to bring her down; they arrived hot and weary in midafternoon. There was to be a rehearsal at the church that evening; Merle decided that since she had no part in the pageant she would stay quietly at home with "Mother St. George."

Loveday studied Chris' wife with keen interest; she could not keep her eyes from the other woman. Merle was the same age, perhaps a little older than Chris; she was pretty; talkative, and with something possessive in her eagerness to identify herself with her attractive husband.

Ehrlen has been a beau of hers; she had introduced the two men, hadn't she, Chris? Merle had been instrumental in bringing about Christopher's success.

"Don't let anyone pity the poor playwright," laughed Merle; "pity the poor playwright's wife! Rehearsals, casting, and when those proof sheets for the books come in! Chris goes into absolute rages, and it's poor little Merle that has to do the dirty work."

"Oh, my dear Mother St. George! You should see our genius when he gets temperamental!"

"Chris, are you temperamental?" Fanny asked. Chris looked at her without speaking; his glance moved for the fraction of a second to meet Loveday's look.

"I must be," he said mildly after the little pause.

"And didn't I make him jealous last winter!" exulted Merle. "Imagine it, when every woman he meets tries to get him away from me! But I happen to have acquired a friend of my own—a very eligible friend, isn't he, Chris? And if you please, Mr. Christopher St. George was growling away about it and making objections!" And Merle went into her high, light laughter that somehow did not have much mirth in it at all.

"She seems terribly nervous" Loveday observed to Fanny when they were alone.

"She's afraid of losing him, poor thing," Fanny answered; "she knows she never can keep up with Chris. Isn't he grand?"

"Yes, he's—he's grand," Loveday agreed a little haltingly.

The Christopher St. Georges stayed on after the festivities. Ehrlen, it seemed, was presently coming to Hollywood; Chris would see him there. It would be foolish to rush back into the heat of the East now; the Mendocino camp would presently be opened and Chris and Merle could have the cabin he had built in college days, ten years earlier. Chris didn't see why a play couldn't be written in Mendocino as well as in a penthouse in East Eightieth Street.

Almost a week after the wedding a clear, warm night of spring warmth shone over the city, and Loveday, looking from her window at ten o'clock, found herself restless and wakeful. She had been unable to find her book; there were other books all about, of course. But Drums Along the Mohawk was not a volume one could put down unfinished; Loveday knelt at the window sill, stared down into the street, and tried to remember where she had last been reading it.

The house was very still. Nini and Merle and Aunt Laura had very much wanted to see a certain picture and had gone off after dinner; Marc was on hospital duty; the other men were at the club. There was some special dinner or entertainment there on this Thursday night.

Down on the narrow terrace of the back garden above the sea, that was where she had left her book, of course! She had been idling and reading there when the lunch gong had sounded and had plunged it into the seat cushions to hide it from Nini, who was a notorious stealer of books. Loveday went down through the silent, dimly lighted house, through the breakfast room, and out upon the terrace.

A man was stretched in one of the lounging chairs on the terrace: he half raised himself as she came out, taking his pipe from his mouth and she saw that it was Chris.

"Oh, you, Loveday?" he said quietly, sinking back again.

"I left my book out here," she said.

"It must be Pamela," Chris observed after his usual easy pause. "That is, if it matches that excuse."

"No, and it's not Evelina," Loveday countered. "I really did lose it!" And she triumphantly produced it.

"Sit down," Chris said, not stirring.

"I can't"—but she was sitting down as she spoke.

"What does a girl your age know about Pamela and Evelina?"

"They were both in my grandfather's library. But you're missing the show at the club?"

"It wasn't good. Awfully hot. I cut it. You didn't go to the movie with the others?"

"I didn't feel like it, Chris," Loveday said, her voice changing, betraying a little effort, "there's something I'd like to—I've been wondering if I could—something I'd like to ask you."

"Go ahead." His pipe was in his mouth again; he had settled back in his chair with his hands in his pockets.

"It's his. You see," Loveday began, somewhat hesitatingly: "you see, I'm engaged to be married, Chris."

Moonlight dazzled in the earnest eyes she turned toward him, and struck upon her burnished hair. Her plain black gown had for relief only stiffly starched cuffs and a narrow turned-down collar like an Eton boy's; the lift of her young breasts, her square cleft chin were silhouetted against the terrace railing and the flung tendrils of a climbing vine and the softly breathing surface of the silvered bay.

Chris took his pipe from his mouth.

"So they tell me," he said noncommittally.

"You like someone else better?"

"Oh no, not that!" she said eagerly. "I've not met anyone else. It isn't that."

A pause, his characteristic pause, while Chris looked at her, looked away.

"Not Rod?" he asked.

"Rod? No! I adore Rod," Loveday said inconsistently and laughed. "No, it's that I don't want to marry ayone," she said. "It's that I don't know how I feel. Larry—Larry hasn't been writing to me, you know, not for weeks."

"I wasn't aware of that." Chris got up, put his pipe in his pocket, and walked to the railing. Loveday sat forlorn and puzzled for a moment; then she went to join him, and side by side they rested their elbows on the wrought-iron parapet and looked out at the water and the far mountains afloat in the magical bath of the moonshine.

"Chris, you think I shouldn't have told you; you think I shouldn't talk about it?" she asked anxiously.

"What's the problem?" he asked briefly after a pause.

"That he doesn't write—so that I don't really know where he is or how he is or what he's feeling." Loveday answered readily, re-assured. "He may have changed too. Or if I met him again perhaps I'd find I hadn't changed, that we really do care for each other. But it's not hearing and loving it all here so much—Fanny and Nini and your mother and father and everyone—it's all that that makes me feel that perhaps I'm not sure!"

"Would it be a relief to you to have him write you that he wanted to get out of it?" Chris asked after a silence during which she thought, with a fast-beating heart, that perhaps these confidences were in glaring bad taste and that she was offending him.

"No. Or yes, I think perhaps it would," Loveday said uncertainly.

"And it isn't Rod or Marc?"

"Marc! He's in love with a new girl every ten days; he's a perfect Frenchman!" Loveday laughed.

"Just—that you want to be free really to fall in love, is that it?"

"Just that I want to be free, I think."

"Where do his people live?"

"Bakersfield."

"Then why not go down there and see them, Loveday? Explain it to them. Take them unawares so that they'll not have time to make up any story, and clear the whole thing up once and for all. You'll feel better; anything's better than this halfway arrangement. He may have married some girl down there in Florida and be afraid to write you."

He heard her catch a quick breath.

"Oh, he wouldn't do that!"

"Find out. At least put yourself on record as wanting to get in touch with him. Make it casual. Say you happened to be driving through Bakersfield — we'll manage that somehow—and that you thought you'd stop and say hello. D'you know anything about them? What sort are they?

"They sound rather important. Princeton and travelling around the world—he went with a little college orchestra, but even that means that they didn't need his help at home," Loveday said. "And his uncle took him to Florida on a yacht."

"All the more reason to suppose that he isn't taking this too seriously. That's what I'd do. Clear it up."

"That's what I'll do!" She was standing close to him, and now she lifted her face and their eyes met. When they turned away again, Loveday to rest her elbows once more on the rail, she felt the man's arm about her shoulders. Her heart leaped and her senses swam; she did not dare to stir, and for a long moment they stood so, without speaking. Then Chris loosened his grip, leaned again on the parapet, and said over his shoulder:

"There's Nini putting away the car. In you go! You needn't mention that I'm out here."

It was with great laughter and much running up and down stairs and packing and unpacking that Loveday, Nini, Rodney and Marc Villard prepared for a trip to Hollywood. Chris and Merle had been down there for several weeks; Chris was hard at work on his new play and the screen adaptation of his old one and had written offering the younger members of the family a chance to meet some of the personalities of the studio.

Loveday had been secretly fearful; they would stop at Bakersfield, and she must face the Ingersoll family and settle the question of her relationship to Larry once and for all. While she faced the ordeal the St. Georges would be taking a side trip of some thiry miles to see a brother of their mother, who had a ranch down in the Bakersfield neighborhood.

Bakersfield, baking in one o'clock heat looked glaring and commonplace. But the big hotel dining room was cool and the luncheon delicious; and when Nini and the two men were off for their duty call upon Uncle Vincent, Loveday went to the desk with a sinking heart and asked the way to Bartlett Street.

It was surprising to be informed that it was quite near—four blocks that way and three this. Here it was, Bartlett Street. She was looking for the seven-hundred block; if this was the four-hundred block it must be two blocks farther. But these were strangely dull little houses. Not shanties. Just well, just dull. Five and six room cottages all alike in pattern and general effect, if all different in minor details. All had strips of garden fence in front, but there were no walls, no fences, no real gardens. Forlorn patches of lawn were untended; homemade lines of sticks and string wavered about certain protected plots.

The number Loveday sought shone brightly in three tin figures rakishly nailed in a slant across one of the porch posts. It was a white cottage badly in need of paint, with stains on it where mud had splashed up from a garden hose and from leather strips that had once held hollyhocks in place against the wall. On the right of the glass-topped front door was a bay window with a statue of the crying cherub showing behind limp net curtains. On the left was a strip of porch and two flat windows; there would be two bedrooms and a bath on that side, and behind the parlor's bay window and the crying cherub would be the dining room, with another bay window on the narrow drive that led to the back of the house and the garage and the kitchen, with its own small porch and steps and broom and garbage barrel.

Loveday rang a rotary bell that clanged audibly somewhere inside. There was neither sound nor movement. She waited; rang again.

Another silence, and she began to hope wildly that there was a mistake. This was Bartlett Street, but what she was looking for must be Bartlett Terrace or Bartlett Manor.

A sharp-faced pretty woman in her early fifties put her head out of the door suddenly and smiled inquiringly. Her face was thin; her hair, its natural fairness helped by dye, was screwed into several hundred light rings that were dripping with curl fixer. The yellow liquid had trickled down her rather scrawny neck in drops and fallen upon the cotton bungalow apron that she had neatly buttoned about her.

"Is this Mrs. Ingersoll's house?"

"That's what it is. I'm Mrs. Leroy Ingersoll."

"I'm Loveday Gurney," the girl said out of a bad dream. "I don't know whether Larry ever told you about me."

Her voice faltered on the last words and her throat tickled. For a moment the woman's face was blank; the light suddenly broke and she opened the door widely.

"Well, for pity's sakes!" she said cordially. "And look at the way you caught me! My daughter Alma's getting married tomorrow night, and Marge had been doing up my hair. Come in, dear. You certainly picked some awful weather. My isn't it hot!"

WALL ST.

New York, Dec. 4 — (AP)—Buying demand continued to centre on rails and selected industrials in today's stock market and new highs for one to seven years were plentiful with dealings among the liveliest of the past several months. Gains of fractions to a point or so were well distributed near the 4th hour.

Peaks for 1944 or longer were touched by Great Northern, Santa Fe, Southern Pacific, Southern Railway, U. S. Realty and American Telephone. Ahead were U. S. Steel, Bethlehem, Chrysler, U. S. Rubber, Anaconda, U. S. Gypsum and Atlantic Coast Line. Canadian issues were off slightly. Canadian Pacific and Hiram Walker the only gainers.

Three Are Held After Incident At Tourist Cabin

Hamilton, Dec. 4 — (CP) — George Marquis Inch, 28, married, of Van Wagner's Beach, appeared before Magistrate H. A. Burbidge today on a charge of vagrancy arising out of an early morning incident last Saturday in a tourist cabin on Highway 20 in Stoney Creek when Arthur Sutherland was wounded.

Inch was represented by Orville M. Walsh, K.C., and bail was fixed at two sureties of $1,000 each. Robert Green, 23, and Stanley McMahon, 22, are in custody as material witnesses pending completion of police inquiries. Bail for them was also set at two sureties of $1,000 each. The cases were adjourned to Dec. 13.

Later Provincial Constable Leonard Chambers questioned a 19-year-old girl and another man, 22, both of whom are said to have attended a party at which the alleged shooting took place.

Inspector A. R. Knight head of the Provincial Police here, said the couple had informed the police they were to have been married today and the gathering in the tourist cabin last Friday night was a pre-nuptial party in their honor.

Sutherland, with a bullet in his left lung, has been placed in an oxygen tent. His condition today was described at the general hospital as critical.

Provincial Constable Leslie Taylor stated that the first story circulated to the effect that Sutherland had been shot from ambush and robbed of $3,000 at Van Wagner's Beach was not believed by police.

"Our investigations are continuing, but certain details regarding the shooting have yet to be established," said Constable Taylor.

Inspector Knight said that all those present at the party had been questioned. "After the shooting, those present endeavored to do for the injured man and attempted to secure the services of a physician," he said. "They finally took Sutherland to the hospital themselves."

'Post-War Planning Now Looms As Hard Economic Reality'

Pres. Spinney of Bank of Montreal Says Financial Needs of Government Will Likely Remain at Higher Level Than Before War—Importance of Incentive is Stressed

Montreal, Dec. 4 (CP)—George W. Spinney in his presidential address at the annual meeting of the Bank of Montreal today told shareholders that "if we let government do everything" after the war, "we are going along the road Germany followed to totalitarianism."

"This is what we are fighting abroad. Let us fight also against it beginning at home."

Mr. Spinney said that "the challenge is the greater because a mere return to pre-war conditions obviously will not be enough." There were today something like 1,300,000 more Canadians at work or in the armed forces than at the start of the war. Canada had an export trade of more than three billion dollars annually just about three times the pre-war rate, but it was probably that not more than 25 per cent of present exports represented ordinary peacetime business.

As the end of the war approached, post-war planning, which "perhaps in earlier days often took the form of a rather pleasant intellectual exercise now looms as a hard economic reality." It would seem that many people "are assuming today that a post-war economic millenium, in which everybody will be more secure, richer and presumably happier can materialize by order in council."

By reason of the costs of reconstruction and the more permanent demand for social security measures of various kinds, the financial needs of the government were likely to remain at a higher level that before the war. If these costs were distributed in such a way that incentives were diminished and individuals or corporations were discouraged or deferred from entering into productive undertakings "then the net result would be a loss to the Canadian people in terms of employment and living standards."

Five Fatalities Are Reported

(By The Canadian Press)

Five fatalities were reported in eastern Canada during the weekend, all of them in Ontario. Two were reported suicides.

George Grubb, 86-year-old farmer of York Township died in hospital Saturday of wounds suffered when attacked by a bull. He slipped to the ground when exercising the animal in a barnyard, and the bull trampled him.

V. J. Gauthier, 34, of North Bay, brakeman on a Canadian Pacific Railway freight eastbound from Sudbury, was killed almost instantly Saturday when he fell as he stepped from the moving train near Chelmsford station.

In Hamilton, police said an inquiry would be held into the death of Walter Van Bergen, 45, in hospital Saturday. The cause was said to be an injury received in his home Thursday.

Coroners and police reported two suicides in Toronto Sunday. Cecil Spragg, 46, died of gunshot wounds in his left breast which Coroner C. N. Mooney said were self-inflicted. Spragg was said to be despondent over the death of his wife six months ago. Arthur Phillips, 61, died of a bullet wound in his head, and Coroner W. Eason Brown said he shot himself with a 22-calibre rifle.

ASSEMBLY

Assembly last week was held on Wednesday, November 29, during the seventh period. An exhibition designed to illustrate the principles of making over clothes, had been arranged for this period but Mr. Turner explained that the show would not arrive from Kingston until late in the afternoon and then had to leave directly for Ottawa.

In the Afternoon:

On December 1, the annual commencement exercises were begun in our auditorium with a short program of presentations and musical entertainment.

The invocation having been pronounced by Rabbi G. Felder, of the Jewish Synagogue, Mr. Jones, chairman of the Advisory-Vocational Committee, Board of Education, addressed the assembly briefly. Immediately following this, the Glee Club sang a group of numbers which were very well received.

The main business of the afternoon was the presentation of intermediate certificates to those students who have successfully completed two years of study at our school.

Following this, awards of special prizes and honors were bestowed upon various deserving students.

BOYS' SPORTS

Senior-Junior Exhibition Basketball: 35-36.

On Wednesday, after four p.m., the Juniors engaged the Senators in an exhibition basketball game, and after a hard fought struggle ended up on the short end of a 35-36 score. However the score does not indicate the play as what the Juniors lacked in experience they made up in fight. Several of their baskets were the direct result of beautiful passing plays, while the Seniors looked short on condition and their general play was not very smooth. However they had only one practice this year and by the time the season starts they will probably be greatly improved. A crowd of over one hundred students lined the gallery and did much to contribute to the success of the game. It is a good omen for basketball in this school that so much interest is being shown so early in the season. "Silver" Cameron with 10 points and "Fearless" Watson with nine points, assisted by the good work of George Miller, were the chief cogs in the Junior machine, while Gord Bankier of last year's team with 19 points, and Maurice Rollins with seven points were the chief scorers for the Seniors. Stew Wood and George Garrow played a good game on guard for the winners.

The Junior Rugby game originally scheduled for Wednesday night was changed to Thursday and then the weather man stepped in and the game has been postponed indefinitely.

AD LIBITUM

The first thing that I would like to do this week is to correct an inaccurate statement which I made last week. Frank Sinatra usually wears an ordinary tie fashioned with a Windsor knot but it seems he does don a bow-tie on occasion. May my mistake not be considered too serious.

R. G. D.

The topic with which I would like to deal this week is one of extreme interest to the entire school. Boogie-woogie!! Some mothers who are slightly old-fashioned, or lovers of long-haired music, have made it their firm belief that hot music and jam are causes of juvenile delinquency, which is rather silly. Any child who is brought up to be absolutely normal will eventually lend an ear to jive.

In some parts of the United States jive has been carried altogether too far, but it has not yet caused the teen-aged generation to become riotous in Canada.

Most of the modern dance bands have adopted this style of playing and some are idolized for that reason. Louis Jordan, Harry James, Count Basie, and Cab Calloway are several of the well-known boogie-woogie and red-hot dance band leaders.

Books are published, and a few of this school's students have become quite adept boogie-woogie pianists. These pieces of music are written under such titles, "Scrub me momma with a boogie beat", and "Dig me honey eight to the bar".

Hollywood has in its possession quite a number of professional boogie-woogie pianists, a few of whom are Mary Lou Williams, Frankie Carle, Hazel Scott, Dorothy Donigan and Duke Ellington himself.

Last year one of the best known of these boogie-woogie ivory-ticklers died suddenly on a train. He was "Fats" Waller, about two hundred and fifty pounds of real solid jive. His music and recordings are still very popular.

Boogie-woogie is sometimes written in the form of "blues"; such as the "Everyday Blues", but more often in such compositions as "In the Mood", and "Cow-Cow Boogie".

Well kids, we are living in a queer age, but we all seem to enjoy its queerness, and hope that "Boogie-woogie" doesn't die out too soon.

NO DETAILS GIVEN

London, Dec. 4 (CP)—Casualties and damage were acknowledged by the Air Ministry today as a result of enemy air activity over southern England from dawn Sunday until 7 a.m. today. The announcement gave no details.

German Troops Hold Tenaciously To Their Positions

Rome, Dec. 4 (CP)—German troops in the southeastern sector of the Po Valley were holding tenaciously to their positions south and southwest of Ravenna, against British 8th Army attacks, today's Allied communique said.

(The BBC said last night that British forces had by-passed Russi, junction city astride the main Ravenna-Faenza highway, but had come up against a new enemy defence line about 1,000 yards to the north.)

While the Britons remained locked in heavy fighting between the Montone and Lamone rivers northeast of Faenza, Allied 5th Army forces smashed fresh German counter-attacks south of Bologna.

Simultaneously Allied headquarters announced that Italian Fascist troops which the Germans began putting into the line a month ago have been deserting to Allied lines at a rate of 30 to more than 100 daily.

The Germans yesterday took advantage of the fog and rain and attacked American positions at Monte eBimonte and Bombina, in the central sector of the front. They suffered heavy losses when the attacks were broken up.

A few German bombers again appeared over 5th army lines but caused neither damage nor casualties.

ALD. FRANK S. FOLLWELL ELECTED MAYOR

AMERICAN FORCES DRIVE INTO SIEGFRIED LINE

Morley Duff Wins Commissioner Seat, Two By-Laws Carry

All But One of Last Year's Council Retain Office

Alderman Frank S. Follwell, young city business man was elected mayor of the city of Belleville at the municipal elections yesterday defeating the veteran Ex-Mayor George O. Tice by a sweeping majority of 1974. Official returns tabulated late last night revealed Mayor-Elect Follwell as having polled 2916 votes to his opponent's 942.

In a close battle for the public utilities commissionership, Commissioner Morley P. Duff turned back an early threat of former Commissioner George A. Reid and emerged victorious with a majority of 333. He polled 2045 votes to Mr. Reid's total of 1712.

The Follwell glory in the mayoralty contest was reflected in the race for aldermanic honors, former Board of Education Trustee Edward E. Follwell, younger brother of the mayor-elect heading the polls with a vote of 1984. He had a lead of 138 over his nearest competitor, Alderman Harry J. Clarke, who finished with 1846.

Newcomers Turned Back

Veteran aldermen of the past two or three years turned back the threats of newcomers with the exception of two. Alderman Follwell and Alderman-elect Ex-Mayor Glencoe Thompson are the only new faces which will sit in aldermanic conclave next year.

Elected for the new two-year term which went into effect by virtue of the electorate supporting a by-law which places the first seven aldermen to be elected in office for that period of time, are, besides Aldermen Follwell and Clarke, Lorne W. McDougall, who amassed 1,732 votes; Harold J. Woodley with 1,514; Glencoe E. Thompson, 1,411; Harold Armstrong, 1,378, and John J. Trudeau, 1,370 votes.

Closeness of the aldermanic race at this point is seen in the fact that first returns placed Alderman E. Ormonde Butler in the two-year term circle with a margin of one vote over Alderman Armstrong. A check-up this morning however, revealed an error of ten votes in the tabulation of Alderman Armstrong, and officially he joins the two-year term men with Alderman Butler reverting to eighth position and eligible only for one year.

By virtue of the ten-vote change, Alderman Armstrong goes to sixth position with Alderman John J. Trudeau, whose official count was tabulated at 1,370 dropping back to seventh place.

The voting public placed the seal of approval on both by-laws needing the green light of its authority to make them law. The by-law authorizing a two-year term for the first seven aldermen elected carried with a vote of 1984 against

By-Law Carries

The second by-law on the ballots, that of authorizing council to raise $50,000 by debenture to complete the Riverside Drive also received voter acclaim, the public declaring itself in favor of the by-law with a "For" vote of 890 as against a "No" figure of 550.

Public interest in the election, if the number of votes polled can be judged a criterion, was about on a par with that of 1943. During the election of that year, 3966 voters went to the polls while in Monday's civic battle 3852 ballots were marked. This vote is roughly fifty per cent of the total vote as laid down in the voters' lists.

Close to Last Year.

The slight fluctuation in the popularity of last year's aldermen may be accounted for in the difference of the total vote. The veterans final figures were closely associated with those of last year, although the difference of 133 votes in the case of Alderman Pringle practically cost him the seat.

Alderman Clarke's difference was five votes less, and the others were either over or under by a slightly larger figure. Alderman Follwell, however, failed to reach the figure of 2,038 votes massed by his poll-leading brother, the mayor elect, in 1943.

There was however, a marked difference in the attitude of Mr. and Mrs. John Public regarding the outcome of the election to that shown at the recent nomination meetings. The offices of City Clerk Wilfred Holmes were filled with more or less excited candidates at an early hour, while the City Hall auditorium was filled to capacity by the time the final returns were nearly ready.

Innovation Appreciated.

A new innovation, and one that was welcome by the waiting members of the electorate, was a large blackboard erected on the stage of the auditorium and upon which results were placed at intermittent periods. In the clerk's office City Comptroller Harold Bateman, City Engineer Mott, Dr. John Marshall, Mr. Clifford Matthews and, Mr. Claude Tice worked untiringly at the tabulation work. The final unofficial figures were reached at a few minutes past 11.30 p.m.

"Indoor" interest in the elections was very keen. A battery of five telephones in the editorial rooms of the Ontario Intelligencer worked at top speed from approximately 8.15 to 11.30 p.m. Another busy group of

'Scorched Earth Policy' Will Multiply Reich's Hardships Says Eisenhower

New York, Dec. 5 — (AP) — Gen. Eisenhower warned the German people today, that their continued resistance and the retreating German Army's "scorched earth policy" would multiply the sufferings and hardships of Germany.

"The hopes of the German people to avoid economic collapse after the defeat are largely dependent upon the extent of German opposition to Nazi plans to destroy German property and German natural resources before the occupation by Allied troops," said a proclamation read over Allied transmitters in Europe and reported by the United States Office of War Information.

"The German army will be defeated," the proclamation said "Larger and larger portions of German territory will be occupied by the Allied armies until the National Socialist government and the German armed forces finally surrender or until they are crushed.

"The hopes of the German people to avoid economic collapse after the defeat are largely dependent upon the extent of German opposition to the Nazi plans to destroy German property and German natural resources before the occupation by Allied troops. The scorched earth policy does not affect the Allies, as the Allies bring their own supplies. The German people, on the other hand, will suffer severe hardships through this policy.

"The military government will not give any compensation for public utilities, buildings, supplies, mines or industrial installations which have been destroyed by the Germans in carrying out their scorched earth policy.

"As long as the German army obeys the Nazi orders to prolong a futile resistance the Allied air and ground forces are bound to inflict heavy material damage upon Germany. The sufferings and hardships thus created will multiply themselves if the German people itself carries out the Nazi plans to transform Germany into a desert."

RED ARMY FORCES SURGING THROUGH WEST HUNGARY

Massed Along South Shores of Lake Balaton 60 Miles From The Austrian Frontier

London, Dec. 5 (CP)—Red Army forces surging through western Hungary in a drive outflanking besieged Budapest were massed today along the south shores of Lake Balaton, 60 miles from the Austrian frontier.

Led by Marshal Feodor I. Tolbukhin, the Austria-bound Russians piled up one gain yesterday of 17 miles. The over-all advances carried them 12 miles closer to the border than previously reported—60 miles from Nagybajom, at the southwestern end of the 42-mile lake front.

A midnight Moscow bulletin said a column driving north along the west bank of the Danube was 37 miles south of Budapest and still advancing toward the capital's back door. East of the river which divides the city other Russian troops have been hammering the southeastern and eastern suburbs for days and on the northeast enemy communications have been cut.

Tolbukhin's forces were rapidly taking positions to swing around both ends of Lake Balaton toward Austria. Nagybajom was the springboard for the southwestern army. At the northeastern end of the lake front the base was Sagvar, reached yesterday in a 17-mile advance from Tamasi.

Takes 100 Towns.

The Russians swept through more than 100 towns and villages northeast, west and south of the communications hub of Kaposvar, captured Saturday.

"The Germans are abandoning their military technique, their arms and military equipment," the Moscow communique said of the fighting in this sector.

Reports still incomplete declared the Russians killed 2,000 enemy soldiers in yesterday's fighting. The communique said 3,000 prisoners were taken in three days of fighting ending Sunday.

West of Pecs in the area of the Drava river border of Hungary and Yugoslavia the Russians were hurling back the enemy on the approaches to the rail junction town of Szigetvar, 80 miles northeast of Zagreb.

20,000 Persons Watch Hangings 5 War Criminals

Moscow, Dec. 5. (AP)—A dispatch today from Lublin said five German "war criminals" convicted of committing atrocities at the Maidanek, Poland, concentration camp had been hanged before 20,000 persons.

The dispatch said members of the crowd shouted: "They deserved it. Death to German evil doers".

Canadian Troops of 8th Army Capture Ravenna Near the Adriatic Sea

Rome, Dec. 5 (CP)—Canadian troops of the British 8th Army, back in action again in the Italian campaign, and a British formation captured Ravenna, German stronghold near the Adriatic Sea, the Allied high command announced today.

The Canadian unit, the Princess Louise Dragoon Guards, cut highway 16 and entered Ravenna from the northwest, as the 27th Lancers plunged into the city from the south, headquarters said.

(The Princess Louise Dragoon Guards, of Ottawa, went to Sicily and fought through Italy as a reconnaissance battalion of the 1st Canadian Division).

Official disclosure of Canadian capture of the city marked the first report of Canadian troops having returned to action in the Italian theatre since Nov. 10.

Previously Allied headquarters had announced the capture of Russi and Godo, towns on the Ravenna-Bologna railway, and midway between Ravenna and Faenza, besieged German stronghold on the Bologna-Rimini later highway.

Rome, Dec. 5 — (AP) — Knifing swiftly through crushed enemy defences northeast of besieged Faenza, British 8th Army forces have cut the Ravenna-Bologna railway and captured the towns of Russi and Godo, Allied headquarters announced today.

The advances also put the Allied troops astride the main highway between Ravenna, Adriatic port, and Faenza. Russi and Godo are roadway towns about midway between the two cities.

Near Faenza 8th Army troops have occupied commanding positions east of the highway for some days.

Rolling forward after several days of hard fighting between the Montone and Lamone rivers, the 8th Army forged a bridgehead over a canal south of Russi against heavy opposition.

Farther east other units crossed the Montone and joined the infantry which had established the canal bridgehead. The combined force quickly fanned out, by-passed Russi on both sides, and later mopped up the town.

One column, stabbing northeast of Russi against light opposition, captured the village of Godo. It was there, that the Ravenna-Bologna railroad was cut.

"We reached a railway embankment north of Russi which was strongly defended with dug-in machine-guns, anti-tank guns and many mines," said an official front-line report.

Forced to Pull Back

West of Russi other 8th Army forces fanned out and forced the enemy to pull back behind the Lamone river. Scattered outposts left behind were wiped out.

The fall of Russi and Godo and the subsequent German withdrawal leaves the 8th Army holding a deep wedge threatening to flank the enemy defences around Ravenna. It seemed impossible the Germans would long risk a substantial force for a prolonged stand in that coastal sector when escape routes to the northwest might be enveloped.

The 8th Army attacks were aimed by fair weather although light rain fell in the Po Valley yesterday afternoon.

On the Allied 8th Army front, Indian troops occupied a number of commanding hills, including Monte Vlasno, and have entered the town of Casola Valsenio, 12 miles southwest of the Po Valley town of Castel Bolognese.

BOTH SIDES LOSE A DESTROYER IN ORMOC BATTLE

American Vessel Sunk in 55 Seconds but Guns Still Firing

General MacArthur's Headquarters, Philippines, Dec. 5 —(AP) —Sharp naval blows were traded by Americans and Japanese in Ormoc Gulf off Leyte Island, a Headquarters communique reported today, and each side lost a destroyer.

The American vessel was ripped completely in two, presumably by an aerial torpedo, and went down in 55 seconds, a 20-mm. gun still firing. The majority of the crew was saved, the communique said, adding that a second Japanese destroyer was believed damaged in the engagement.

Sinking of an American vessel furnished the backdrop for a thrilling rescue, in which leading roles were played by Catalina flying boats. One picked 56 men out of the water, and lumbered into the air with them after a three-mile run down the bay, in full sight of thousands of Japanese troops.

The destroyer's survivors had been in the water 12 hours, clinging to debris, when the first flying boat reached them.

The U.S. vessels entered the gulf in the face of air attacks and shore fire.

Ground activity was limited to minor clashes as rains poured down monotonously, but Allied planes ranged widely in delivering a series of stabs at enemy installations. North of Palompon a 1,000-ton enemy transport was sunk.

In New Guinea mopping-up operations, an additional 1,821 enemies have been killed, Gen. MacArthur reported, and 180 prisoners of war and 713 "friendly nationals" liberated.

MANY YANKS MARRY BRITISH GIRLS

London, Dec. 5 — (AP) — The United States Embassy reported today that an estimated 12,000 to 15,000 British wives of United States servicemen have applied for visas to enter the United States. Attaches said another 1,000 already have been granted visas.

BERLIN POUNDED BY 800 AMERICAN HEAVY BOMBERS

Attack Follows 12,000-ton Assault on Germany During Monday

London, Dec. 5 —(CP)— American heavy bombers blasted Berlin today for the first time in two months.

Headquarters of the United States Strategic Air Forces in Europe said more than 550 Fortress and Liberator bombers made up the battle fleet which attacked industrial targets in the German capital and railway yards at Munster.

Eight hundred Mustang and Thunderbolt fighters flew the 1,000-mile round trip to Berlin and back to keep the German fighters away while the bombers unloaded 3,000 tons of bombs on German munition and tank plants.

Scattered clouds were over Berlin —last hit by American heavies Oct. 6—but some formations were able to bomb visually through breaks in the misty banks.

The blows followed up yesterday's 12,000-ton assault on eight railroad centres of supreme importance to Field Marshal Gerd von Rundstedt's armies in the west.

Good weather favored the Flying Fortresses and Liberators over the Channel and prospects were bright for a sharp follow-up to yesterday's raids by 4,000 bombers and fighters on Soest, Kassel, Giessen, Bebra, Mainz, Oberhausen, Karlsruhe and Heilbrown.

Six rail centres were hit in daylight, five of them by American bombers. R.A.F. and R.C.A.F. heavies took care of Oberhausen in the Ruhr and went to Karlsruhe and Heilbrown on the Upper Rhine after dark. A "substantial number" of Canadian craft attacked Karlsruhe, it was announced. All returned safely.

U.S. headquarters announced the loss of 12 bombers and three fighters from the attack on the six rail centres, which was carried out by 2,300 planes the R.A.F. bombers command announced the loss of 17 bombs and no fighters in the attacks on the three other rail targets. Two of the attacks were in darkness.

Figures on losses were withheld by British and American bombers commands as incomplete but opposition was reported moderate.

BRITAIN READY TO USE ARMY IN GREEK CRISIS

Churchill Says Any Attempt to Form Red Dictatorship Will Be Resisted

By JAMES F. KING
(A. P. Staff Writer.)

London, Dec. 5 (AP)—Britain will resist any attempt to "impose by violence a Communist dictatorship" in strife-torn Greece, and is ready to use her army if necessary to maintain order, Prime Minister Churchill declared today.

In a bristling session of the House of Commons, with one Communist and several Labor members firing questions, Mr. Churchill stood firm behind the government of George Papandreou even as Athens heard rumors that the Premier would resign. Fracticidal fighting broke out in the Greek capitol during the weekend in the crisis which developed when the E.A.M. (National Liberation Front) refused to disband its militia, the E.L.A.S.

Mr. Churchill deplored the fighting, and declared "we and our American Allies are doing our utmost to give assistance, and our troops are acting to prevent bloodshed."

Will Maintain Order

"We shall not hesitate to use the considerable British army now in Greece, and being reinforced, to see that law and order are maintained," Mr. Churchill declared.

He said he was not prepared, on information so far available, to say "who started the firing."

The question of whether the Greek people form themselves into a monarchy or republic must be left to them to decide later, he told the House, but in the meantime "the authority of the constitutional Greek government must be accepted and enforced throughout the country."

"The armed force must be dependent on the Greek government," the Prime Minister said. "No government can have a sure foundation so long as there are private armies owing allegiance to a group, party or ideology instead of the state and nation.

"Although these facts should be clear to all, the Left Wing and Communist ministers have resigned from the Greek government at this dangerous crisis rather than implement measures to which they had already agreed for the replacement of the E.A.M. police and guerillas by regular national services."

Civic Electors in Ontario Endorse $4,000,000 for Hospital Construction

By The Canadian Press

Money by-laws calling for an expenditure of more than $4,000,000 for the construction of hospitals or extensions to present medical institutions were endorsed by electors in civic elections in six Ontario municipalities yesterday.

Additional by-laws favoring the spending of almost $1,000,000 for memorial or sports centres also were favored by voters.

Despite snow-filled streets in many cities the weather generally was mild and in the major cities greater numbers cast ballots than in the 1943 civic elections.

At Hamilton, electors by an overwhelming majority voted in favor of a $2,500,000 hospital extension by-law, but rejected by a vote of 10,409 to 5,568 a by-law for a memorial auditorium and parks development program costing $1,500,000. The vote for the hospital by-law was 14,599 for and 4,133 against. The by-laws were the centre of interest because of the absence of a mayoralty contest, Mayor Samuel Lawrence having been elected by acclamation.

Peterboro Pass 3 By-laws

Voters at Peterboro, where Mayor James Hamilton was returned by acclamation, endorsed three by-laws, one to raise $600,000 towards cost of a new civic hospital, another for a civic grant of $75,000 towards a fund for a memorial health centre and arena, and a 3rd authorizing a grant of $300,000 towards a hospital fund.

Kingston ratepayers voted in favor of a $100,000 grant for a proposed tuberculosis sanitorium; Leamington town and Mersea township voted in favor of municipal grants to build a proposed $150,000 memorial hospital; London electors voted 5,564 to 1,062 in favor of spending $100,000 to build an addition to the Victoria Hospital nurses' home in their city, and at Sarnia electors endorsed a by-law to build a comfort station at a cost of $25,000.

The cities of Guelph and Galt both voted in favor of building civic swimming pools, the former at a cost of $70,000 and Galt's at a cost of $40,000. At Sudbury, ratepayers, by a vote of 2,285 to 828 favored the spending of $125,000 for property on which to erect a civic centre.

Several Mayors Re-elected

Voting in the mayoralty campaigns in most cases favored the previous chief magistrate. At Ottawa, Mayor Stanley Lewis was returned for his eighth term; Mayor H. R. Cory was returned for his 11th term at Trenton; Joseph Meinzinger of Kitchener, was re-elected for the fifth time; Mayor W. J. Heaman of London was swept back to office to begin his fifth term and Mayor Arthur Reaume of Windsor was given a third term when he defeated his only opponent, William Turner, by 17,731 votes to 5,590.

At Chatham, where R. D. Steele, alderman for the last three years, defeated C. Lorne Goddard in his bid for a third term as mayor, 48 per cent of the ratepayers cast ballots, compared with 30 per cent last year.

More than 40 per cent of the electors exercised their franchise in Windsor.

Gordon L. Rife, alderman at Guelph for the last 10 years, was elected by a majority of 1,873 over William G. Taylor, a former mayor, and at Belleville, former mayor George Tice stepped down for alderman Frank Follwell, who had a majority of 1,980 votes.

3rd Army Pushes Past Saarlautern In Heavy Fighting

Other Troops Bombard Saarbrucken with Artillery

By JAMES M. LONG
(AP Staff Writer)

Paris, Dec. 5. (AP)—The 95th Infantry Division of the U.S. 3rd Army has driven clear through Saarlautern and is fighting well into the Siegfried line defences beyond the fortress city, it was announced today at supreme headquarters.

The satellite towns of Roden and Fraulatern, each 1 1-2 miles beyond the captured Saar river bridge, were passed by the Americans advancing through shellfire from German artillery emplacements.

Other 3rd Army troops threatened Saarbrucken, capital of the arsenal region of steel and coal, and bombarded its blackened buildings with eight-inch artillery. The nearby French rail town of Forbach and the French border town of Sarreguemines also were being shelled from positions two and four and a half miles away.

Some fighting still was going on in the east bank section of Saarlautern where the Allied troops were meeting the Volkssturm, recently mustered civilians wearing armbands.

Five divisions of the 3rd Army to the southeast were beating forward either inside the Saar or through the last bit of Lorraine.

British Opposite Venlo.

To the north the British 2nd Army had driven the enemy back over the river all along the Meuse, and stood opposite the Ruhr gateway town of Venlo, while a 21st Army Group spokesman reported 1st Canadian Army troops had given a force of German paratroopers "a very bloody nose."

The Germans had attacked Canadian positions northeast of Nijmegen, near the northern end of the Allied front, he said, but lost 50 killed and 110 prisoners in the engagement.

(Reports from 21st Army Group headquarters did not make clear when this engagement took place.)

The Canadians were being forced to withdraw from some advanced positions between Arnhem and Nijmegen, as flood-water from the broken Rhine dams inundated their positions.

Patton's bridgehead on the east bank of the looping Saar was widened to at least 1½ miles. His forces were on the river all the way to Merzig, 15 miles north of Saar-

Maj. Welsh Will Be Given Chance To Prove Statement

Ottawa, Dec. 5 (CP)—Defence headquarters announced last night that Maj. G. A. (Tiger) Welsh, D.S.O., is being given an opportunity to "substantiate statements credited to him in a recent interview with the press," and added that the defence department has "no record that Maj. Welsh had reported to the appropriate authorities the conditions concerning reinforcements overseas alleged to have been in the interview."

(In an inerview with a Globe and Mail reporter at Sutherland, Ont., last Friday, Maj. Welsh said that as early as November, 1943, Canadian artillery commanders in Italy had filed reports of a serious condition developing in the arrival of untrained and inadequate reinforcements. Since that time, he said, the situation "has been rapidly degenerating."

(Maj. Welsh said that at Ortona his unit carried on 28 days without rest, and a draft of replacements was sent to his anti-tank unit from an anti-aircraft unit.))

D. MAWSON WINS OVER PARKS IN LIMERICK

Reeve Mawson is well known in county council circles where he has represented his township intermittently over a period of years.

For council those elected were H. Fitzgibbon, Charles Baker, Pat Phyn and Marion Ham.

Mayor-Elect Thanks Electors For Support

"This is the happiest day of my life", stated Mayor-elect Frank S. Follwell as he spoke to a fair crowd of rate-payers in the city hall following the official tabulation of votes shortly before midnight Monday, when final results of the election were known. He expressed his appreciation for the confidence placed in him and his platform by the electors and paid tribute to Mayor Rollins for the leadership given during his two year term of office.

In promising to do his duty by the citizens as they had done in turning out to vote, mayor-elect Follwell exploded a persistent rumor which may have done much to prevent him being elected. According to Mr. Follwell rumor had stated he had been on deferment from military service.

"I would not deny this rumour during the election campaign," he said, "but now that the election is over and you have shown your confidence in me I want to clear this matter up." He then asked Mayor Rollins, who was acting chairman, to read a certificate of medical examination from the military board stating, that for the time being he was not required to report for military training. Mr. Follwell stated he had previously sought enlistment but had been turned down.

Expresses Disappointment

Naming over the successful candidates for council Mr. Follwell expressed his disappointment that Alderman Pringle had not been re-elected. "Alderman Pringle is one of the best chairmen of industry which this council ever had," he said amidst applause. "His five years in council have proven that he has the interests of Belleville at heart and I trust that he will again offer himself for election." The two candidates for the public utility commissionership were also complimented by the newly-elected mayor.

In closing Mr. Follwell expressed his feeling that with the backing of the citizens the newly elected council would go forward to make Belleville a better city in which to live. "I wish you the compliments of the season," he said. "I trust that our boys will soon be home from overseas and that we will have something to offer them when they come home."

Thanking his supporters for re-electing him as hydro commissioner, Mr. Duff paid tribute to his opponent Mr. Reid, who he said had given a great deal of fine service to the city. It had been a close fight and a friendly one, he stated.

The Best of Friends

Mr. Reid in turn paid tribute to Mr. Duff, stating that they were the best of friends, with his opponent being a gentleman in every respect. It had been a good campaign, he said; and he wished Mr. Duff every success. In closing Mr. Reid complimented electors on their favoring the esplanade project in their ballots. The same project had earlier been turned down following its being brought before the public. It goes to show that public opinion does change and the esplanade will be a great thing for the city of Belleville.

Although the hour was getting late all of the candidates for aldermen, who were present at the meeting spoke briefly, expressing their appreciation for support and extending the compliments of the season. Elected aldermen spoke first with those unsuccessful following.

As chairman of the meeting Mayor Rollins added his tribute to Alderman Pringle who failed to be re-elected for council. "Alderman Pringle brought the gas plant question before the public and as a result was defeated at the polls," he said. "He is a good alderman with the interests of the city at heart and I trust that he will again offer himself for election."

Allies To Prevent Hun Experiments On Long-Range Weapons

London, Dec. 5. (CP)—Prime Minister Churchill informed the House of Commons today the Allies were making plans to see that Germany could not carry out any secret experiments to develop long-range weapons after the war.

"We have a lot of regular people on the job and so have our American and Allied friends", he told a member who raised the question.

Mr. Churchill said he could not disclose American and British casualties in the war against Japan at the present time as this information would help the enemy.

German Ruse Failed to Work Against Canucks

By DOUGLAS AMARON
(CP) War Correspondent

With the 1st Canadian Army in Holland, Dec. 5 —(CP Cable)— Troops of the 1st Canadian Army captured 34 Germans and killed probably twice that number in annihilating an enemy raiding party that tried by strategy to penetrate the Canadian lines northeast of Nijmegen yesterday.

The Germans, carrying 36 stretchers, bluffed their way through forward defences by explaining in English they wanted to take wounded men to a British medical post.

But the ruse was discovered quickly and in a brisk fight every German was killed or captured.

The count of the dead was unavailable early last night but the strength of the raiding party was estimated at between 200 and 250.

During vigorous patrolling Sunday night a Central Ontario battalion brought in one prisoner. Maritime troops who, with a French-speaking battalion from Quebec, have part of their unit inside German territory, lost some men through shelling.

BERLIN

R.A.F. Spitfires and Typhoons carried on the war against German rail communications from their bases in Belgium and Holland. The network leading into the Ruhr was cut at 20 scattered points.

Five locomotives were destroyed and many more damaged during nearly 500 trips over the battlelines.

Fighter and medium bombers of the U.S. 9th air force were in the air—often in bad weather—26 days of November's 30.

Fighter bombers made 12,000 trips over the battlelines and medium bombers struck 3,000 strong with a total of 5,200 tons on selected targets ahead of the Allied armies.

Eleven mediums and 119 fighter bombers were lost but the 9th's bag included destruction and damage of 454 locomotives, 176 tanks, 2,798 railway cars, 40 barges and 158 German planes.

The Allied air forces have developed a plan for immobilizing Germany's rail network but the task will take longer than the dislocation of the French and Belgian systems, the Air Ministry said last night.

The plan is designed to isolate Germany's main industrial centres from the western front. An intolerable strain can be put on the railway system by bombing key points behind the front and large industrial areas close to the front.

3RD ARMY

lautern, and executing a wheeling movement of his right and centre as far southeast as Sarre Union. One mixed cavalry and infantry team advanced four miles inside Germany, south of Saarlautern.

His men at Roden and Fraulautern were 5½ miles inside the Saar, nearly a fifth of the way across, but they still had to negotiate the Siegfried Line.

Men of the 3rd moved within two miles of Forbach, a castled town of 11,500, and within 4½ miles of Sarreguemines, a town of 14,000. Along the curling 50-mile front from Merzig to Sarre Union, upwards of 90,000 Americans were on the move.

Meet Strong Opposition

They encountered strong German opposition across the river in Saarlautern from a few pockets and from guns of the Siegfried Line. Patton detached a few forces to mop up the nests of Nazis in the city of 32,000, completely cleared west of the river.

German guns fired at least 1,000 rounds in four hours at the sturdy masonry bridge which Americans captured intact at Saarlautern, but by late Monday, it still stood and men, tanks and guns poured across.

Along the Roer river front to the north, within 22 miles of Cologne, the violent and prolonged battle of attrition went into a deadlock. Gen. Eisenhower's communique said the U.S. 9th and 1st armies "are meeting stubborn resistance in the outskirts of Julich."

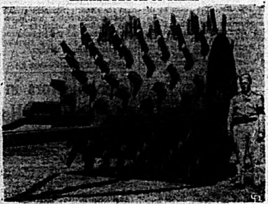
"East of the Inde, we have consolidated our positions in Lucherberg and Luchem," it said. "In the Brandenberg area, southeast of Hurtgen, slight progress has been made."

Steady, methodical progress was made by the U. S. 7th and French 1st armies in clearing the snowy Vosges mountains and the sodden Alsace plains.

The 7th also fought vigorously for the major supply and rail centre of Haguenau in an attempt to clear the Germans fro mthe Karlsruhe corner of Lorraine.

The 7th Army, fighting on the right flank of the 3rd, captured Diemeringen, four miles east of Sarre Union, and Volksberg in the forest a few miles farther east. Oberbroon was taken in a flanking penetration 11 miles northwest of Haguenau, last city of size in German hands in Lorraine. Oberbroon is seven miles from the Palatinate border. The Germans were disengaging under what seemed only a local rear-guard shield.

ERSATZ FLOCK OF SHEEP



We'll grant you without argument that the gadget bears no more resemblance to a flock of woollies than we do to the Venus de Milo, but it serves the same purpose. Developed by army engineers, it is called a sheepsfoot roller and is used to compact the soil on which airfield pavements are constructed. When a flock of sheep pass over soft ground, the feet of the leaders sink in, but as more and more of the flock tramp over the ground they pack the soil so that the tail enders travel over hard-packed soil. This gadget, which weighs 36 tons, performs in the same way, making several passes over the same territory.

IT'S CORDLESS

Kitty Carlisle, film star, demonstrates the first of the housewives' "post-war dream" conveniences to make its bow, the new cordless electric iron. The iron obtains its heat from the automatic-controlled safety base and retains it for considerable time in a sponge-like plate inside the iron. A "magic watchman" thermostat prevents overheating and eliminates the fire hazard. Miss Carlisle is adjusting the heat regulator here.

Only One Case Listed for Trial

Conventional white gloves were delivered to His Honor Judge J. E. Madden at the opening of the December sessions of County Court here yesterday indicating the absence of criminal cases from the docket.

It was the third consecutive high court in which Crown Attorney B.C. Donnan had the privilege of presenting the white gloves to a presiding judge, Sheriff J. D. O'Flynn revealed to the court. "This is a remarkable record for the County of Hastings," stated Judge Madden upon accepting the kid gloves.

Only one case was listed for trial, a civil jury action of Jenner versus Parry, is an action over a building contract, Charles A. Payne K. C., is appearing for the complainant, while F. G. Cushing, local barrister, represents the defendant.

BRITAIN READY

Stands Ready to Help.

The British government, he said, wants to help the Greek people and assist them in every way possible, "but we cannot do this if the tommy-guns which were provided for use against the Germans are now used in an attempt to impose by violence a Communist dictatorship without the people being able to express their wishes."

The only Communist member in the House, William Gallacher, shouted "why?"—in connection with a statement that the Greek Communist ministers resigned. Mr. Churchill shot back:

"I say they have resigned. I am stating the facts. I thought the House would like a full answer."

In addition, he asserted, the Left-Wing E.A.M. leaders called a general strike which was for the time being preventing food sent from Britain and the United States "from reaching the mouths of the population we are trying to feed."

Later, the Prime Minister said it would be easy for the British to allow this government crisis "to degenerate, as it would, into anarchy or a communist dictatorship."

He emphasized, however, that "having gone so far" Britain should not turn back or "take our hand from the plow."

Mr. Churchill assured the House that British authorities would take care to see that the Greek government they support were not used "to fasten any rule of a faction upon the Greek people" which would have the "fullest opportunity of a free election."

The government of Premier Georges Papanderou three days ago represented all parties, including the Communist and E.A.M. representatives, Mr. Churchill said, but "they left suddenly on the eve of a quite evident attempt to overthrow a settled government which was on foot."

Charges Govt. Sides With the Right.

Earlier today, Fenner Brockway, political secretary of the Independent Labor Party, said "The British government is siding with the right against the left in Greece," and warned "consequences may be serious."

Mr. Brockway asserted: "Athens will set the pattern for Europe. Relations with Russia may be involved."

The Communist Daily Worker said editorially today that "British policy in Greece is on the brink of a catastrophe that may stain the good name of Britain in Europe for generations to come."

"The British government," it maintained, "cannot escape direct responsibility for the consequences of the situation it has provoked . . . the way not only to avert civil war in Greece, but to restore confidence in British good faith throughout Europe, is to end this policy of giving blank cheques to reactionaries and browbeating all who mistrust them."

people were the Bell Telephone girls who handled hundreds of calls in a highly satisfactory manner. While the exact number of calls was not ascertained last night, it was estimated today that they ran into the thousands.

No Evidence of Bitterness.

Defeated candidates took the turn of events in a good-natured manner. There was no evidence of bitterness or disappointment among those who "also ran" after the final figures had been announced. There was plenty of handshaking in the City Hall, and while there may have been some disappointment in the hearts of those who did not "make the grade" it must be said to their credit, that it was not shown on their faces nor exhibited in their manner.

Following the final announcements, the new council and others elected gave brief addresses of appreciation and good wishes to the assembled crowd in the City Hall auditorium.

And so ends another city election.

POLICE COURT

Court Congratulates E. E. Follwell Upon Election to Council

Congratulations were extended alderman-elect E. E. Follwell, local barrister, at the opening of city police court today by His Worship Magistrate T. Y. Wills and Crown Attorney E. C. Donnan, upon Mr. Follwell's election to the city council yesterday. "It is gratifying to have a member of the Hastings County Bar Association lead the polls in our municipal elections," stated His Worship in congratulation.

The court session was brief with the majority of the cases listed for trial having been settled by the means of pleas of guilty having been accepted and fines paid prior to the court.

Given Suspended Sentence.

The principal case heard was a charge of refusing to remain at employment heard against Gordon Sanford, of this city, preferred in alleged violation of the National Selective Service regulations. Mr. H. H. Reed, manager of the local N.S.S. office informed the court that Sanford was a habitual absentee from employment despite the fact the local office had endeavored to procure suitable employment for him.

Mr. Follwell, who appeared as special prosecutor in the case, told the court the matter was an aggravated case. "This is not the first time the accused has walked off a job," assured Mr. Follwell.

"I agree the accused is failing to assist in the national war effort, but I will give him a last chance in a year's suspended sentence with the understanding he remains at work in the future," stated Magistrate Wills in final warning. Sanford was assessed costs of $7.50.

Assault Charge Dismissed.

M. A. Mitchell, Belleville, paid $4.50 after admitting to a disorderly conduct charge, while Wilfred Thompson, Deseronto had an assault charge dismissed against him. Thompson was apprehended last week after accosting a woman on the street. "He is a returned soldier and it is only through the kindness of the complainant that the charge has not been pressed," revealed Mr. Donnan. Thompson was later re-arrested by Inspector Hayes on a charge of vagrancy and is being held pending investigations.

Mr. Donnan intimated the accused would be examined by a psychiatrist.

Three sailor lads who were causing a disturbance on a city bus last Saturday night, paid minimum fines on disorderly conduct charges prior to the opening of the court.

Post-War Plans Are Suggested At Oshawa

Oshawa, Dec. 5. (CP)—Engagement of G. Graham Reid of Toronto, as consulting engineer for preparation of a complete map of the city and a report on suggested sewage system, street extensions and construction of a sewage treatment plant, was recommended to City Council here last night by council's post-war reconstruction committee.

The recommendation was referred to a council committee meeting next week for action.

Shields of Toronto delivering a public address scheduled at the Civic Auditorium tonight ended with Ald. Hilda Hesson promising to "see what steps could be taken" by the auditorium commission.

Assistant city solicitor G. P. D. Bond told council it would have to pass a by-law to interfere and "there isn't time for that."

Ald. E. A. Brotman started the discussion by declaring "This man is travelling throughout Canada endeavoring to stir up feeling against the Catholic faith . . . and I don't like to see our building rented out to men like this."

Ald. James Black said the subject of the address, reinforcements, is a public issue and "we believe in freedom of speech; it doesn't matter who uses the building."

Unilluminated German Hospital Ship Sunk Accidentally

Rome, Dec. 5 —(AP)— Aircraft of the Mediterranean Allied Coastal Air Force accidentally sank the unilluminated German hospital ship Tuebingen during a period of poor light Nov. 18 while she was en route to Trieste, Allied Headquarters announced today. Regrets were conveyed to German authorities.

The Headquarters statement said, "A full inquiry into this unfortunate incident is proceeding." Headquarters said it understood that casualties among the crew were light. The ship was carrying no wounded at the time.

The official Allied report said nothing of the nationality of the attacking planes, but indicated they were British.

The detailed account said the flight leader was unable to identify the German hospital ship when she was sighted off Pola, Italy, before sunrise on Nov. 18. He reported and asked for instructions.

"Owing to atmospheric conditions," the statement said, "the message was received incorrectly and indicated to the controlling officer at the base that a high speed launch had been sighted in the middle of the Gulf of Venice. Having ascertained that no Allied launch was in the neighborhood the controlling officer at the base gave permission to attack. The attack was carried out and the ship was sunk."

On Champ Team Which Played in 1880

Sault Ste. Marie, Ont., Dec. 5—(CP)—John Stuart Prentice, one of the last surviving members of the Harriston Browns baseball team which won the Canadian championship in 1880, was buried here yesterday. He died last Friday at the age of 84. A native of Columbus, Ont., he was a printer and worked for more than 25 years with the old Petrolia Topic before coming to Sault Ste. Marie in 1916. He was active in such sports as lawn bowling and curling until a short time ago. A daughter, Mrs. Carl W. Austin, lives in Toronto.

COUNTERFEIT GAS RATION COUPONS

London, Ont., Dec. 5 —(CP)— Oscar H. Bloomfield, 47, of Montreal today was fined $100 and costs when he pleaded guilty to a charge of having nine counterfeit gasoline ration coupons in his possession. Bloomfield suggested the coupons were placed in his book at a Montreal garage some weeks ago.

Attention to Quality of Cheese Will Be Needed in Post-War Period Cheese Makers Told at Convention

With a very small attendance of district members present but with makers from the western part of the province in attendance, the Central Ontario Cheese Makers' Association opened its 17th annual convention at the Quinte Hotel this morning. Ranking government and dairy officials were also in attendance at the convention which will conclude its sessions Wednesday afternoon.

Regrets No Cheese Exhibit

President Harold Henderson of Campbellford in his opening address regretted there was no cheese exhibition this year and briefly reviewed the Canadian cheese industry. Cheese bonuses and the release of materials for the manufacture of milking machines had greatly assisted the farmer in meeting cheese production quotas he said.

For the post-war period he indicated that with keener competition from processed cheese products cheese makers would be called upon to give attention to variety and quality of their product. He saw by-products of the cheese making industry taking a place of great importance and pointed to the use which whey is being put through processing for materials useful in the war effort.

In closing he paid tribute to the memory of Sam Anderson, cheese maker of the Melrose district who passed away during the summer, and also paid tribute to Mr. A. Wallace of Campbellford who recently retired following 50 years as maker.

Dairy Herds Need Improving

R. C. Banbury, agricultural representative for Northumberland county, spoke briefly on "Dairy Daydream", pointing out that a great deal could be done for the betterment of dairy herds through artificial insemination and by maintaining June feeding conditions throughout the season.

Speaking directly to cheese makers he urged them to make their factories a place of beauty and indicated that the future would see the factory a place of year round activity. He indicated that the cheese maker be conducive towards a greater community spirit among the farmers and asked if something could not be done through the factory in the way of co-operative buying of needed commodities.

Great Future for Cold Storage

Turning to sales of cheese products, Mr. Banbury saw a great future for district cold storage plants and suggested that the size of cheese made by district factories might be made more adaptable for the home market. Processed cheese commands double the price that received by farmers for their product and the speaker intimated that such a field offered possibilities to the dairy industry. There are many ways in which milk can be prepared as a drink yet "pop" companies charge seven cents for a commodity far from the equal of milk in food value. "At the same price, farmers would receive $16 per hundred for their milk," he stated.

Visitors from the western part of the province introduced themselves when called upon by President Henderson. Makers from Oxford, Bruce, Middlesex, Waterloo and Perth counties were in attendance, it was shown.

500 Men Back From Air Wars

Ottawa, Dec. 5 —(CP)— A group of 500 airmen, back from the air wars of Europe and Asia, arrived here today amid reports they might be the last group to pass through the repatriation depot at nearby Rockcliffe Air Station.

The reports said that the depot would be transferred to Lachine, Que., and the repatriation depot here would devote full time as a release depot. Already a section of the repatriation depot has been installed at Lachine. There was no official comment.

A Canadian Legion greeting service has informed Mayor Stanley Lewis that removal of the depot to Lachine would mean returning airmen could no longer be greeted at the nation's capital.

5 Conscientious Objectors' Appeal Heard

Chatham, Dec. 5 —(CP)— Sentences of one year each, given five conscientious objectors in police court here Sept. 21 for leaving a work camp at Wallaceburg without permission, were reduced to three months each in an appeal heard yesterday by Judge M. A. Miller of Sarnia.

The five are Vernon R. Duncombe of Toronto, John E. Lambert of Mimico, Ont., Edwin C. Roach of Belleville, Ont., Donald McFadden of Blairhampton, Ont., and Kenneth C. Avery of St. Thomas, Ont.

U.S. Expects Italy To Develop Govt. Without Influence

Washington, Dec. 5. (AP)— The United States has informed both Britain and Italy that it expects the Italian people to develop their government "without influence from outside".

The State Department's unusual disclosure of policy in such a case today apparently placed the United States in an opposite position from that taken by great Britain which has officially opposed the inclusion of Count Sforza in an Italian administration.

"This government has not in any way intimated to the Italian government that there would be any opposition on its part to Count Sforza", the State Department reported.

The brief statement ended with a declaration that the policy of having the people work out their own governmental problems would apply to an "even more pronounced degree" in the liberated territories of the United Nations.

The State Department issued its statement in response to inquiries from correspondents on the position in the Italian Cabinet crisis.

TELLS OF GREAT BENEFITS FROM USING SYNTONA MEDICINE

Rid of Stomach Disorders, Dizziness and Rheumatic Pain. Nerves are Relaxed, Sleeps Well, "Dont' Know What a Headache is Now," She Says.

MRS. FANNY LAKE

The great popularity of Syntona is by no means accidental. It has been won by the test of time. It is due entirely to the experiences of men and women who have taken it. They have recommended it to their friends and neighbors. Many hundreds have given public statments telling how it has helped them. And, so, the fame of Syntona has spread from home to home. For instance, here is the recent report of Mrs. Fanny Lake, 160 Wilson Ave., London, Ont., who said:

"I had suffered for many years with stomach troubles and rheumatic pain. I was troubled all the time with gas and sour acid risings after my meals. I often had dizzy spells and my nerves were all on edge. My sleep was poor, so I felt tired and listless in the mornings. The rheumatic pains were all through my limbs and joints. They became stiff and sore. I was seldom free of a nagging pain in my back and many days I felt so miserable. I had no ambition to do my work.

"I tried almost everything I heard of, but there just wasn't anything that seemed to do me any good, so when a friend advised me to try Syntona, I decided to get some. It wasn't long before I noticed an improvement. My food began to digest better without all the sourness and gas and as I continued taking Syntona this trouble cleared up. Now I can enjoy my meals once more without fear of suffering afterward. I haven't had any headache or dizzy spells lately and the pain has gone out of my joints and muscles. I am not nervous as I used to be, so I have no trouble getting to sleep at night and in the mornings I feel better than for years. I urge everyone who suffers as I did to try Syntona without delay."

Civic Elections

Municipal elections in the city on Monday were spirited and a fairly large percentage of the votes was polled. The total vote for the mayoralty which is generally the contest which brings out the largest number of voters was slightly below last year's, 3,858 as against 3,966 in 1943.

One of the most interesting coincidences of the civic elections was the emergence of two brothers leading the mayoral and aldermanic contests. Ald. Frank Follwell gained the mayoral seat by a large majority of 1,974 over Ex-Mayor Tice, while his brother, E. E. Follwell, running as aldermanic candidate for the first time, led the poll. Incidentally it can be noted that the younger brother took the place the elder had at the head of the aldermanic candidates one year ago. Another interesting fact is the return to the council body of former Mayor Glencoe Thompson who won fifth place. Alderman Robert Pringle fell short of election being in fifteenth place, one step too low to be elected to council. Next year's council will be as it was in 1944 but for the absence of Mayor Rollins who will be replaced by Mayor-elect Follwell, as chief magistrate, the election of Alderman-elect E. E. Follwell, the return of Ex-Mayor Thompson as alderman and the absence of Alderman Pringle.

In the contest for the utilities commissionship there was an exciting race between Ex-Mayor M. P. Duff and Ex-Mayor George A. Reid, both of whom have long served on the commission. Mr. Duff won by 333 majority.

More than usual interest was manifested in the by-laws. In the by-law relating to the term of aldermen, the voters by 355 majority decided to change to the two-year term with the election of half the aldermen each year. There was an unusually large vote on this, 3,617 votes cast with 1984 favoring the change and 1633 against the proposal. On this question therefore both attitudes, that of approval and that of opposition, were expressed by large votes. The carrying of this by-law means that half of 1946 council was elected since the first seven successful candidates, Follwell, Clarke, McDougall, Woodley, Thompson, Armstrong and Trudeau are named for 1945 and 1946. In December 1945 only seven candidates are to be elected for 1946, but they will also be elected for 1947. This step brings the council into line with the Public Utilities Commission and the Board of Education which both elect half the membership yearly for two years. Successful candidates for one year are Messrs. Butler, Harvey, Clapp, Chamberlain, Allin, Hyde and Wilbur.

The by-law in respect to granting authority to the council to borrow fifty thousand dollars for purchase of right of way and improvement of the proposed Riverside Drive brought out 1,440 property-owners, these alone being entitled to vote on a money bylaw. The result was 890 voted in favor and 550 against the measure.

Altogether the citizens voted in quite large numbers and threw plenty of interest and good-natured rivalry into the contests. While Belleville could stand improvement in the number voting this city is ahead of many municipalities where balloting goes down to as low as 25 and 30 per cent of the electorate whereas here it is estimated that something over 50 per cent of the available vote went to the polls.

Welcome Cheese Makers

Hastings County in general and the city of Belleville in particular are playing hosts today and tomorrow to members of the Central Ontario Cheese Makers' Association and high-ranking cheese and dairy men from provincial and federal governments. Representatives of Central Ontario's ranking industry, one that was nurtured in its toddling infancy to lusty maturity in Hastings County, these men will discuss important matters pertaining to the manufacture and marketing of cheese past and present and future during their two-day convention. The setting is appropriate. It is fitting that cheese men should meet and discuss their problems in a county that for years has been a leading producer of this important food commodity. It was here that the now famous British Empire Dairy Show and Cheese Exhibition, one that attracted cheese entries from all parts of the world in peace time, was born. It has been held here ever since.

It is regrettable that circumstances prevent the staging of the exhibition this year. But to men of the calibre of Central Ontario cheese men, or those from any other part as far as that is concerned, this will not prove a deterrent to future effort. They possess a heritage that was gained by sacrifice, hard work and pride of achievement by toiling forebears. They can hold high their heads by what they have achieved in the carrying on of a tradition handed down to them through the years.

They have done and are doing a magnificent job, especially in these dark war days, when food is an all-important commodity. Britain will long remember what Canadian cheese makers have done for her. And Canada, too, will not forget.

The city therefore extends a hearty welcome to these men whose foresight, initiative, hard work and loyalty, have resulted in a war record not easily emulated.

Birds Get Hungry

Summer and autumn pass, many birds fly southward but some remain the year round. These latter deserve some attention especially at a time of snowfall when every sight of the ground is buried and sources of food supply for most of the winter birds are hidden and the food probably lost.

For instance the sparrow which stays through snow and rain may not be highly regarded for his song in the summer time but after the singing birds have gone in late summer and early autumn the little gamey creature remains about man's habitation and is one of the moving spots on the winter landscape. That bird can stand some food when the ground is covered.

In Belleville there must be considerable waste, the crumb of bread and little bits of food which the sparrow needs to satisfy his hunger against rigors of winter. This proud little perennial dweller of cities and towns does not cost man much in food in summer but in winter he needs it and when he gets it he makes the most of it, fights off the cold and lives to be a familiar sight wherever man is.

There are other birds of winter with which city dwellers are less familiar but these are quite often visitors when heavy snows and lack of food drive them from the north. They may pay a call and a little waste food would serve them well.

There is enough food unused, little bit or crumb which is often thrown away or put in the garbage and this might be kept for man's feathered friends and put out for the birds when the cold and the snow comes.

Boys Spurn Kids' Books

(Chicago Daily News)

"Tom Swift" and "The Rover Boys" are gathering dust on the school library shelves. Today's eight-year-olds are taking home books on airplanes, and on countries where big brother is stationed.

The nation's youngest readers want realism — with photographs — in their books, school librarians meeting at the Drake Hotel with the American Library Association agreed.

A typical young reader, according to Mrs. Mary Peacock Douglas, state school library adviser for North Carolina, is the puzzled little boy who couldn't figure out how the last navy plane landed on a carrier without knocking all the others off the ship.

Instead of hunting up the information for the boy, the librarian gave him copies of various magazines with pictures of carriers, films showing airplanes landing on carriers and aviation books. He found his own answer.

That is the way the school libraries are carrying out their purpose "as part of a broad educational program designed to develop social intellectual moral and physical growth among boys and girls," Mrs. Douglas pointed out. She is chairman of a committee that is drawing up standards for adequate school library service.

MONKEY SEES; MONKEY DOES

Next, at some singer's performance she'll swoon.
Ever the feminine impulse is strong;
Early it starts and continues life long.
Into her mother's cosmetics she dips.
Ellen Elizabeth's painting her lips!

Just four years old, and now slyly she goes
Up to the bedroom and powders her nose!
If undetected, and nobody trails,
Just like her mother, she'll varnish her nails.
Give her five minutes, with carmine she drips.
Ellen Elizabeth's painting her lips!

Vanity, vanity! Passion superb!
Yearning in woman no preaching can curb.
Oh to be lovely! makes woman a slave;
Starts in the cradle and runs to the grave.
Now if away from our presence she slips,
Ellen Elizabeth's painting her lips!

20 YEARS AGO

December 5th., 1924.

The large house which is well known as the old Donnelly property, situated at the corner of Moira Street West and Sidney Street, was discovered to be on fire at an early hour this morning and the top storey and contents were destroyed. The house was occupied by Frederick Plummer and family who came here from Montreal and occupied the house for about two months. The members of the family were given shelter by Mr. Samuel Sinfield, a neighbor.

His Excellency Baron Byng of Vimy, Governor General of Canada, visited Belleville this afternoon. His special train arrived at the lower station at 2 o'clock and he was welcomed to the city by Mayor W. C. Mikel, city aldermen and county councillors, now in session here. Belleville High School cadets with their bugle band formed the guard of honor. After greetings had been exchanged the members of the party were driven to the O.S.D. where they were received by the superintendent, Dr. Coughlin. Returning to the Armouries, Mayor Mikel read a short address of welcome. His Excellency then presented the medals to the students in the city and county who headed the honor lists at the entrance examinations last summer. Following this a reception was held in the officers' mess and numerous citizens were presented to His Excellency.

The War Today—

Disunity One of Main Reasons For China's Unhappy Position

By DeWITT MACKENZIE
(Associated Press War Analyst)

China's 11th-hour effort to compose her grave internal differences and present a united front to Japan likely would have succeeded if it had been undertaken earlier — and it may still succeed — but the question arises whether it's too late.

For nearly two years, ever since my visit to Chungking, this column has been emphasizing that China was all but impotent and in grave danger of being knocked out. Now she has been brought to the high-water mark of her peril by the Jap conquests in the important south-central theatre, eliminating vital American air bases and giving the invaders invaluable communications from Manchuria clear through to Canton on the south coast and into Indo-China.

The difficulties through which China has arrived at this sorry pass are many, but chief among them is that the country has been divided against itself. Gen. Chiang Kai-Shek's one-party (Kuomintang) government has ruled those parts of central and southern China not overrun by the Japs. But in the north the Chinese Communists, with big armies, have been in control.

The Communists have insisted on participation in government, but Chiang thus far has declined to recognize them. It's an old and bloody feud.

This is the situation as Chiang, acting on advice of the United States, not only has used a vigorous broom on his cabinet but has reopened peace negotiations with the Communists.

One of the most promising developments appears to be the appointment of his brother-in-law, Dr. T. V. Soong, to the acting premiership, thereby enabling the Generalissimo to get rid of some burdens and concentrate on the grave military crisis. The westernized Soong not only is one of China's outstanding statesmen but is widely regarded as a liberal, and so the person most likely to achieve a settlement with the Communists.

Another hopeful sign is that Gen. Chou En-Lai, the famous Communist leader, is in Chungking and is said to be negotiating with the government.

CLIPPING THE HAIR TO SAVE IT

Saireygamps, you know, those peripatetic witches who find it a long time between scandals, still insist, when they get by your guard, that you will not only save the hair but the vitality of the youth or the young woman if you clip the hair short in any severe or prolonged illness.

It is true enough the hair of child or adult may fall out after any such severe fever as typhoid, but a few months after recovery the individual has as much and as fine or healthy hair as ever. So far as that is concerned it matters not at all whether the hair has been clipped or not. It is plumb foolish to clip the hair of man, woman or child to conserve strength or vitality or to save the hair.

It is not even good sense to clip a heavy growth of hair with the notion that the individual will suffer less from the heat. The hair normally helps the natural dissipation or radiation of heat from the body. A bald-headed man is rather less able to endure great heat (aside from the question of exposure to sunlight)) than is one with a good head of hair.

So far as the health of the hair and the health of the body are concerned, there is just one good reason for clipping the hair, in some circumstances, and that is to facilitate delousing or keeping the scalp free from lice. In the private home even this seldom justifies clipping a girl's hair, or infection with lice or their nits can always be cleaned up and controlled by proper treatment without sacrificing the hair.

Lice in the hair may be destroyed by saturating the hair with equal parts of kerosene and vinegar and wearing a bathing cap or towel around the saturated hair for about three hours. Of course kerosene is inflammable, and great care must be taken to protect the patient against the danger of fire or flame —match flame or the flame of a gas burner. Remove the kerosene and vinegar with a soap and water shampoo. Repeat all of this daily until no lice or nits can be found. Nits are the eggs attached to hair shafts close to the scalp. They are best removed by drawing strands of hair through a soft cloth wet each time with hot vinegar.

Well, now, we seem to have loused up this perfectly proper discussion of clipping the hair. But having implied that head lice may visit our best families I had to tell what to do about it, in self-defence.

QUESTIONS & ANSWERS

Supression of Sweat

Daughter uses (preparation that deodorizes and suppresses sweat) which stops underarm sweating entirely. Since she doesn't sweat much from other surfaces I wonder if this is injurious to her health.

(Mrs. V. H. C.)

Answer—It is harmless.

Indigestion

I inclose a dime and stamped preaddressed envelope for your booklet "So You Have Indigestion?"—this time I wrap the dime in paper. Once before I sent for this booklet but never received it. I wonder why you insist on a loose dime. (H.R.)

Answer—I don't. It is all right to wrap the coin in a piece of paper or put it in a small envelope. It is not right to use mucilage, gum, glue, adhesive goo, staples, tape, cloth, rivets, needle and thread, pins and similar annoyances for the purpose. No one would offer a post office clerk a coin in that condition.

Hi Skinny!

I am 22, weigh only 93 pounds and can't seem to put on any weight, and I have acne. Doctor looked at my teeth, found I have no wisdom teeth, said if the dentist could find the buried wisdom teeth and take them out I'd gain weight and get rid of my acne.

(Miss T. E. J.)

Answer—Sounds far-fetched. But first get the opinion and advice of the dentist or rather the advice the doctor and dentist offer after they have consulted together. Meanwhile send stamped envelope bearing your address and ask for pamphlet "How to Gain Weight." Inclose ten cents if you would like also a pamphlet on "Acne—Blackheads and Pimples."

NUGGETS OF KNOWLEDGE

Our word "polemics" comes from Greek "polemos," meaning war. Polemics is the art of disputation and controversy—waging war with words.

Ancient writers seldom gave credit to their sources. Quoting other writers directly and indicating the fact that the material was from another writer were virtually unknown to the ancients. The venerable Bede (673-735 A.D.), English churchman and scholar, was perhaps the first writer to exercise constant care to give due credit to his sources.

It is estimated that during the 300 years from 1500 to 1800 some thirty million persons were deported from Africa and sold into slavery.

"Mob" is a good example of a word that originated as slang and ultimately became sound English. It is derived from Latin "mobile vulgus," meaning excited crowd. During the 16th and the early part of the 17th centuries the phrase was gradually shortened to "mobile," which was a scornful term for the rabble, the masses, a tumultuous crowd bent on lawlessness, the disorderly and riotous part of the population, or the lowest order of common people.

In the latter part of the 17th and the early part of the 18th centuries the term was further shortened to "mob." At that time it was vigorously and violently attacked by purists as slang that had no proper place in respectable writing and speech. Richard Steele wrote in his "Tatler": "I have done my utmost for some years past to stop the progress of 'mob' and 'banter,' but have been plainly borne down by numbers, and betrayed by those who promised to assist me."

"Mob psychology" refers to the mental processes of a mob. It is the unthinking infection of a crowd with an idea advanced by a leader. Persons will do things collectively, especially in a large and disorderly gathering, that they would never think of doing individually. "Mass psychology" is used in a closely related sense. Both terms are of comparatively recent origin.

Science of Weather Forecasting Explained to Rotary Club

The Weather Man, that much maligned and much-caricatured gentleman, cartooned in newspapers and magazines as a cross between a Frankenstein and a robot surrounded with weird mechanical contrivances, is not what he is pictured as being.

In fact, the Rotary Club here got a first hand picture of the gentleman who calls the balls and strikes in the atmospheric game of baseball at its weekly luncheon on Monday. In this case he was a handsome, well-groomed, well-informed young man who imparted a lot of information on a subject that is usually the topic of early morning conversations—the weather.

Much Data Needed.

He told a clear informative story of how the weather man works. How he makes his forecasts and of the huge amount of data to be collected before the simple "Cloudy with scattered showers" is arrived at.

In fact he made a forecast for today (Tuesday). And by the time this story is read, Rotarians will know just how accurate this particular weather man is. This morning there was to have been snow starting around 8.30. This would change later to a slight drizzle and rain. Water will run down the streets.

Prior to the war, Mr. Miller said, there were approximately one or two dozen forecasters in Canada. Today there are between 300 and 350 specially trained men.

At 8.30 each morning the weather is carefully studied at various points along the length and breadth of North America. Trappers in the woods, keepers of lonely lighthouses, men at the big centres in New York, Boston and Chicago file reports of weather conditions in their immediate vicinity. Two hours later, every "weather-man" on the continent knows what the weather is like at any point in Canada and the U.S.A.

Accurate to 12 Hours.

In the air force pilots must know the height of cloud base, visibility, direction and speed of winds. This information is accurate only up to twelve hours.

In the days before Benjamin Franklin traced the path of a storm between Philadelphia and New York, people were of the opinion that the weather like trees, and buildings was purely local. Each community had its sunshine, rain and thunderstorms.

Science has since advanced to the point where weather can safely be prognosticated for tremendous distances. Two Norwegian brothers perfected the Air Mass and Frontal Analysis Theory which has done much to revolutionize weather report correctiveness.

Movement of air masses was described by Mr. Miller who also pointed out with the aid of graphs the motion of the mass that brought last Thursday's snowstorm. He explained his forecast for today by the same method.

Balloons Used

Small balloons are released from widely-separated centres in an effort to obtain valuable information. These balloons are radio equipped and ascend well into the stratosphere. They release information during their journey to the clouds. Two of these balloons are released daily.

Weather forecasts will play a big part in the post-war era, Mr. Miller stated. Industry will benefit specially ice manufacturers and carbonated beverage makers.

During the early days of the war, Germany had a distinct advantage over Britain inasmuch as she had access to all weather reports on the continent. She even established bases in Greenland for this purpose. British pilots brought back their own information.

The speaker was introduced by Rotarian Enos David and thanked by Rotarian O. H. Scott. Past-President John Deacon was in the chair in the absence of President Pinkston. The sum of $11.50 was collected from those who failed to attend church Sunday. The money will be given to the Salvation Army.

Trenton—(Special)—Mayor H. R. Cory is to be Trenton's Chief Magistrate for the eleventh term following a sweeping election which gave him a double majority over his opponent, ex-councillor R. J. The Day in Parliament

(By The Canadian Press)

Today:

The Commons and Senate will continue debate on the government's confidence motion.

Yesterday:

The House heard Flt.-Lt. James Sinclair (L-Vancouver North) say he could not agree that sending 16,000 men overseas would solve the army problems, suggest an R.C.A.F. infantry be formed and say he would support the Progressive Conservative amendment to the government's vote of confidence motion; J. W. Noseworthy (C.C.F.-York South) indicate the nine C.C.F. members would vote against the government on the main motion of confidence; several other Opposition speakers criticize the government's proposals as inadequate to provide a steady flow of reinforcements for the army overseas.

In the Senate, Senator J. J. Beach (L-Ontario) proposed that the Senate undertake the responsibility of conducting inquiries such as now are made by royal commissions and plan an investigation of the Defence Department after the war.

Dismissed Motion Against Dorseys Denied by Court

Los Angeles, Dec. 4 (AP)—A prosecution motion for a dismissal of the assault charges against the Tommy Dorseys and their friend, Allen Smiley, was denied yesterday.

Deputy District Attorney Edwin Myers told the court that he was moving for dismissal on the grounds that there was not proper evidence to proceed with the trial.

It has been anticipated that the defence would ask for the dismissal. Myers' move came after a short recess which was preceded by a defence surprise.

Antonio Icaza, Panamanian sailor who has testified he saw the fight between bandleader Dorsey and Jon Hall, was suddenly asked by the defence:

"Have you ever been convicted of a felony?"

"You have no right to interfere in my personal affairs," said Icaza.

He was instructed to answer the question. Shouting even louder, the Panamanian said, "no!"

"Have you ever served a term in prison?"

Icaza, again shouted "no!"

Myers interrupted, asking for an immediate recess after which Myers made his motion.

With two answers—"I was confused" and "I don't remember"—Icaza resisted defence efforts all day long to prove he wasn't in Dorsey's apartment when the famous combat occurred last Aug. 5.

Memory Good on One Point.

However, a few minutes earlier in the trial of Dorsey, his wife Pat Dane, and their friend, Allen Smiley, on assault charges, Icaza's memory enabled him to testify that he saw Mrs. Dorsey slash Hall across the nose with a knife. He had said he witnessed the encounter from the living room.

Inn cross-examination by Isaac Pacht, Icaza admitted he filed a $40,000 damage action against Dorsey, but contended this amount was his lawyer's idea. All he wanted, he said, was a new suit and three months' doctor bills for alleged injuries, which he has not yet explained in testimony.

Icaza said he saw Dorsey trying to throw Hall over the balcony and heard Mrs. Dorsey calling for Smiley, who lives in the adjoining apartment, to come in to stop the fight.

"Dorsey and Hall had moved from the balcony through the dining room into the living room when Smiley got there," Icaza said. "Smiley started to clean up on Hall, Smiley was behind Hall."

"What was Dorsey doing?" asked Myers.

"He let loose of Hall and had a broken bottle in his hand," said Icaza.

At this point Icaza demonstrated on prosecutor Myers the manner in which Hall had grabbed Dorsey, first round the body and then around the neck, in a headlock.

WEDDINGS

MERAW—McEVOY

Madoc Sacred Heart Church was the scene of a quiet but lovely wedding on Saturday, December 2, when Geraldine Anne, daughter of Mrs. Owen McEvoy and the late Mr. McEvoy, of Madoc, became the bride of Edward Meraw, son of Mr. and Mrs. Fred Meraw, also of Madoc. Rev. F. D. Hyland solemnized the marriage ceremony. Winter White 'mums on the altar formed an impressive floral background.

Wedding music was played by Mrs. F. Stockloser. Guest soloists were Mrs. Meraw and Mr. John Lahey, uncle of the groom.

The bride, who was given in marriage by her brother, Cpl. Larry McEvoy, was wearing a charming street length poudre blue crepe dress, a headdress of matching blue ostrich plumes dusted with shoulder length veiling and accessories in black. Her corsage was of white orchids.

Attending the bride was her sister, Mrs. E. M. MacDonald, of Belleville, who wore a crepe gown in fuchsia hue, a similar headdress to that of the bride only in fuchsia shade. Her accessories were black and her corsage was of Queen Elizabeth roses.

Mr. Felix O'Riordan Madoc, acted as groomsman, and Mr. Gerard McEvoy, St. Catharines, as usher.

For the reception at the bride's home after the ceremony, the mother of the bride received the guests attired in a black sequin trimmed gown with black accessories and corsage of Rapture roses. She was assisted by the groom's mother wearing a printed silk ensemble, accessories in black and corsage of Talisman roses.

For the wedding trip to Buffalo, the bride donned an olive green wool suit, nigger brown accessories and muskrat coat.

On their return, Mr. and Mrs. Meraw will take up residence in Madoc.

HAW—PURDY

In Knox Presbyterian Church, Oshawa, Gwendolyn Maybelle Purdy, only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Francis S. Purdy, R.R. No. 4, Belleville, became the bride of Ronald Alan Haw, son of Mr. and Mrs. Alan E. Haw, also of Belleville. The ceremony was performed by Rev. William McRoberts.

The bride was charmingly attired in a poudre blue wool dress with black accessories and wore a corsage of pink carnations.

Mrs. Dorothy Spenceley was bridesmaid and LAC. Harry J. Hobbs was best man.

The reception was held at the home of Mr. and Mrs. J. Pigden, 55 William Street, Oshawa.

SLATTERY—BERTRAND

Marmora.—On Saturday, December 2, at nine o'clock in the morning at Sacred Heart Church, Marmora, the marriage was solemnized of Madeline Bertrand, Reg.N., daughter of Mr. and Mrs. S. Bertrand, Marmora, to James L. Slattery, B.A., of Seaforth, Ont., son of Mrs. Slattery and the late Mr. James F. Slattery. The Nuptial Mass was celebrated by the Rev. Father H. J. Farrell.

Floral standards of yellow and white 'mums decorated the altar for the occasion. Miss Rita Deacon presided at the console of the organ, and the children's choir sang softly throughout the ceremony and at the signing of the register.

Given in marriage by her father, the bride was attired in a particularly striking afternoon ensemble of Queen's blue crepe, matching blue feather hat misted with a shoulder length veil and black accessories. Her corsage was of red roses.

Mrs. H. A. McNally, of Deloro, sister of the bride, as matron of honor, wore an attractive beige crepe street length dress, black Parisian turban and accessories and corsage of pink roses.

Mr. H. A. McNally, Deloro, was groomsman, and the usher was Mr. James L. Shannon.

A wedding breakfast was served at the home of the bride's parents following the ceremony. The mother of the bride chose a black crepe gown complemented with a corsage of Talisman roses.

GOOD MANNERS

By MRS. CORNELIUS BEECKMAN

He Should Have Written For You Too

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

To settle a controversy between my husband and me, will you please tell me which of us is correct in the following circumstances? We have been married three years. I had never been married before, but he was a widower when I married him, and he is much older than I am. Recently one of his very intimate friends died, and he wrote the widower of this friend a letter of condolence. I have met these friends of his.

In this letter, a copy of which he showed to me after he had mailed it, he omitted any mention of my joining him in his expression of sorrow, but did refer to the fact that he understood his friend's sorrow because he had been through a similar experience. Now, Mrs. Beeckman, his writing this kind of letter has hurt my feelings very much, but my husband says it is the proper way to write this kind of letter. I shall be very grateful for your opinion.

N. S.

I should think your feelings would be hurt, dear lady, at this lack of your husband's courtesy to you. In his letter of condolence it was certainly ungallant, to say the least, and bad taste and inappropriate since he had re-married, to make such a point of his sorrow "in a similar experience"; and it was discourteous to you and inconsiderate of you, and downright rude of him, not to include you in his expression of sympathy. For him to say that "it is the proper way to write such a letter" is poppy-cock, and shows that his manners need an overhauling.

Enclose Fee in an Envelope

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

Should the minister's fee (whether it is a check or a new bill), to be handed to him by either the bridegroom or the best man, be enclosed in an envelope?

Bob

Yes.

When to Present that Engagement Gift

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

My mother and father, my sister and I are going to the home of my brother's fiancee for Sunday dinner soon. Since I know that my brother and his fiancee are going to announce their engagement at this dinner and since she has told me what she is going to give my brother as an engagement present, do you think that I should take an engagement present to her house for her when we go to this dinner? I think it would be better for me to send or give her an engagement present after she receives her engagement ring. Do you agree?

Whenever I do give her the engagement present, should I give her a gift for herself, or something for her future home, since they are to be married in a few months?

S. A.

I thing the best plan would be for you to give her an engagement gift as soon as you wish after the engagement has been announced, that is, rather than at the engagement announcement dinner.

An engagement gift is customarily something personnel for the engaged girl, differing from the wedding present which will be something for the new home.

Write "Christmas" . . . Not Xmas

The word is "Christmas." It's a beautiful word. Honor its beauty and sacred significance by writing it in full. Don't write Xmas.

BEAUTY

By HELEN JAMESON

As She Is Painted

You may see, here and there, as you observe the female of the species, glaring examples of make-up that are nothing less than lithographic. It is not strange that some women believe that addition is better than subtraction in the matter of make-up. But the majority of the sisters are improving in technique now that the rule is "Be subtle and be slick."

Cosmetic batik never made any woman attractive, but cosmetic art has transformed many thousands, making their countenances a bit more vivid, restoring the freshness of their younger days. What skin-and-lip tinting does for morale is beyond telling. The before-breakfast face is brightened. The reflection in the looking-glass is more satisfactory after a session with the make-up props.

What we're trying to do is to overnature nature, using the complexion blessings which we inherited, but putting accent on them. To achieve delicate results, one must have the precisely right items — powder, rouge, lipstick — and apply them with discretion and the seeing eye. Good taste is a factor in making a new face for oneself. Good taste will never permit one to wear vivid blobs of red on the cheeks or a lipstick smear of heavy layers. That sort of decorating has gone with the cosmetic winds.

One reason why excessive make-up should be avoided is that it takes attention away from the eyes which, always, should be the most interesting, predominating feature. Sparkling eyes have it, and no mistake. They speak a language that is fascinating. Miss Smarty knows exactly what to do with them.

You may experience a little confusion, even dismay, when you line up with the push at the cosmetic counter to purchase your complexion ingredients. If possible, find a powder a shade darker than your skin; when putting it on, don't fill the pad and smack it on your impertinent nose. Start on the neck, work upward; powder the nose last, when the load on the pad is light. Use a light touch. Pressing the pad into the flesh will cause pores to become enlarged and, if your pad won't pass a cleanliness test, you may find yourself acting as hostess to a flock of blackheads.

We hear that the use of rouge is less in favor than in former years, but sales don't prove it. The truth is that it is being applied more skillfully. Start your blush operations on the cheek bone about an inch under the eye, sweep upward to a point below the temple, down to the center of the cheek, back to starting point, then blend. This forms a sort of triangle. A touch of rouge on the eyelids is a pretty cosmetic flourish.

The Marry Go Round

Don't Spoil Other Women's Husbands

"It takes the average woman five or ten years to get her husband going along smoothly on the double-track of marriage—and another woman five or ten minutes to derail him", says Cynical Sybil.

"You know what I mean, The Glamour-gals and It-gals and Oomph-gals aren't always the home wreckers. Any innocent woman can feed your husband a line of flattery which will get him off the beam for weeks, if she chances to touch on his secret ambition. For every man has a weak spot—an Achillean heel—somewhere in his soul or his vanity.

"Every man has a secret conviction that he could have made a dazzling success at something bigger or better or pleasanter than the thing he happens to be doing. If he's a cracker jack salesman, with a smooth line of talk, he probably cherishes the idea that he should have been an ace newspaper reporter or a radio commentator.

"Or if he's a radio announcer with a mellifluous voice, he may have a surreptitious yearning to write mystery stories or a play or a secret suspicion that he should have cultivated that voice and been an opera singer or a popular crooner. Almost every man thinks he could have been a singer.

"If he's a doctor or a college professor or a lawyer, he may have a column. And if he's a popular author or a screen actor, he probably thinks that he would have been a wizard as a rancher or a chicken-farmer, or a horse-fancier.

"Every man thinks that his 'life would make a book'—if only he had the chance to change the plot and re-write the scenario! You can never be sure what hidden longing or illusion a man cherishes.

"So you see, it's easy for any woman to spoil your perfectly good husband. All she has to do, is to discover his favorite "suppressed desire", get him off in a corner and carelessly encourage him to follow the light of his hidden genius!

"Many a patient wife has had to listen for weeks to a man's bellowing in the bath-room, because some other women told him he could SING!

"But that's the way it happens. With no thought except to make conversation, some girl will spend half an hour pepping up a man's secret vanity—and then his wife will have to spend six weeks getting him down to earth again! It's safer to stick to bachelors—if you can find one, these days!

"Don't flatter other women's husbands!"

Yuletide Fete Held by Girls At St. Michael's

The Knights of Columbus Hall all decked out in gay Yuletide finery in shades of red, green, and white, was the scene of a delightful occasion on Monday night when the officers of the St. Michael's Girls' Social Club entertained the members at a social evening. Guests of honor for the event were Monsignor J. F. Nicholson and Major the Rev. J. G. McCabe, of Picton. Bridge, bingo and "social chat" were enjoyed. Delicious refreshments were served at eleven o'clock. Presiding over the tea table were Teresa Donoghue and Eileen Hanson. The table was beautifully arranged, spread with a white cloth, centred with a silver bowl of poinsettias and flanked with tall red tapers in silver candelabra. Two raffles were conducted with lucky prizes being won by Margaret Ethier and Anne Lafferty. The draws were made by Monsignor Nicholson. Miss Alice Doyle, president of the club, spoke briefly to everyone present, and made mention of the hope chest which the club is to purchase and which the members will fill with various articles. Plans are under way in regards to raffling it at the St. Michael's Easter Festival. The evening was brought to a most appropriate conclusion with a few words from Monsignor Nicholson. He expressed his pleasure at being present, and urged that each and everyone of the club members strive to make this new society a real success.

Emmanuel Church Young Women's Guild Holds Tea and Bazaar

The Emmanuel Church Sunday School room was the scene of a most successful tea and bazaar on Thursday afternoon, November 30, under the auspices of the Ladies' Aid and the Young Women's Guild.

The booths were decorated in keeping with the Yuletide season.

The guests were received by Mrs. T. S. Russell and Mrs. F. Camken, the president.

The tea table was beautifully arranged, spread with an ivory lace cloth centred with a crystal vase of russet and yellow 'mums and flanked with tall turquoise tapers in silver candelabra.

Pouring tea was Mrs. F. H. Cymer. Acting as serviteurs were Mrs. W. Dennis and Mrs. W. Wright. The tea table was replenished by Mrs. E. Bell, Mrs. R. H. Ketcheson, Mrs. W. J. Andrews and Mrs. J. Fuller.

In charge of the Homecooking table was Mrs. J. Gannon and convening the booths of fancy work, toys and plants were Mrs. A. W. Carmichael, Mrs. A. Gulliver and Mrs. J. Rigby. The apron booth, was in charge of Mrs F. Camken.

Treasurer for the afternoon was Mrs. F. Weese, who also presided over the Sawdust Tub.

Despite the inclement weather the proceeds realized were gratifying.

Bank President Voices Need For Courageous, Realistic Thinking In War-to-Peace Transition

George W. Spinney Sees Canada With Great Post-War Advantages But Warns Against View That Economic Millennium Can Materialize Through Order-in-Council

B. C. Gardner, General Manager, Reviews Bank Act Revision — Announces Post-War Rehabilitation Program For Bank's Personnel — Pays High Tribute To Staff

Stressing the magnitude of the economic and social problems facing Canada in the post-war era, George W. Spinney, C.M.G., president of the Bank of Montreal, yesterday voiced the need for a full appreciation of Canada's national advantages and for courageous, realistic thinking in the transitional period from war to peace. Mr. Spinney was speaking before shareholders of the bank at their 127th annual meeting.

"I take second place to no man in my earnest desire that our hopes and expectations shall be achieved," Mr. Spinney declared. "But I sometimes wonder whether all the brave plans for the future are accompanied by a full realisation of what has to be accomplished if these plans are to materialise. Indeed, it would seem that many people are assuming today that a post-war economic millennium, in which everybody will be more secure, richer and presumably happier, can materialise by Order-in-Council.

"But to take an honestly realistic look at the post-war prospect is to recognise that the reconversion of industry to civilian production, the re-employment in peacetime pursuits of those now in the Armed Forces and in war work and the restoration of our external trade on a satisfactory basis will involve problems of tremendous magnitude. And after giving full value to everything that governmental agencies can usefully do to aid the transition from war to peace, there will remain a vast area of effort and opportunity that will challenge to the utmost our courage, ingenuity, and powers of co-operation.

"If we let government do everything, we are going along the road Germany followed to totalitarianism. This is what we are fighting abroad. Let us fight also against its beginnings at home."

The challenge, said Mr. Spinney, was the greater because a mere return to pre-war conditions obviously would not be good enough.

"There are today something like 1,300,000 more Canadians at work or in the Armed Forces than at the start of the war," he observed. "We have an export trade that is running at the rate of over $3,000,000,000 annually, just about three times the pre-war rate; but it is probable that not more than 25% of our present exports represents ordinary peacetime business. These facts in themselves indicate clearly that reconversion of our economy will not be effortless or easy."

Security Through Risk

Declaring himself no pessimist in regard to this country's post-war possibilities and enumerating some of the great advantages with which Canada would start out into the new era after the war, Mr. Spinney said that, to his mind, a survey of the conditions under which Canadians would seek their post-war economic objectives led to one inescapable conclusion.

"This," he declared, "is that real and enduring economic security can only be achieved through risk. I do not know whether this is a law of economics, but I am convinced that it is a law of life. This may seem at first sight to be a curious doctrine to be put forward by a banker, since banks, above all other institutions, are popularly believed to be rather more than ordinarily conservative in outlook and to regard anything 'risky' with very scant favour. It would be a fair question, therefore, to ask what I conceive the function of the banks to be against the background that I have outlined.

"My answer would be that no bank will be able to fulfil its post-war functions adequately unless it enters into that period with the courage and confidence that can only come from inherent strength resulting from sound policies consistently applied throughout the years.

"The intention of the Bank of Montreal is to carry into the post-war years those same attributes of sound and constructive banking that have characterised our operations in the past. While we are proud of our long traditions this does not mean that we have been or will be tradition-bound. We shall ever be alert to seek new ways of extending and improving our service to the community and of playing a courageous and progressive part in the years that lie ahead."

Contingent Reserves

The subject of inner or contingent reserves was discussed at length by Mr. Spinney during the course of his address. Declaring that discussions of the matter during the recent decennial revision of the Bank Act at Ottawa had revealed many basic misconceptions, he said the test of experience in all countries had proven that the practice of adding to such reserves when it was possible to do so, in order to "cushion" less favourable periods when loans might unexpectedly become bad and the value of assets might shrink, was the only safe policy to protect the interests of depositors.

Pointing out that the statutes under which the banks operated made it obligatory on them to make provision for estimated and unforeseen losses, Mr. Spinney declared: "The history of Canadian banking indicates clearly that many of the banking difficulties of earlier days would have been avoided if proper provision had been made for unforeseen losses. This applies not only to bank failures but to bank mergers, which in many cases would have been unnecessary if adequate reserves had been set up."

General Manager's Address

Highlights of a rehabilitation plan for Bank of Montreal personnel now in the armed forces were a feature of the address by B. C. Gardner, general manager of the institution. Mr. Gardner also discussed at length the recent decennial revision of the Bank Act.

The question of absorbing the bank's men now in the services had, he said, been the subject of a great deal of study and the bank's plans had been prepared well in advance.

"It seemed to us," he continued, "that many of them would be interested in knowing what our policy is. With this in mind we prepared an outline of the present arrangements and the procedure we expect to follow and sent it, with a covering letter, to our men serving with the forces. Briefly, it is our intention to place these officers on the salary, and, within a reasonable time, in the position, which they would normally have expected to attain had they been in the continuous service of the bank. Our object is to see that they have not lost ground through their service to their country."

Post-War Building Program

In commenting on the financial statement which had been published previously, Mr. Gardner explained that an amount of $500,000 had been written off bank premises which were now shown in the statement at a value of $12,900,000.

"The increased volume of business," he said, "has caused somewhat crowded conditions in a number of our offices. We have adhered to our decision against constructing extensions to our buildings in wartime, but in a number of branches we have rearranged the interiors in order to make better use of the space available and provide a faster and more convenient service to customers.

"Our post-war building program has of necessity been enlarged during the year. Including the completion of our Toronto building, the projects we have in mind will make a substantial contribution to employment in the building and allied trades when labour is released from war activities."

Bank Act Revision

The general manager, in dealing with the recent revision of the act under which the chartered banks operate, enumerated the more important amendments made by Parliament. The bank, he said, welcomed such of the amendments as gave it extended powers to meet the sound credit needs of its customers and would co-operate to the fullest possible extent with the new governmental agencies in making credit of a specified nature available for domestic and export purposes.

"The new interest limitations will make it difficult to handle some types of personal loans at a profit," Mr. Gardner observed, "but this will not deter us from making every effort to meet the credit requirements of worthy borrowers, whether the transactions are large or small. While the main lending function of the banks must be in the short-term field, it is our desire to make credit available to every competent person, firm or corporation requiring funds for constructive purposes.

"In following this aim we hope that within reasonable limits and subject to appropriate safeguards it will be possible for us to extend credit of a somewhat longer term, particularly in the approaching period of conversion from wartime to peacetime production. In this connection we shall place special emphasis upon the ability and integrity of the borrower.

Summing up, the general manager said: "The Act, as finally passed, gives the banks adequate scope to provide the same high type of banking service to which the Canadian people are accustomed and which, indeed, they accept as a matter of course. The banking system, like all other fields of human activity, is always capable of improvement and must change with changing times, but it is a system that has served the country well and I am confident will continue to do so in the days that lie ahead."

Tribute To Staff

In concluding his remarks, Mr. Gardner paid high tribute to the fine work and loyal co-operation of the staff, saying: "I wish to record our sincere appreciation of the continued efficient service and loyal co-operation of each member of the staff throughout another difficult year. They have coped cheerfully with an ever-increasing volume of work and have maintained a high standing of service to the public. I feel I must add a special word of commendation of our managers, accountants and other senior officers who have borne the brunt of the load in training new entrants and handling successfully a largely augmented business.

ANTI-GOVERNMENT SPEAKERS HELD CENTRE OF DEBATE

Government's Prospects of Success in Forthcoming Confidence Vote Appears Undiminished

By FRANK FLAHERTY
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Ottawa, Dec. 5. (CP)—Anti-government speakers did most of the talking as the House of Commons entered its second week of debate on overseas conscription yesterday but no signs appeared of any diminishing in the government's prospects of success on the coming vote of confidence.

The first Liberal member to announce his intention of voting against his party because the government's policy does not go far enough was heard. He was Flt. Lt. James Sinclair of Vancouver North, who has seen overseas service with the R.C.A.F.

On the other side of the question Maurice Lalonde (L—Labelle) declared he could not go along with the government because of his opposition to conscription.

Flt. Lt. Sinclair will vote for the Progressive Conservative amendment to the government's confidence motion which asks that all 68,000 home defence troops be made available for service in any theatre of war.

Mr. Lalonde will vote for the dissenting Liberal sub-amendment which expresses opposition to conscription for overseas service. He is one of several Quebec Liberals who with one Saskatchewan Liberal, Walter Tucker of Rosthern, are against the government's action in authorizing the sending of 16,000 drafted men overseas.

Will Vote Against.

From J. W. Noseworthy (C.C.F. York South) there came a strong indication the nine Co-operative Commonwealth Federation members would vote against the government on the main motion of confidence. Earlier M. J. Coldwell, C.C.F. leader proposed a sub amendment which was ruled out of order and which embodied the principle of making all draftees available for overseas service but he did not indicate how his group would vote on the main motion.

Other speakers of the day included Col. A. J. Brooks (PC—Royal), John R. MacNicol (PC—Toronto Davenport), and Norman Lockhart (PC—Lincoln). They were critical of the government's proposals as inadequate to provide a steady flow of reinforcements for the army overseas.

Ralph Maybank (L—Winnipeg South Centre) and Maj. Leslie Mutch (L—Winnipeg South) said they were ready to vote with the government; Leonard Tremblay (L—Dorchester) who said he was against conscription but did not say how he would vote and Frederic Dorion (Ind.—Charlevoix-Saguenay) also against conscription, will vote against the administration.

Flt. Lt. Sinclair, who has frequently spoken of the viewpoint of airmen since his return from overseas, suggested the formation of an R.C.A.F. infantry regiment to absorb airmen now being discharged and who are fit for army service.

Airmen Unwilling to Enlist

He said these airmen are unwilling to enlist in the army for a number of reasons under present conditions. They feel they volunteered once and should not be asked to volunteer again while trained infantry conscripts are not being used. Their pay in the army in many cases would be less than it was in the air force.

If, however, there was an R.C.A.F. regiment they could be given pay which would be satisfactory. They would be serving with their comrades and their morale would be high. Such a unit would require a minimum of training and would be a proud force.

In Africa the R.A.F. regiment undertook duties in the line as well as protection of airports. The Hermann Goering Division in the German army was associated with the German air force and was one of the enemy's best fighting formations.

Prime Minister Mackenzie King by an interjection indicated he has not changed his mind on prolonging the life of parliament if the war is not over before the time arrives when an election will be necessary under the law.

When Mr. MacNicol was speaking he expressed strong opposition to such a step and recalled Mr. King's assurances on the point.

"I will stay with you," said Mr. King.

Mr. Maybank and Mr. Mutch said they interpreted the order-in-council authorizing the sending of draftees overseas as applying to the entire home defence force. They were satisfied the troops overseas would get the reinforcements needed.

Rests on Contention.

Mr. Noseworthy said Mr. King's appeal for a vote of confidence rested on the contention that no other leader could carry on the government and that if the government were defeated there would be delay in providing reinforcements.

"In my opinion the Prime Minister's argument is a weak one on which to appeal for support," he said. "We cannot feel justified in voting, on those grounds, to support a policy of which we do not approve."

Mr. Lockhart said "the people of my constituency are not satisfied with the backtracking he (Col. J. L. Ralston) indulged in at the end of his speech." They felt indebted to Col. Ralston for the clear and concise revelations he had made on the reinforcement situation.

Mr. Lockhart referred to the speech in the House last week which Col. Ralston ended by announcing he would support the government on the vote of confidence.

"Because of their evasion the people have lost confidence in the Prime Minister and his government," said Mr. Lockhart.

Answered by King.

The evasion started in the way the session opened. The Prime Minister indicated a motion of confidence would be introduced. The motion was to be based on the voluntary system. He asked the Prime Minister to correct him if he was wrong.

"I hope my friend won't ask me to do that because he is wrong so often," said Mr. King.

"Will the Prime Minister tell me where I am wrong up to now?" said Mr. Lockhart.

"I don't make it a practice to interrupt opposition speakers and I don't intend to answer questions," said Mr. King.

Mr. Lockhart said it was strange the House should now have to vote on the issue of "reinforcements for our weary and worn out boys overseas" on what the Prime Minister described as "the eve of victory."

Mr. Lockhart said he called on Mr. King to rescind the Order-in-Council to send 16,000 men overseas and pass one which would make all N.R.M.A. personnel available for service in any theatre of war.

Western Front Short of Shells Says Daily Mail

Noel Monks, Daily Mail correspondent with the U. S. 9th Army, wrote:

"The final assault on a town had begun and American infantry on the outskirts were counter-attacked by the last German tanks in this sector.

"Heavy fire from the tanks caught the Americans as they came up an incline leading into the town. They had no tank support owing to mines.

"A call was made immediately for artillery support while the Americans dug themselves in. I was in the command post when the colonel passed on the call for artillery support. I could hear the reply coming through the phone:

" 'Too bad, but we fired our quota in the opening stages of the attack.' Without saying a word, the young colonel slumped into a chair.

" 'Fired their quota,' he said. 'No use telling them that the German tanks haven't fired their quota and my men are being cut up for the want of a few more American shells.' "

Reserve Army Will Remain 'In Being'

Ottawa, Dec. 5—(CP)—Canada's reserve army, whose 100,000 citizen members drill twice a week and usually toil at weekend schemes as a patriotic duty, will remain "in being," it was learned last night, but no other information regarding its future was obtainable.

Navy Minister Macdonald said in the Commons yesterday that he would answer today a question about the future of the reserve raised by Gordon Graydon, Progressive Conservative House Leader, Friday.

In putting his question, Mr. Graydon said officers and men of the home army felt uncertain about its future and would like to hear "a definite and clear-cut statement of policy."

Mr. Graydon added that attendance at reserve army parades was tapering off. It is believed in some quarters that the invoking of partial conscription has had the effect of lessening interest in recruiting in the reserve.

Prime Minister Mackenzie King, of whom Mr. Graydon asked the question, said Friday he would consult the Defence Department and try to have an answer ready for yesterday. However, Mr. Macdonald explained when the House opened that a lengthy reply had been prepared. It was being abbreviated to make it more concise, and would be tabled today.

When is a Dollar Not a Dollar?

When it won't buy a dollar's worth of goods! For instance, compared to present-day standards, your dollar of the last war was worth, not a dollar . . . but sometimes less than 50¢. Housewives, who went marketing in 1917, had to part with for a four-pound jar of jam which you buy to-day for . . . Dad's winter underwear set him back then, as compared to the he could buy it for to-day. You get a lot more for your money NOW . . . because price ceilings and other anti-inflationary measures have kept the value of your dollar HIGH! That's why it will pay you to see that selfish spending never undermines price control in Canada. Remember, you protect your dollar's worth when you use your money wisely . . . when you pay off debts . . . refuse to buy needless luxuries... give black markets a wide berth .. and don't hoard goods.

Make This Pledge Today!

I promise to give my support to keeping the cost of living down. I will buy only what I need. I will observe the ceiling whether buying or selling goods or services. I will pay off old debts, save for the future, invest in Victory Bonds and War Savings Certificates. And I will support taxes which help lower the cost of living.

Minor Leaguers Ready To Meet

Buffalo, Dec. 5 (AP)—Baseball notables arriving for the minor league convention opening tomorrow are determined to lay the foundation for a new order in the game for the future, in the same city where they previously agreed to operate under the present major-minor agreement 23 years ago.

Resigned to the fact that due to Judge K. M. Landis' death, the major-minor code must automatically extend to Jan. 12, 1946, the lower leagues are prepared to give full consideration to the 13 amendments to the major-minor agreement, up for discussion, chief of which are the draft and territorial problem.

Proposed by the A. A. Pacific Coast League, an amendment calls for the doubling of the draft price from $7,500 to $15,000. With an eye on future developments after the war, the coast loop also proposed a more iron-clad territorial protection. As the rules stand, a major league may go into a minor league territory by the payment of $5,000 to the league and of a reasonable amount to the affected club as determined by agreement, or fixed by the commissioner.

Ten active and 15 suspended leagues each have a vote in the meeting.

Play at Boston and Hold Three Straight Victories Over Bruins

Montreal Canadiens invade Boston for a joust with the fourth-place Bruins tonight and although they hold three straight victories over the Bostonians the National Hockey League leaders cannot count with confidence on picking up the points needed to stretch their one-point margin over Toronto Maple Leafs.

Bruins have taken four out of 5 games in the past two weeks and display clear evidence of revival after shaky early-season play. Leading the renaissance is the young forward line of Ken Smith, Bill Cupolo and Frank Mario, with Smith and Cupolo particularly allowing high scoring potency.

Abetting this increased attacking strength is the improved performance of rookie Harvey Bennett in goal. A consistently feeble defence probably bars the Bruins' rise to N.H.L. championship contention, and this ailing department stands to grow worse instead of better as the season progresses.

On the other hand, Canadiens, while unexcelled defensively, appear to have lost much of the scoring prowess that helped them make a shambles of league competition last year. They are fifth in league scoring. Their top line of Elmer Lach, Toe Blake and Maurice Richard has shown no decline, but is not getting adequate help.

Now it is no secret in rasslin' circles that Dunlop and "Honest John" Katan are thicker than ham and eggs, so it was no surprise when Dunlop announced he had engaged the Palermo Panther for his associate in a battle royal versus "Whipper Billie" Watson and "Irish Tom" Collins. Fans who saw last week's team wrestling stamped it tops and the mostest or the best-est fun they've seen in years. Wednesday night's return match with Katan replacing Ivan Rasputin should even top last week's show in every phase. It'll be a hot time in the Hume Arena Wednesday night regardless as to the temperature outside. Promoter Frank Tunney guarantees two strong preliminaries.

HAMILTON MAJORS HELD TO 3-3 TIE BY STAFFORDS

Toronto Squad Comes From Behind but Hamilton Ties Game Before Time

(By The Canadian Press)

Toronto Staffords, aided by Harry McQuesten's able goal tending, picked up their first point in O.H.A. Senior "A" competition last night by holding Hamilton Majors to a 3-all draw.

The Toronto team had lost three games and Majors, defending O.H.A. champions, were victorious in their only other contest, a 9-5 triumph over Staffords at Hamilton.

Dillon Brady gave the visitors a comfortable margin with two goals early in the game, but Kosick came back with Toronto's first counter near the end of the initial period. The home team took a 3-2 lead in the second on Kosick's second marker and one by Drummond, but dangerous Clarence Shillington tied it up for Hamilton early in the third. There was no further scoring and the teams failed to break the deadlock in a 10-minute overtime period.

Only three penalties were handed out.

BYRON NELSON WINS TOURNEY FOR SECOND TIME

Noses Out Sgt. Jim Ferrier Who Led From 36th to 68th Hole

By RUSS NEWLAND
(Associated Press Sport Writer)

San Francisco, Dec. 5 —(AP)—Hitting straight and hard, Byron Nelson held the San Francisco Open Golf Tournament title today for the second consecutive year.

He posted a 281 for the 72-hole event to nose out Sgt. Jim Ferrier, Camp Roberts, Calif., in a whirlwind finish to yesterday's final round. Ferrier carded a 282, after leading the tournament from the 36th to the 68th hole.

It was practically within sight of home that Nelson, leading money winner of the year and former National Open and P.G.A. champion, pulled up on even terms with the big blond sergeant.

Nelson squared the count at the 69th with a par four, Ferrier missing a six-foot putt for a half. The golfing soldier, one-time pro at Elmhurst, Ill., and former Australian champion, lost the tournament on the next hole. He hit a ball out of bounds and missed a six-foot putt. The miscue cost him a six and Nelson went into a two-stroke lead.

Ferrier made a bid on the 71st hole, dropping a 10-footer for a birdie two that cut Nelson's lead to a single stroke. They halved the final hole in par fours, Ferrier being short on a 40-foot putt and Nelson lipping the cup for his birdie try from 12 feet.

The victory put $2,666 more in war bonds in Nelson's pocket. Ferrier picked up $1,666 for second place, plus $100 as the low-scoring service man.

Nelson carded rounds of 72-71-69-69 to defend his title. Ferrier put together rounds of 75-66-70-71. Par for Harding Park is 36-36-72.

Willie Goggin, White Plains, N.Y., and Sam Snead, Hot Springs, Va., finished in a tie for third with 287.

Harold (Jug) McSpaden, Philadelphia, second high money winner of the year, finished far down the line with 294, four strokes back of fifth place Fred Wood of Vancouver, B.C.

What's Doing in Sport

In a speech before the sports writers club at Boston yesterday, manager Art Ross of the Bruins asserted the four N.H.L. clubs in the United States were finished with catering to the whims of the league's representatives in Toronto and Montreal. He predicted that the next N.H.L. president would be an American, rather than a Canadian, adding that the league headquarters should be in the States.

Ross threatened that the N. H. L. governors in Boston, Detroit, New York and Chicago were ready to swing the balance of power to the United States by choosing an American president and pointed out that Canadian boys were making a good living there by playing hockey.

The probate of the will at Chicago yesterday of Kenesaw M. Landis, Baseball Commissioner who died Nov. 25, revealed an estate estimated at $100,000. The will left all assets to the widow.

Figures compiled for the U. S. football season show that Army rolled up 504 points in nine games for an average of 56 points per game. College teams throughout the country garnered higher total scores than in any year since the early 1920's, the survey showing that 104 squads scored an average of 17.29 points in 829 games.

Scoring leadership in the American Hockey League has been taken over by Paul Courteau of Providence Reds after gathering 11 points during the past week to give him a total of 28 including 14 goals. Tied for second place with 23 points were Tom Burlington of Cleveland, Tom Forgie of Hershey and Lloyd Klein of Pittsburgh.

CASUAL COMMENT by K.J.C.

Counsel was cross-examining a farmer.

"Now," he said, "don't quibble. Do you understand a simple problem or not?"

"I do," replied the witness.

"Then tell the court this: If 15 men ploughed a field in five hours, how long would 30 men take to plough the same field?"

"They couldn't do it."

"Why not?"

"Because the 15 have already ploughed it."

Softball Pow-Wow.

With O.A.S.A. celebrities from all parts of Eastern Ontario on hand the Belleville Men's Softball League will hold its first banquet at the "Y" tonight. It has long been President Joe Samain's pet obsession to gather together on a common ground all players, officials and league personnel in order that each might become acquainted with the problems of the other. It is the type of gathering that has long been neglected locally, so let's hope tonight's conclave will be the father of many to come. C. B. Colling, chairman of the city Parks Commission, will act as master-of-ceremonies and assist Prexy Samain. Medals and crests will be awarded to the SACO "Marines" and Columbian Squire Juniors as O.A.S.A. finalists and a new trophy presented by Mr. Gus Freeman. Provincial softball big-wigs expected include Mayor Harry Rollins, Ernie Simpson of Kingston and Dave Leether of Peterborough . . . The only regretable part of the program will be the absence of a provincial championship award, that well could have been.

Trenton Organize.

Charlie Allore, who has long been associated with sports in Trenton, was named president of the Trenton Junior Hockey Club last week. A better head just could not be found as Charlie is the type of sportsman who puts his entire efforts into any venture he assumes and it goes without saying the Trenton Juniors will have to hustle on the ice if they hope to keep pace with President Charlie Allore's initiativeness.

FO. Stan Jackson was again appointed as coach while Rome Taylor was named vice-president. Les Farrell was persuaded to return to the post of manager and Charlie Stain will look after the secretarial work. Bob Ford, of the Courier-Advocate sports staff, and our old friend Maurice Fecteau, are members of the executive along with Jim McDonald, Jack Heaney and Bill Watson.

Speaking of hockey we see where Reg Chipman, who was with the Reliance Intermediates a couple of seasons back, is playing with the Lachine "Rapides" in the Quebec Senior Loop this season.

Remember When . . .

The Toronto Maple Leaf Baseball Club of the International League announced the signing of Burleigh Grimes, former Major League pitcher, as manager of the Leafs three years ago today. Grimes, more affectionately known as "Stubblebeard," managed the Brooklyn Dodgers in 1938 and lead the Toronto team to their first pennant since 1926 when Toronto won the International Loop in 1943. He was released at the end of the 1944 season and only recently Harry Davis was named as playing manager for 1945.

Is Everybody Happy?

Right about now it seems as though everybody concerned is "happy about the whole thing," when in reference to tomorrow night's return team rasslin' go at the Market Street Sport Palace. Today Promoter Tunney announced there would be no time limit allowed. "I'm going to have this one to a finish if it takes until the next day. I'm tired of hearing Dunlop's protests so we're throwing away the time-limit gong and letting the boys loose," remarked Tunney. (That should keep 'em warm.)

Failed at Politics.

If there had been a few more Republican voters in Wilkinsburg, Pa., back in the fall of 1929, it is doubtful if Bill McKechnie would be manager of the Cincinnati Reds today. Bill was a little fed up with baseball that year. He won the Cardinals' second flag in 1928, but Sam Breadon, irked because the Redbirds lost the World's Series in four straight to the Yankees, demoted the Deacon to the management of the Rochester club and brought Billy Southworth to St. Louis for his first venture as Cardinal manager. By mid-season, 1929, Sam decided he had acted too hastily; he recalled McKechnie to St. Louis and sent Billy back to Rochester.

However, the Deacon decided he was being pushed around. Some friends obtained the Republican nomination for assessor of Wilkinsburg, Pa., for him. However, in the election the Democratic candidate had more votes, and the Deacon was saved for baseball.

Horse Sense Bridge

LESSON NO. 549
By SAM GORDON
"The Kibitzer"

Said a fan to his wife in Ansonia: "I've been teaching you bridge since I've known you. Yet you could not be worse if you tried to rehearse all the stuff that the Kibitzer's shown us."

Review this hand:

♠Q 3
♥A K Q J 10 8 6 3
♣A 5

Should this hand be opened with one, two, three, four, five, or six hearts. Let's corral the meanings of each and their responses.

One heart shows five tricks, four high cards, two sure tricks, and a biddable heart suit. In response: Pass with less than three tricks; bid with three tricks when they include two high cards.

Two hearts show enough tricks for game; a biddable heart suit; and is forcing to game. In response: Two no-trump denies a sure trick; any other bid admits a sure trick.

Three hearts shows a long-strong suit, one sure outside trick, eight tricks. In response: Pass with no trick; raise to four in that suit with a trick or more; invite slam with two sure tricks.

Four hearts shows a long suit and nothing else, admits being a gamble, and expects to be defeated. In response: Pass without at least three aces and a king.

Five hearts or six hearts may mean anything, depending on the type of pair or players using them. There is always a better opening than a five or six bid.

Compare. Comparison proves. This hand can make game by itself and a slam if partner has one sure trick. So, the best opening with it is two hearts; the bid that includes these aims.

A five or six bid fails if partner is blank. A four bid does not discover slam help. A three bid misses slam if partner has only one sure trick. A one bid misses game if partner passes.

But here, an opening two heart bid has everything.

Bill Cowley Still Leading Scoring Race

Montreal, Dec. 5 — (CP)—Boston's Bill Cowley picked up three points during the last week to serve notice that he doesn't intend to relinquish top spot among the National Hockey League scorers, official weekly figures showed today.

With a goal and two assists for the week, Cowley maintained his two-point margin on Canadien's Toe Blake, who in turn moved into sole possession of second place after sharing the spot with Clint Smith of Chicago last week.

Smith went pointless to slide into a third-place tie with Gus Bodnar of Toronto and Elmer Lach of Canadiens. Each has 20 points, compared with Blake's 23 and Cowley's 25. Tied for the next spot with 19 points each were Bill Mosienko of Chicago and Syd Howe of Detroit.

Canadiens' Maurice Richard led the goal scoring parade with 14, 3 ahead of Blake, Mosienko and Sweeney Schriner of Toronto. Cowley, Bodnar and Lach were tied for assist honors with 16 each, two ahead of Smith and Howe.

Pat Egan remained atop the penalty parade with 30 minutes in majors and minors. A league compilation showed that Toronto had the highest number of regular penalties, with a total of 125 minutes in majors and minors. Canadiens were right behind with 122 minutes, but the Canucks also had two misconducts against them.

Little Benny's Note Book

Pop was smoking in back of the sporting page and ma was turning to different pages of the dictionerry, saying, The dictionerry is really the most fassinating of books, dont you think so, William?

It has a very disjointed plot, if you really want my opinion, pop said, and ma said, So many thousands and thousands of words, and no 2 alike. I cant even remember what word I started to look up, it's so fassinating. I mean there are words here I never heard of, or even dreamed of. For instance skewbald, what would you think skewbald means, William? she said.

I wouldn't think, pop said. I happen to be deeply interested in an elevating and instructive article on great fighters of the passed, he said, and ma said, Give a guess, William Skewbald, what do you think it would be she said.

I think it would be a term in billiards, meaning to be behind the two ball with the cue ball, pop said, and ma said, You were never further wrong, it means covered with patches of color, speaking of horses.

I didn't realize we were speaking of horses, and furthermore you're making me lost the thread of this discussion on great generalship in the prize ring, pop said, and ma said, Sapindaceous, now there's a word, what do you think sapindaceous means, William?

It comes from the Greek word sappy or loose in the head, and the latin word daceous meaning daytime, and it signifies crazy during the day but not necessarily at night, pop said. Yee gods I'm trying to read this article on boxing, he said, and ma said, Then why didn't you say so for land sakes? Anyway, if you must know, sapindaceous means belonging to the soapberry family of trees and shrubs, she said.

And she closed the dictionerry and started the bridge problem.

Canadian Sport Snapshots

By SYD THOMAS
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Toronto, Dec. 5 —(CP)— The good citizens of Vancouver have been striving mightily for the honor of having the Allan Cup finals in their balliwick next spring, but now that feat looks quite possible, the situation isn't looking so rosy . . . The sneaking suspicion is beginning to intrude itself that, if the wily ones of Toronto and Montreal do let the finals go to the Coast, it will only be because they don't shape up as money-makers in the East . . . And if that's the case, the series will likely be quite a financial flop on the Coast, by the time expenses of the finalists are paid for their long trek westward.

Power Plant

Glancing over the line-up of the R.C.A.F. team from Dartmouth, N.S., you get the idea here might be a squad that would go far on the Allan Cup trail—if it weren't for service restrictions. The Fliers are coached my Corporal Roy Conacher, erstwhile Art Rossman, and has plenty of talent all the way from goal to centre . . . Doing the backstopping is Dave Kemp, termed by Conacher the equal of many goaltenders in the N.H.L. On defence are such stalwarts as Cpl. Eddie Bush former Detroit Red Wing, Jack Pumple of Ottawa, George Coops of Regina, Art Upper of Toronto. Up forward are players like Bert Laprade of Port Arthur, Jack Schmidt, one-time Boston Bruin, Don Stanley, Amherst's Ripley Twins, Jack Vogt of Hamilton Juniors to name a few.

Incidentally:

Another former N.H.L. player getting in a few licks in Britain is Johnny Mowers, who once filled Detroit's goalmouth. Mowers is playing hockey in an airforce league in England now—in his "off moments," as he says . . . Toronto Maple Leafs of the International Baseball League will train next spring at Hagerstown, Maryland, instead of Lancaster, Pennsylvania. They will be nearer their parent club, Philadelphia Athletics, that way. J. P. Fitzgerald of the Toronto Telegram, perhaps recalling how ineffective Leafs were last summer, suggested it doesn't matter where Leafs train, "provided they do" . . . Out in Calgary, the Bantams and Midgets of the ice world started to hold early-morning workouts, but soon stopped that. Bob Manini of the Calgary Herald suggests the youngsters didn't mind so much getting up at 5 a.m., but the coaches and managers didn't like the black mornings so well . . .

BABY AS SHIELD

Capture and subsequent positive identification of Thomas Henry Loritz, 26, as the "baby carrying" bandit who robbed the California bank of $3,000 has been announced by police. Arrested with him in Los Angeles, Calif., was his wife, June, who admitted driving the "getaway car," but who insisted she did not know what was going on. The baby, Glenn Gray, was carried by Loritz as a shield and whose death was threatened if the $3,000 was not handed over. Shown are Mrs. Mildred Gray and her son, Glenn, four-year-old, who was held by the bandit during the hold-up.

County Council Now in Session

With Warden Thomas Fleming in the chair, the Hastings County Council convened for its first sitting of the December session in Shire Hall this afternoon.

Many matters of county importance are on the agenda and the session promises to be one of the liveliest in some time. It will be the last complete session for Warden Fleming, who has announced his retirement from county and municipal governmental circles.

The various committees have held their final meetings of the year and reports will be submitted for approval of council as a whole.

Speculation, meanwhile, is rife regarding the 1945 successor to the warden. Several names have been mentioned as potential nominees for the office but this matter won't be cleared definitely until the January session.

Warden Fleming, it has been learned, will not issue invitations to the annual warden's banquet as is the general custom. Instead, he has announced his intention of donating the cost of the yearly feed to a war charity organization.

AT THE CAPITOL

"Detective Kitty O'Day"
(First Belleville Showing)

A vastly amusing mystery comedy is "Detective Kitty O'Day," the Monogram picture which opened an engagement at the Capitol Theatre last night. This uproariously funny story qualifies as exceptional entertainment in its field.

Jean Parker is starred in the title role, and is delightful as a young secretary who comes under suspicion of murder, and determines to do something about it. Peter Cookson, a newcomer to the screen, is excellent as her boyfriend, and others who add effectively to the hilarious proceedings are Tim Ryan, Veda Ann Borg, Edward Gargan, Douglas Fowley, Herbert Heyes, Pat Gleason and Olaf Hytten.

"Jane Eyre"
(Outstanding)

A great and stirring emotional adventure was brought to the screen of the Capitol Theatre yesterday as the added special attraction with such compelling force and profound depth and beauty that it will be deservingly acclaimed one of the greatest pictures ever filmed.

The picture, of course, is "Jane Eyre," which 20th Century-Fox has filmed with all of the relentless onrush of unforgettable characters, scenes and moments of exalted love that has made Charlotte Bronte's emotion-tossed romance one of the great favorites of all time.

Orson Welles and Joan Fontaine in the leading roles of Edward Rochester and Jane achieve brilliant new heights of sheer artistry in performances that may well bring them this year's Academy Awards.

By HYE BOSSIN

The recently-announced partnership between Paul Nathanson, head of Canada's Odeon theatre chain, and J. Arthur Rank, leader of the British film and theatre industry, will have a marked effect on the Canadian theatre field of the future. Odeon of Canada, half of which is now owned by Rank, operates about 100 movie theatres in Canada.

The partners will erect modern theatres in principal cities and towns after the war. Canada will have some 50 new postwar theatres and this enterprise will be welcomed because their construction calls for the employment of more varied crafts than are used in other industries. Also the post-war employment thus created is not concentrated but spread across the Dominion. Britain has taken theatre building into account as a means of providing work for returned veterans and is expected to grant it a priority equal to that of homes.

Second important aspect of the partnership is the wider market created for British films, the producers of which have been trying desperately to get enough playing time to make million dollar productions worth while. British films, it is expected, will be every bit as good as American ones after the war. Publicity offices will be established in Canada that will make British stars household names in the Dominion. British films have improved tremendously and even the Americans recognize this, for they have agreed to distribute many in the USA.

Another sidelight of the deal is that it may do much to solve the vexing problem of films for children. In Britain, Rank, who is a producer as well as a theatre owner, makes special films for children. These are knitted into two-hour programs and shown at weekly matinees with the help of all organizations interested in juvenile welfare. Mary Field, in charge of this program, just visited Canada to study the possibility of making these films with Canadian backgrounds for domestic use.

The partnership is the most interesting development in the Canadian motion picture industry in many years.

Bob Hope's book, "I Never Left Home," has sold 1,400,000 copies so far. The proceeds go to war charities . . . An actor who didn't like his salary returned his cheque with this notation: "Any resemblance between this and a living wage is purely coincidental" . . . Orson Welles' next film job will be "Tomorrow is Forever," in which he appears opposite Claudette Colbert . . . Quite a stir in certain parts of Britain because Italian prisoners of war are admitted to movie houses at the cheaper rate charged servicemen. Local farm commandos and other volunteer war workers objected to paying the full price and it was explained to them that the Italians were regarded as soldiers.

"This is the Army" earned $7,500,00 for USA Army Emergency Relief and $40,000 for its Canadian equivalent. . . Hollywood has provided refuge for many European film players and technicians. A French film being shown now is "Dark Eyes," in which Simone Simon and Pierre Aumont were the stars. They, as well as the writer, producer, director, composer and art designer, are working in the Cinema City now. . . Fay Bainter's son is overseas and his pals heard a great deal about his famous mother. The first film he saw in liberated Paris was "White Banners," which served to introduce his mother to his friends.

AN APPLE FOR EVE

By Kathleen Norris

CHAPTER 6.

She repeated the last phrase three or four times as she admitted Loveday to the stuffy darkness of the house.

"I don't let but just a little strip of light in here," she said, raising the shade behind the crying cherub "because it's cooler indoors than out. My daughter's friend has been transferred to the New Mexico branch; and they're hurrying up everything. We're having a terrible spell of weather; I don't know when it's been so hot. But I tell her she'll get some real hot weather where's she going! Will you excuse me one minute?"

She disappeared and Loveday sat quite still, moving only her eyes as she absorbed the details of this dreadful room. The old house in Indian Hill had been of formidable pieces of Victorian furniture, to be sure, but they had been good pieces, the finest of their period, and the house, if dilapidated, half occupied, untended, had always maintained its original air of dignity and importance.

And the St. George house, modern and bright and fine in all its appointments, framed in its gay English garden, set high on its cliff over the sea, cool and airy and flower-scented today....

The room was not large and suffocatingly hot on this burning day. The shaft of light that pierced the net curtains and enveloped the crying cherub was like a throbbing sword. Pictures of Larry at all ages stood on the shelves and tables, and pictures of bright-faced, rather common-looking girls identified at once by Loveday as his sisters.

Oh, if only they would tell her that Larry had gone to Buenos Aires — that Larry had just announced his marriage! Loveday looked at his pictured face, the lean face with the wavy hair above it and the half-appealing, half-impudent smile of a small boy looked back at her. But she could not make the thought of the man seem real.

"We all look terrible," Marge apologized, "but Mama wanted her hair done, and I'm always home Saturday afternoons, so I said I'd do it. But my goodness, it's so hot it seems an effort to do anything! We were fixing Larry up," she explained, "and he's just crazy to see you. Of course he hasn't talked of anything else but you!"

"Is Larry here!" Loveday exclaimed rather than asked. This was worse than her worst imaginings.

"Here?" his mother echoed, surprised. "Didn't you know he'd been home sick for —well, it's two weeks tomorrow? We've had a terrible time with him."

"He got typhoid and he didn't know what it was," Marge explained. They think he must have had a light run of walking typhoid down in Florida, and then he started home and got a relapse, and when he got here it was all we could do to pull him through!"

"I don't want to live through those days again," Mrs. Ingersoll said fervently. "We've got him out here in the shed; he fixed it up when he came back from his trip around the world. It's really the back half of the garage, but he made it into a real nice room. And wasn't it a blessing that we had it for this sickness! It quarantined him perfectly, the doctor said."

While they talking they had crossed through a small hot kitchen, darkened and orderly, but with an unappetizing odor of tomatoes and peaches—both slightly past their prime-permeating it, had traversed a narrow back porch, and descended three steps to a back yard furnished with a garbage barrel, a clothesline upon which girl's silk underwear was pinned, and various brooms, ladders and rakes set against a plank fence. A path across the yard led to the open door of a room that backed against the garage, and in this room Larry was lying in bed.

Evidently a hasty effort to put the place in order had been made; a pyramid of detective and confession magazines was heaped on the floor in the corner; the bed had been straightened, and Larry's hair was freshly combed. His companion, a lean old mustached man, rose from the baggy armchair that faced the bed as the women came in, cleared his throat, and said pleasantly, "Here's company for ye, son."

Larry looked shockingly thin; his eyes were sunken and he wore a beard of several days' growth. She went straight to the bed and knelt down and kissed him, afterward taking the chair that was beside him. The stubble of his beard had pricked her face; she was breathing hard, trying to smile, completely unable to speak. His hand in hers was limp and cool.

"Say, what a swell thing for you to do!" Larry said in a hoarse, deep voice. Something of bravado, of gallantry in the few words wrung her heart; there was fortunately no need for her to speak, for everyone else was speaking.

His mother, father and sisters were delighted that Larry's girl had at last got in touch with him. He had written her days ago and had watched the mail ever since, but that she would actually come down to Bakersfield on so hot a day was a grand surprise. They reiterated over and over, and of course she must stay for the wedding! Larry was going to be up for the first time.

The room was hot and scented with coffee and pipe smoke and sickness. Only a thin sheet was stretched over Larry, but his head had made a circle of perspiration on the top pillow, and now and then he fanned himself with the sheet.

"He'll be all right now!" they said.

"Listen, I'll go over to Aunt Alma's; Loveday can have my bed," Marge said. Loveday said quickly, apologetically:

"Oh, but I can't stay. I'm with the St. Georges, and we have to go on to Los Angeles tonight. I didn't know Larry was here," she added with a smile for him.

"He wrote you," said his mother. "He wrote you at San Francisco; I mailed the letter myself."

"I didn't get it. I haven't had a letter for a long time."

They all said a shocked "Ah-h!" at this. Alma had left the room; she now came back with a tall glass of milk, and Larry, sitting up, gulped it down heroically.

"Well, that's the first time he's done that!" his mother exclaimed amazedly. "I guess Loveday's done you good already!"

"Got to get well now!" he said, grinning

"Not getting that last letter, or any letter except that short one from Florida---" she said and paused.

"I couldn't write you. I got sick down there; I felt too rotten."

"Were you in the aviation school then, Larry?"

"No they kicked me out. I couldn't get along with the pipsqueak they had in charge there. I think his uncle was a colonel or something," Larry said. He dropped his head back with an air of weariness and shut his eyes. "He got kicked out later," he added.

"Then what?"

"Oh, then I was helping a feller that was selling refrigerators, and I began to feel rotten. So this Morris — did I tell you about Morris?" Larry asked, opening his eyes. "Well, anyway, he was a man I knew in college and he was driving West and told me to come along and help drive. He waited until I thought I was all right again. There were two old ladies coming with us; one had a son in San Pablo; they each paid him forty dollars for the trip, and he paid for gas and oil, and so on. But I kept feeling worse and worse and I just about made it this far, and Ma's been taking care of me ever since. I guess I pretty nearly died," he ended, again sinking back wearily with closed eyes.

She saw that he was very weak.

"I am tiring you," she said with compunction. He tightened his grip on her hand.

"You bet you tire me," he said, feebly ironical. "How are things going with you?"

"I'm with the St. Georges, you know. You met the father and Fanny and Rod. Fanny's married now; she married a Canadian officer. They're wonderful to me."

"And who's at the old place at Indian Hill?"

"Wing Foo is taking care of it. It's just the way it was."

"No chance of renting it? I guess not."

"Not without putting a lot of money into it, Uncle Warren says. Too big."

What else to say to him? What did he expect of her? What was he thinking?

"If you'll trust me—and wait for me--" he presently began. His lips trembled, and tears slipped down his thin cheeks. "I wasn't going to ask you—I didn't have the nerve. I never wrote to you in San Francisco."

"But your mother said she mailed the letter!"

"She did, but it was addressed wrong. Instead of writing 'Sea Cliff' on it I wrote 'Presidio Terrace.' I knew they'd never find you. I hadn't put the St. George name on it. I didn't want you to know."

"I had a right to know." Loveday said it automatically. It was like a line in a play that had to be used.

"I knew how you thought things were here," Larry presently went on. "Well, we used to live in a bigger place on the other side of town, and Mother had a Jap cook. My uncle sent me to Princeton all right, and I went around the world with the school band. But I knew—"

He was silent and she was silent. But her thumb moved slowly across his hand.

"When you said that perhaps Ma wouldn't thank me for bringing an unknown girl into the family," his troubled reluctant voice went on, "I felt like a dirty sneak! I knew how you'd look to my folks—and you do! I could see the way the girls were looking at you—your hair and your black dress and the way you talk. I couldn't let you in for it. I love you too much! I love you too much!"

The last words were said thickly; his eyelashes blinked hard.

"I'm so damned weak," he said fretfully, "it doesn't take anything to make me play the baby!"

"You'll be getting stronger every day now, Larry."

"It isn't that!" He jerked his head impatiently. "It's just that—everything seemed to be getting away from me," he explained ineloquently. "My dad retired four years ago—or he quit because they told him they were going to cut him down to sixty-five a month is more like it, I guess, and Ma gave up the other house and came here," he said. "Marge and Alma had jobs then, and the idea was that I was going to get a job. But my mother's half brother---he's a congressman from New York—said he'd put me through college. I only stuck it two years and then I came back here. I hate this damn town, but I got a job here, with the Gas and Electric, and when they asked me if I'd transfer to Indian Hill I jumped at it. Any place but round here!"

A silence. Loveday watched his face his eyes were closed.

"You'll wait for me, won't you?" he presently whispered. "I couldn't ask you to. But you've come here now, and that shows you haven't forgotten what we promised each other. That shows it, doesn't it? Loveday, I've let everyone down; I've let myself down. But I'll not let you down again."

Marge put her head into the room, nodded mysteriously, and Loveday gently loosed her hand and went noiselessly to the door. The two girls crossed the burning brightness of the back yard, went in through the kitchen. In the dark, suffocating little dining room chairs were drawn around a table upon whose brown polished surface a Battenburg lace runner and a bowl of marigolds were placed. Near it, slipping as it melted in the bowl, was a great lump of ice cream, strawberry pink and chocolate brown, and a plate of package cookies.

Larry's mother and her two daughters gathered around; a third sister had come home for a look at Larry's sweetheart. Betty-Lou was quite pretty, with colorless pale cheeks, dark eyes, and a hanging mane of dry curls. All women looked steadily at Loveday, laughed at everything she said, agreed eagerly, apologized — interrupting each other—for Larry's unshaven state and the appearance of his room, and reiterated their appreciation of her coming.

Late in the afternoon, Loveday went back to the shack. Larry was awake. "Going?" he asked.

"I have to." she was grateful for the relief this attitude afforded her that she added spontaneously, "But I'll see you on our way home."

"And when will that be? This is Saturday. Tomorrow?"

"No. Marc—that's Dr. Villard I told you of — comes back Sunday night. He's on duty again Monday. But we may stay a few days longer."

"Will you let me know? I'll be up then. I'm getting up tomorrow for Alma's party."

"I'll wire you, Larry."

He drew her down; she had been standing beside the bed with her fingers in his.

"This is a bad start," he said, "but we'll get going. I'll get a job and boom along! Kiss me good-bye, darling."

She knelt down; there was nothing else to do. They put their arms around each other, and she felt his lips browsing along her temples and pressed against her closed eyes. Quite suddenly he released her.

"You came along just at the right moment for me, Loveday. I feel like a new man!"

The next five days were days of pure enchantment for Loveday. She was transported to another world. It was a world of balmy airs and the gentle clicking of palm leaves, a world of white frocks bright in the sunlight and a blue sea rocking beyond the shady pavilions and stretched awnings of the shore.

Chris had rented or been loaned a delightfully luxurious beach house; two silent, efficient Filipino servants apparently went with it; at all events the household machinery moved perfectly, and they were all free to entertain or accept entertainment exactly as they pleased.

They went to the big studios and wandered through block after block of half-built Normandy villages and half-demolished African jungles.

Chris took them to shops in Beverly Hills and Long Wilshire Boulevard and bought Loveday a white bag and a Panama hat and Nini a striped frock. The hat lent a new glamour to everything for Loveday. It was simple enough, but she never had had such a hat.

Chris was, of course, the background and inspiration for everything they did. Merle was in Stockton with her family. Chris went to the studio every morning but could usually join the group at lunch and often in the afternoon was free.

On the last morning, Chris took them to see the first shot of a picture that was being made. This was an extraordinary privilege and a fit climax to the week of wonders. They found themselves, silent and awed, in seats just off a magnificent set that represented the baronial hallway of an English manor house; the carved white stairway ascended past authentic stained-glass windows; the walls were hung with make-believe canvasses by Reynolds, Lely, Lawrence. A very army of Cameramen and directors, in an octopus tangle of ropes and wires, swarmed about them; high up above the scene other men hung and scuttled like spiders; blasting hot lights shot down in fierce tunnels of brilliance from every direction.

Coming slowly down the great stairway in an exquisite glittering gown was the beautiful Madeline Carroll. To meet her at the foot of the stairs, in impeccable evening attire, Basil Rathbone emerged from a left-hand doorway. They addressed each other.

"Hello."

"Oh, hello."

"Where's Helen?"

"Isn't she down? Come into the library, anyway." After which they walked slowly toward the right.

R.C.A.F. Bomber Command in On Karlsruhe Raid

London, Dec. 5 — (CP Cable) — A "substantial number" of Halifaxes and Lancasters representing every squadron of the R.C.A.F. bomber command participated in last night's attack on Karlsruhe, it was announced today. All Canadian aircraft returned safely.

"There was a cloud over the target when we arrived but we were able to bomb through patches of it," Flt. Sgt. Joseph Campbell of Verdun, Que., a rear-gunner of the Tiger squadron, said. "Coming out I could see large fires burning. The city looked like three-quarters of a mile of solid fire."

FO. J. E. Culley of Toronto, bomb-aimer of the Porcupine Squadron, said:

"The Rhine river showed up plainly and the whole of Karlsruhe seemed ablaze. I could even see the streets burning below."

Flt. Lt. J. A. Anderson of Winnipeg and FO. George Sheahan of Ottawa, Moose squadron pilots, both reported heavy explosions and said they saw jet-propelled enemy planes which did not attack.

An enemy fighter made vapor rings around a Ghost Squadron Lancaster piloted by FO. Douglas Berry, D.F.C., of (26 Cambridge St.) Ottawa, then disappeared without attacking.

Liberal Member Attacks Bracken In Parliament

Ottawa, Dec. 5 (CP)—Ralph Maybank, Liberal member for Winnipeg South Centre, said yesterday in the Commons that he could not agree with an opposition suggestion that Prime Minister Mackenzie King should resign and make way for John Bracken, head of the Progressive Conservative party.

The suggestion was made in the Commons Friday by Lt.-Col. J. A. Ross (PC—Souris) during debate on the government's vote of confidence motion.

"Mr. Bracken . . . so far in his meanderings and peregrinations and wanderings has not seen fit or managed to have himself made a member of this House which the Honorable member for Souris wants him to lead," said Mr. Maybank.

"There may be political uncertainties, but the attitude of this House of Commons towards John Bracken is not one of them. I mean no one except this official opposition of 39 members, and even some of them might not turn out to be very dependable followers of Mr. Bracken, and it would not be surprising because the English-speaking never did enthuse greatly over Benedict Arnold, you will remember. . . .

(Benedict Arnold was a general who betrayed the American Army to the British during the American revolution.)

"This Mr. Bracken who has been mentioned in the midst of this crisis was not found in his place where he could help. Every member of the House of Commons has been in deep travail of spirit these many days, and I except no one from that, whether their views are as mine or whether they are contrary to mine. . . John Bracken could only employ his time at a party convention getting ready for an election. . ."

Fresh eggs in store amounted to 877,287 dozen, compared with 1,039,114 Nov. 1, while frozen eggs in storage totalled 28,365,863 pounds compared with 32,331,534 Nov. 1.

Paris Rocked To Foundations By Rigors of War

(By GLADWIN HILL)
(AP Staff Writer)

Paris, Dec. 5. (AP)— Liberated three months ago, Paris wears today a receptive mask of normality but underneath it remains a city rocked to its very foundations by the rigors of war.

Chic femininity strolls the boulevards. Open air bookstalls flourish along the Seine. Champagne flows at hollow diplomatic receptions. Fabulous Montmartre erupts in a hundred hole-in-the-wall night clubs.

But all this is superficial. Women's chic gowns are of light summer material because winter-weight goods are scarce. Many Parisians are getting only half the requisite number of calories for good health because food supplies are inadequate. Most buildings are unheated.

Paris has 16 daily newspapers now, but they are limited to a single sheet each. The subways are running, but there are no taxis and practically no other surface transportation.

The meat ration is half a pound weekly. Fish is unobtainable because of transportation shortage.

Some 10,000 Parisians are languishing in confinement on charges of suspicion of collaboration with the Germans. Only 20 have been tried so far, and lawyers mutter about the slow progress of the trials.

The new French consultative assembly is putting on the airs of a legislature, but with Gen. de Gaulle and his cabinet taking all active measures the assembly is mainly a synthetic forum pending the return of nearly one-tenth of France's people from bondage in Germany.

ROBT. J. REID, KINGSTON, DIES AT AGE OF 87 YEARS

Three sons and two daughters survive.

More Milk Necessary for 1945 If Normal Demands Are Met

Ottawa, Dec. 5 —(CP)— Agriculture Minister Gardiner said today there was not the same demand by Britain for apples as there was for meat products such as bacon and beef.

Mr. Gardiner spoke after a report on fruit had been submitted to the 12th Dominion-Provincial Agricultural Conference, now in its second day, by R. A. Wheeler, head of the Fruit Marketing Division of the Agricultural Department.

The report suggested an output of 14,000,000 bushels of apples for 1945—15 per cent less than the 1944 production. Mr. Wheeler said the committee, which surveyed the fruit and vegetable position, recommended a potato crop of 72,000,000 bushels for 1945, about two per cent less than in 1944.

Acreage of four subsidized vegetable crops—beans, peas, corn and tomatoes—were substantially higher in 1944 than in 1943. Recommended acreages for 1945 are: Canning beans, 7,000 acres; corn, 40,000; peas, 35,000; tomatoes, 35,000.

Dehydration of vegetables in 1945 was expected to be on a smaller scale than in 1944, consequently smaller plantings of cabbage, carrots, and turnips should be considered, the report said. Production of other fresh vegetables at the same levels as in 1944 was suggested for 1945.

A ready market for all the milk Canada can produce was indicated in the report on the dairy products situation.

Estimated output of milk in 1944 was 17,600,000 pounds, "fractionally higher" than in 1943. If the normal demands for butter, cheese and fluid milk were to be met in 1945, an additional output of 500,000,000 pounds would be necessary.

Allied Military Govt. In Occupied Germany With Rigor and Justice

London, Dec. 4 —(CP Reuter)— Instructions to the German people broadcast on behalf of Gen. Eisenhower, Allied commander and military governor of the occupied area of Germany by the Luxembourg radio, said today he would exercise his powers in his capacity as military governor "in accordance with the laws of justice, humanity and civilization."

"Military government in occupied Germany will be carried out with rigor and determination, but nevertheless with justice," these instructions added. "Its aim will be the destruction of the Nazi system, the destruction of the aggressive German militarism.

"The military government will be based on written legal principles. Allied military government will protect the German population from corruption, greed, malicious intrigue, and all terrorist measures of the present National Socialist leaders."

The instructions said that "existing laws, which do not contradict the laws of the military government, will remain in force," and that "the military government will see to it that its laws are carried out precisely."

"The meaning of these laws will be unequivocal and clear," the instructions added. "Everybody must obey these laws at once.

"Government will be just and without delay. All violations of the law will be dealt with speedily by ordinary law courts."

Leslie Roberts Raps Maj. Smythe Charges As 'Light-Headed'

Toronto, Dec. 5 — (CP) — Leslie Roberts, Canadian writer who has just returned from a visit to the western front, said in an address Sunday night that Major Conn Smythe's charges that Canadian Army reinforcements lacked training were "perhaps the most light-headed statements made by any Canadian during the course of the war."

"Our troops, who fought through Normandy, Falaise and Caen, require no bill of health from me or anybody else," he said. "They were the key troops in clearing the Scheldt Estuary.

"Eisenhower and Montgomery don't put green troops in tricky spots or tough jobs such as these. They put Canadians there because they are the finest fighters on the face of the earth."

Witness Says He Saw Mrs. Dorsey Slash Jon Hall

Los Angeles, Dec. 5 —(AP)— Antonio Icaza testified Monday that he saw Bandleader Tommy Dorsey's pretty wife slash the handsome nose of movie actor Jon Hall with a 6-inch kitchen knife.

"I saw Smiley start to beat up on Hall," Icaza said.

"What was Dorsey doing at that time?" asked Deputy District Attorney Edwin Myers.

"He had let loose of Hall and had a broken bottle in his hand. Hall was dizzy. Then Pat Dorsey cut Hall in the nose with a knife."

Icaza said Smiley cut Hall on the left shoulder of his coat with the kitchen knife, but didn't explain how he got it from Mrs. Dorsey.

That, said Icaza, was about all he saw of the fracas.

Icaza, flown here from Panama to testify, has filed a $40,000 damage suit against Dorsey for hurts he claims he suffered in the conflict.

Letter From Eire

By J. H. MURDOCH
(Canadian Press Correspondent)

Dublin, December 5 —(CP)— A barometer of public opinion on the international situation both in Eire and Britain has just been furnished in Dublin by the auction sale of nearly 400 of the best yearlings that Eire can produce.

The sale was by far the most successful ever held in Dublin, one of the Big Three centres for the sale of yearlings and racehorses in the British Isles. The obvious deduction from the high bidding for yearlings is that racing people in both countries believe that full scale racing programs may be held in England next year.

Most of the yearlings that passed through the sale ring will form the nucleus of racing in the British Isles during the next two to four years.

Horse breeding is one of Eire's greatest industries and the value of their export before the war was about £1,500,000.

Much attention is being given in Eire to the British government's ambitious plan of social security and all the Dublin newspapers have devoted leading articles on the matter. How far, if at all, will Eire be able to follow? Eire has already many schemes of social security on a minor scale. Children's allowances, started a couple of months ago, are at the rate of 2/6d (about 60 cents) a week for each child after the second. Britain's plan is for 5/-a week for each child after the first.

There appears to be no doubt that Northern Ireland will follow in every detail Britain's social security plan. It is also certain that Northern Ireland may have to get considerable financial assistance from Britain to carry it out.

The Eire Red Cross Society is about to establish a hospital in France at a cost of £50,000 for six months. Permission to establish the hospital has been granted by the French government. It will be entirely staffed by doctors and nurses from Eire. Hospital equipment will be taken to France by an Eire ship.

Relief for war areas in Italy is also under consideration. What form this will take has not yet been decided. It is likely that a consignment of food may be sent to Rome.

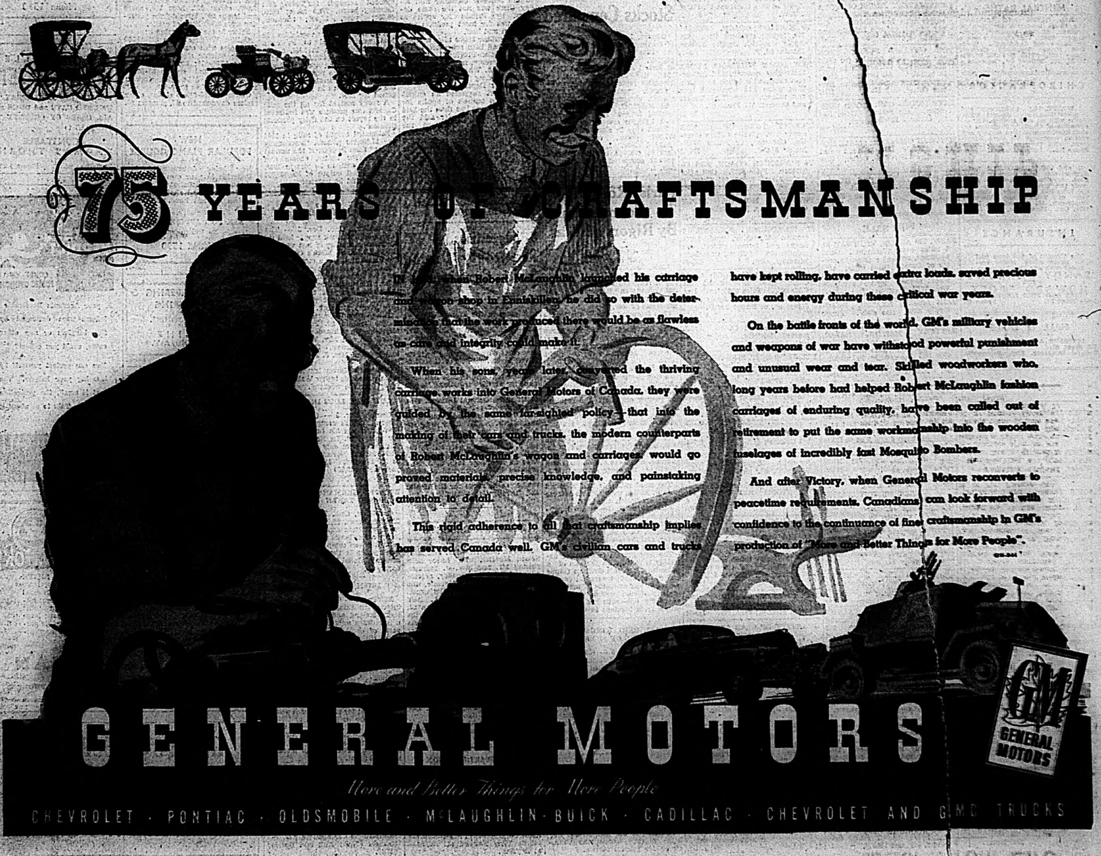
Three of Four Sentenced To Hang Will Die Wednesday

Ottawa, Dec. 5 —(CP)— Three of four men found guilty of the torture-death last July 2 of Mrs. Viola Jamieson, 42, of Flanders, Ont., will be hanged Wednesday as scheduled. But the fourth has had his sentence commuted to life imprisonment, the State Department said Monday.

Eino Tiilonen, 19, Port Arthur, Ont., youngest of the four, was granted the reprieve from the death penalty. Scheduled to be hanged are George Skrypnyk, 38, his brother, Anthony, 23, both of Port Arthur, and William Schmidt, 29, of Fort Frances, Ont.

FATALLY CRUSHED

Hamilton, Dec. 5 —(CP)— Emmerson Cronie, 47, died Monday a few minutes after he was crushed between a tractor crane and a steel post at the Steel Company of Canada plant. Cronie was employed by Norman Locke, a painting contractor. Coroner J. Lampin is investigating.



75 YEARS OF CRAFTSMANSHIP

IN 1869, when Robert McLaughlin launched his carriage and wagon shop in Enniskillen, he did so with the determination that the work produced there would be as flawless as care and integrity could make it.

When his sons, years later, converted the thriving carriage works into General Motors of Canada, they were guided by the same far-sighted policy—that into the making of their cars and trucks, the modern counterparts of Robert McLaughlin's wagon and carriages, would go proved materials, precise knowledge, and painstaking attention to detail.

This rigid adherence to all that craftsmanship implies has served Canada well. GM's civilian cars and trucks have kept rolling, have carried extra loads, saved precious hours and energy during these critical war years.

On the battle fronts of the world, GM's military vehicles and weapons of war have withstood powerful punishment and unusual wear and tear. Skilled woodworkers who, long years before had helped Robert McLaughlin fashion carriages of enduring quality, have been called out of retirement to put the same workmanship into the wooden fuselages of incredibly fast Mosquito Bombers.

And after Victory, when General Motors reconverts to peacetime requirements, Canadians can look forward with confidence to the continuance of finer craftsmanship in GM's production of "More and Better Things for More People".

FIGHTING SPREADS THRU WIDE AREA OF ATHENS
THIRD BRIDGEHEAD THRUST ACROSS THE SAAR

One British Officer Killed in Sharp Machine-Gun Fire

British War Cabinet Holds Long Session on Situation

By STEPHEN BARBER
(AP Staff Writer)

Athens, Dec. 6 — (AP)—A British Sherman tank and a platoon of British soldiers seized headquarters of the left-wing E.A.M. party by storm today as fighting spread through wide areas of Athens.

The Communist party building on Constitution Square also was taken. Parachute troopers forced the main entrance with grenades, and seized 18 armed Communists there.

Fighting with tanks and machine-guns broke out after snipers of the E.L.A.S. — the militia of the E.A.M., National Liberation Front — fired on a truckload of British troops before dawn, killing one and wounding another.

A Sherman tank was sent to batter in the door of E.A.M. headquarters, and British troops charged the stairs, scattering E.A.M. defenders with half a dozen bursts of fire, and cleaning up floor by floor.

One British soldier was killed by a bullet through the head while searching the building. Most of the defenders apparently escaped, but 83 prisoners were taken.

Establish Control

British troops are establishing control from the centre of Athens by degrees, working out in concentric rings. Sniping continued incessantly throughout the city,— with occasional bigger thumps from grenades and machine-guns.

Sherman tanks attacked machine-gun nests of the National Liberation Front forces located in housetops and other commanding positions. Fighting flared around the Temple of Seus, Hadrian's Gate and along a wide path from Averoff Stadium to the Acropolis.

A British communique issued this morning said:

"In defiance of all orders both from the Greek government and Maj.-Gen. R. M. Scobie, E. L. A. S. troops continued to advance toward the centre of Athens, overwhelming police posts and even firing on British troops on guard duty.

"British and Greek regular forces have now gone into action in support of the civil power."

Fighting broke out before dawn as snipers in the Plakka district opened fire on the truckload of Tommies passing along the main Piraeus road.

Reinforcements Coming

E.L.A.S. reinforcements were reported en route to the city from outlying provinces. The E.L.A.S. form the fighting branch of the left-wing E.A.M. (National Liberation Front), whose opposition to the present Greek government flared into a series of disorders Sunday.

Scobie, British commander of Allied forces in Greece, said it might be necessary to inform British and American authorities soon that the port of Piraeus would be unable to handle scheduled relief shipments because of the E.A.M. strike.

Scobie has declared the E.L.A.S. guilty of mutiny. Its members are technically under his command.

The residents of Athens were not venturing onto the streets today as the fighting took on this more serious nature, following overnight reports that E.L.A.S. units were marching on the strife-torn city from the outlying provinces in support of an attempted Left-Wing coup d'etat.

Situation Shaky.

In Athens itself, the Greek government situation last night remained shaky while sporadic disorders occurred and a general strike still tied up the flow of Allied relief supplies.

Scobie issued a communique saying British tanks had fired "a few rounds in houses held by Left-Wing elements which were attacking the civil prison, where a number of alleged collaborators were held."

Themistakles Sophoulis, 85-year-old dean of the Greek Liberal party, declared yesterday that Prime Minister Churchill, through instructions to British diplomats in Athens, had vetoed replacing Premier Papandreou in a government change that might have solved the crisis which came into the open Sunday with a series of disorders.

Papandreou offered yesterday to resign in favor of a coalition cabinet under Sophoulis.

By E. V. W. JONES
(AP Staff Writer)

London, Dec. 6 —(AP)—Britain's war cabinet met last night to discuss the situation in Greece, where British tanks are reported to have fired on members of the E.L.A.S., underground army of the Left Wing National Liberation Front (E.A.M.)

Foreign Secretary Eden and Prime Minister Churchill may participate in a full debate on the subject Friday as asked by the Labor Party.

These activities indicated the seriousness with which the situation in Greece is viewed, emphasized by an United States note which disclosed a policy at variance with Britain's and a warning in parliament that relations with Russia might become involved.

Britain's position, as stated by Mr. Churchill in the House of Commons yesterday and in newspaper editorials, is that she seeks only to maintain order until the people of Greece can peaceably elect a government of their choice. It is denied that British arms seek to maintain Premier George Papandreou or any faction in power.

The situation developed when permission to demonstrate was withdrawn from the E.L.A.S. forces after the E.A.M. called a general strike which coincided with the resignation of six Leftist members from the government. The announced intention was to force the resignation of Papandreou.

E.L.A.S. is estimated to have a strength of 60,000 armed men, plus its own police force, and gained considerable experience in guerilla warfare in fighting the Germans.

Secretary of State Stettinius' statement concerned Italy in particular and stated the United States had told both Britain and Italy that it expects the Italian people to solve their cabinet crisis without "outside influence."

This was accepted as a reproof in Britain, since Mr. Eden had told the Italian government that the appointment of Count Carlo Sforza as foreign minister would not be a "happy choice.".

Mr. Stettinius' statement added that the American "hands off" policy "would apply to an even more pronounced degree with regard to governments of the United Nations in their liberated territories."

The British view is that law and order must be maintained until the liberated peoples may vote even if "blood must be shed to prevent greater bloodshed."

A hands-off policy would be an open door through which any group with power might prevent an orderly return to democratic processes, or the election of the government of public choice, it is felt.

"Papandreou's policy and utterances concerning E.A.M. have been hostile and provocative," said the Daily Mail editorially. "On the other hand the action of E.A.M. in declaring in general strike, thus preventing the Greek people from receiving the food supplies which they so desperately need, is incredible folly."

BRITAIN WITHIN HER RIGHTS EDEN TELLS COMMONS

Statement Follows U.S. Declaration of "Hands-off" Policy in Italian Affairs

London, Dec. 6 (CP — Foreign Secretary Eden asserted flatly today that Britain was within her rights in trying to shape the governments of liberated countries.

Speaking to the House of Commons a day after a United States declaration of a "hands-off" policy in Italy, Mr. Eden stood by the British government's veto of the proposed appointment of Carlo Sforza as Italian Foreign Minister.

Edward R. Stettinius, Jr., United States Secretary of State, had announced yesterday in Washington that the United States did not oppose Count Sforza and felt the Italians should be allowed to form their own government without outside interference

Mr. Eden's stand—clearly of significance in the reshaping of a post-war Europe—brought divided sentiment in the House.

Cries of "no" met a suggestion by Ivor Thomas, Labor, that Britain "withdraw gracefully" and admit that "a blunder has been made".

Words Apply to Future Action.

Just as Mr. Stettinius implied that his "no-interference" statement was a far broader declaration than the immediate issue of Count Sforza, so Mr. Eden apparently applied his words to the future of all liberated Europe.

"I must repeat to the House that I maintain the British government has a perfect right to express an opinion to another government about a minister under conditions such as these," Mr. Eden said.

Count Sforza was minister without portfolio in the Italian government which resigned 10 days ago, and Mr. Eden said Britain did not oppose his holding a job other than that of foreign minister. Ivanoe Bonomi, who once resigned as Italian Premier, still is trying to form a new government.

The British press commented sharply on the American note. It was rude and meant to be so, said the Manchester Guardian. The Yorkshire Post said it smacked of self-righteousness. Both newspapers recalled British opposition to the American-supported Darian administration in North Africa.

Will Debate Controversy.

Mr. Eden announced a full-dress debate for Friday on the crisis in Greece.

G. R. Strauss, Labor, asked Mr. Eden whether Britain had taken its position without consultation with other Allied governments. He said he wanted to know also how the foreign secretary could reconcile it with Bonomi's "complete denial."

"As regards the first part of the question," replied Mr. Eden, "perhaps you will be good enough to await a question I am going to answer in a moment or two about other governments.

"As regards Signor Bonomi's statement—he said 'Count Sforza and I are old friends and even when we have disagreed on any particular question I have never had reason to doubt his personal friendship to

DEBATE IS SHARP ON CONFIDENCE MOTION IN HOUSE

Expected Vote on Reinforcement Question Will be Registered Before Weekend

By JAMES McCOOK
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Ottawa, Dec. 6 —(CP)— Its temper short and its proceedings sometimes heated, the Commons yesterday continued its sharp debate on the government confidence motion with the expectation of a vote before the weekend.

The House continued to hear varying opinions on the order-in-council under which authority was given to send 16,000 home defence army men overseas.

Hon. Dr. H. A. Bruce (PC-Toronto Parkdale) and George Black (PC-Yukon) both withdrew statements suggesting that the government's policy would cause the deaths of men overseas by delaying the supply of reinforcements.

Arthur Slaght (L-Parry Sound) said he suggested that John Bracken, Progressive Conservative National Leader, was "timorous" in explaining his party's position on overseas conscription. The House was noisy when Gordon Graydon, Progressive Conservative House Leader, rose to reply to this statement and Mr. Graydon finally sat down protesting that for the first time the House had refused him a hearing.

Lt.-Col. Hugues Lapointe (L-Lotbiniere), a front-line soldier and son of former Justice Minister Lapointe, said he would vote against the government as he could not support the overseas conscription policy.

In the Senate, which completed its special sittings, Senator W. A. Griesbach (PC-Alberta) said the government's policy meant that Canadians were being asked to pay too high a price for national unity and the government should be prepared to carry out total conscription.

Senator J. A. Calder (PC-Saskatchewan) said the overseas conscription problem was not confined to Quebec but existed in every part of Canada. Everyone hated conscription but nation after nation had been forced to adopt it because of necessity.

Reserve Army Continued

When the House sitting opened, Navy Minister Macdonald, speaking for Defence Minister McNaughton, said that the reserve army of 100,000 part-time volunteers would be continued into the post-war period and its units as far as possible would be perpetuated in some continuing role.

Streamlining of the army will be continued to effect economies without detriment to the welfare and efficiency of the force and without destroying the organizational framework which will be maintained.

SOEST REDUCED TO RUBBLE HEAP BY RCAF CREWS

Along With Hamm, the Two Most Important Rail Junctions in the Reich Bombed

London, Dec. 6. (CP)— Eight hundred American heavy bombers, escorted by 800 fighters, attacked Germany's No. 1 Synthetic Oil plant at Merseburg and the railroad yards at Bellefeld today.

The 3,000-ton raid took place under adverse weather conditions and results were unobserved.

A day-long series of raid warnings by German radio indicated that at least two more heavy bomber assaults were under way —one by the U.S. 15th Airforce from Italy and another by R.A.F. Lancasters from Britain.

The raids came after night R.A.F. and R.C.A.F. attacks on railyards at Hamm and Soest, the two most important railway junctions in Germany.

An R.C.A.F. dispatch said Soest was reduced to a mass of rubble. Reconnaissance pilots reported fires burning throughout the target area from which two Canadian bombers failed to return.

Almost 1,400 Britain-based American bombers and fighters bombed the enemy capital and Munster, knocking down 91 German planes against the loss of 12 bombers and 11 fighters.

Twelve hundred American dive-bombers and mediums and 1,000 British and Canadian planes operating from France, Holland and Belgium worked over nine railyards in Western Germany and gave day-long support to troops in the front-line. Three planes were lost.

Neutral Assurances Not To Give Refuge To War Criminals

London, Dec. 6 —(CP)— All Neutral countries "that have been approached" now have given satisfactory assurances that they would not give refuge to war criminals, Foreign Secretary Eden revealed in the House of Commons today.

The issue arose when the Foreign Secretary was asked whether "all neutral countries have given undertakings not to harbor war criminals."

Mr. Eden said that "the governments of all neutral countries which had been approached on this matter had now given certain asurances," and he added "broadly speaking the British government regarded these as not unsatisfactory."

REDS RIP INTO ZONE GUARDING S. W. GERMANY

Storm Past Southern End of Lake Balaton To Within 40 Miles Of Austria

Moscow, Dec. 6 (AP)— Russian armored columns plunged within 40 miles of Austria today, storming past the southern end of Lake Balaton in Western Hungary and ripping into the final defence zone guarding the southwestern German frontier.

Front dispatches said task forces from Marshal Feodor I. Tolbukhin's 3rd Ukrainian army already had stabbed deeply into the confused enemy flank behind the rail junction of Magykanisa, 10 miles from the northern Yugoslavia border and 46 from Austria.

The major rail line north of Wiener Neustadt, big German aircraft manufacturing centre, and Vienna was reported blocked by Russian artillery.

The Austria-bound Russians sprang forward from the area of Marcali, reported captured yesterday.

Tolbukhin's triumph in massing his forces along most of Lake Balaton's southeastern shore gave him a pivotal base for flinging out encircling arms to the northeast around Budapest, Hungarian capital, and to the southwest around Zagreb, northern Yugoslav city and capital of Croatia.

Extreme Boldness

Russian vanguards, moving with extreme boldnes, were probing the rolling countryside between the lake and the Drava river, beyond which thousands of Croatian partisans loyal to Marshal Tito are said to have gone over to a fierce offensive against possibly 100,000 German troops still reported in northern Yugoslavia.

In the push to cut off Budapest, Tolbukhin's forward elements were reported very close to Nontact with Marshal Rodion Y. Malinovsky's right flank established on Csepel Island, in the Danube south of the capital. Malinovsky's troops have been besieging Budapest from the southeast for days.

Established New Bridgehead

London, Dec. 6 (CP)—The Germany agency Transocian said today the Russians had crossed to the west bank of the Danube from the 30-mile-long Csepel Island, south of Budapest, establishing a new bridgehead, and another enemy broadcast reported loss of Ercsi, on the west bank 20 miles south of Budapest.

"Parallel to the operations in this area," one broadcast said, "other attacks are in progress aiming to pin down German forces along the entire Hungarian front. Very fierce fighting occurred at Miskolc."

Weather Forecast

Northern Ontario: Partly cloudy and comparatively mild tonight and Thursday with scattered snowflurries.

Lake Superior and Kenora and Rainy River: Moderate to fresh winds; mostly cloudy and comparatively mild today and Thursday with scattered snowflurries.

Allied Supplies of Ammunition Still Rationed on West Front

By WES GALLAGHER
Associated Press War Correspondent

With the U.S. 9th Army in Germany, Dec. 6 (AP)—Despite a considerable improvement in army supplies, which has allowed full-scale operations, artillery still is being rationed on the Western Front.

During quiet periods artillery commanders are instructed to conserve supplies for future operations. Some local operations do not get full support during these lulls because of the ammunition shortage. Batteries are put on quotas, which are lifted only when the High Command strikes with a full-scale effort.

A great deal has been said concerning the reasons for the shortage. At first it was ports and transportation, which the army's rapid advance outstripped, but now port and rail facilities are such that every army on the Western Front can be supplied for an indefinite period for a full-scale offensive if the goods are available in Britain and America.

The production of ammunition for guns of larger calibre than 105-mm. has gone steadily upward since the start of the war; instead the chart of large calibre ammunition production over the past three years hits a peak and then dives steeply down.

This apparently was because military and civilian production chiefs, trying to keep a close check on the trends of warfare to avoid large surpluses, reacted toc quickly to temporary situations on the fighting fronts.

The war in Europe also is lasting longer and becoming more costly than perhaps the top-flight planners thought.

Thus overnight a critical ammunition shortage developed. The crisis now is past, but there is still not enough ammunition and the lack of it probably will prolong the war.

Smoking Factories Of Saarbrucken Under Gun Fire

Inflict 9,000 Permanent Casualties Daily on Huns

By JAMES M. LONG
(AP Staff Writer)

Paris, Dec. 6 —(AP)— The U. S. 3rd Army thrust a third and wide bridgehead across the Saar today northwest of invested Saarlautern, entered Sarreguemines and shelled the smoking factories of Saarbrucken over open gunsights.

Beyond Saarlautern, where Americans were mopping up the last fitful opposition, Lt.-Gen. Patton's assault troops were well within the Siegfried Line defences and assaulting its pill-boxes, block-houses, trenches and tank obstacles with flame-throwers, cannon and bayonet.

On the Allies' extreme left flank no action was reported on the sectors held by the 1st Canadian Army and the British 2nd Army.

Canadian Front Quiet.

The Canadians still were engaged in routine patrol warfare in German territory east of Nijmegen, although flood-water from the smashed Neder Rhine dikes had forced them to withdraw from some of their forward positions in the Arnhem-Nijmegen "island."

The British troops were drawn up in strength along the west bank of the Meuse river, opposite the vital border bastion of Venlo which guards Germany's Ruhr district.

The new Saar crossing was made along a 2½-mile stretch between Saarlautern and Merzig by the 90th Division, which spanned the navigable stream at four places along the stretch. The original crossing was inside Saarlautern on an intact bridge, and the second was fashioned south of that city late yesterday.

Lose 5 Divisions Weekly

German casualties, excluding the lightly wounded, were estimated officially at 9,000 a day on the whole western front.

It was estimated that seven Allied armies — five of them fighting on German soil and two others drawn up along the Rhine river boundary in the south — were inflicting 9,000 permanent casualties a day on the Germans. These figures, which include prisoners as well as killed and seriously wounded, mean the GeGrmans are losing about five divisions a week.

Allied losses in this grim war of attrition are veiled in secrecy but are bound to be heavy. It is known that losses in much of the present fighting on German soil will surpass by far anything known in Normandy. Probably the toll being taken on both sides was exceeding almost anything in the military history of western Europe.

A French Army spokesman estimated that the German Army in the past six months has lost 2,500,000 men plus the services of 60 satellite divisions — some of which now are fighting the Germans. Of the losses, 1,150,000 Germans were killed, wounded and captured in France, he said, adding that Germany's man-power shortage now is so critical that the enemy can only bolster the fighting front at the expense of vital war production.

Parts of City Aflame.

Peril to Saarbrucken, capital of the Saar and a city of 135,000 centring 70 square miles of coal fields, increased by the hour. Troops within sight of the city from heights six miles away set parts of it aflame with constant and increasing barrages. Sarreguemines, a French border town of 14,000, lies eight miles southeast of the capital on the Saar.

The 35th Infantary Division advanced up to seven miles in liaison with tanks to enter the edge of Sarreguemines, itself a major coal producer. Troops closed on the town from two sides. Off to the right of Patton's 40-mile front solidly inside Germany, the 4th armored and 26th Infantry Divisions rolled up to three miles northward through Lorraine toward the German Siegfried Line.

Comparative quiet prevailed again on the Roer river front within 22 miles of Cologne. The US. 1st Army completed the capture of Bergstein, at the edge of the dank Hurtgen Forest. Bergstein lies half a mile from the Roer and six southwest of the river citadel of Duren.

The U.S. 9th to the north reported only patrol and artillery action in the area between Julich and Linnich, the outskirts of both having been reached. Both sides had taken frightful casualties along the Roer. The two American armies appeared to be refitting, regrouping, and resting for the next plunge.

Condemned Men Granted Stay Of Execution

Toronto, Dec. 6 (CP)— George and Anthony Skrypnyk of Port Arthur today were granted a stay of execution until next March 1. They were to have been hanged today at Fort Frances for the hot stove torture murder of Mrs. Viola Jamieson of Flanders, Ont.

The reprieve, granted in the Chambers by Chief Justice J. A. Hope of the High Court of Justice for Ontario. It followed a similar stay of execution for William Schmidt, who also was to have been hanged today. Chief Justice Rose granted the stay in Schmidt's case late Wednesday to permit an appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada. A fourth man convicted in the case, Eino Tillonen of Port Arthur, had his death sentence commuted to life imprisonment earlier in the week by Federal Department of JJustice.

Parents Kneel And Sing

Fort Frances, Ont., Dec. 6 (CP)—When Mr. and Mrs. William Schmidt of Fort Frances learned yesterday that their 29-year-old son, William had been granted a stay of execution until March 1 they kneeled in the kitchen of their home and sang the hymn: "Praise God From Whom All Blessings Flow."

"Our prayers have been answered," said Mr. Schmidt.

A few minutes later Sheriff C. L. Sundin called with official word on the stay of execution.

Jap War to Cost 71 Billions Yearly After Nazis Defeated—Somervell

New York, Dec. 6. (AP)—Conquest of the Japanese will cost the United States $71,000,000,000 a year "after Germany is defeated", Lt.-Gen. Brehon Somervell predicted today.

"The war against the Jap alone will be the biggest war this country or this world ever fought before the present war", asserted the commanding general of the Army Service Forces.

Somervell declared 30,000 more war workers are needed at once on critical programs as he appealed for an "upsurge of production" in a speech prepared for delivery before the National Association of Manufacturers.

Secret weapons are being produced that "must be ready in large quantities for the Pacific pushes", he declared. The devices are "not yet in use in Europe".

For the first time munitions are being used up faster than they are being produced, said Somervell, warning that the full fury of the war in Europe may not even have been reached and "we are certainly not yet full out against Japan".

Germany "with its undeniable fiendish skill and efficiency is right now training thousands of fresh troops and turning out millions of tons of equipment for them", the manufacturers were told.

"Within the past 90 days we have had to increase by 25 per cent our estimate of the production we believed we would need to fight the Japs after Germany is defeated", said Somervell.

Somervell acknowledged heavy cost in ammunition and equipment, while reminding that "this nation has committed its troops to fighting the war in one specific fashion—with an overwhelming superiority of materiel . . .we would rather fire a ton of munitions than lose a single American soldier".

Election Numerical Coincidences Noted

Someone at the City Hall has dug up a new criterion upon which future aldermanic elections may be based. It is the humble telephone directory and the efficient person with an eye for coincidents may have started something which will give both present and future city fathers some pre-election worries — if such people are superstitious.

For instance the vote polled by Alderman Harold Armstrong at the recent civic elections was exactly the same as his telephone number — 1373. Going further afield, the keen-eyed numeral sleuth in the City Tower, discovered that the vote for the two-year term for alderman jibed with the vote polled by Alderman "Ted" Follwell, namely 1964.

All of which may be purely coincidental and which may explain the hurried thumbing of dog-eared phone directories, by city poppas, during the past 48 hours.

Big Schools Herring At Point Traverse

Point Traverse, Dec. 6 — Out into Lake Ontario, ten miles beyond this harbor, vast schools of herring have been found. Catches taken during the harvest averaged from 1,000 to 3,000 lbs. per boat.

Lifts of whitefish taken from shoal waters this past fall were only fair, stated fishermen. Whitefish brought good prices during the run, and favorable weather prevailed during the harvest.

Commercial fishermen are today receiving better prices for their catch than they did a few years ago, according to the following listed offerings that local buyers were quoting. In Nov. 1932, herring prices were 3 to 6 1-2c, whitefish 4 to 8 1-2 cents and lake trout 9c to 10c per lb.

Closing Date

Although no official notice has been received as to the closing date of the Duck Island lighthouses, it is expected that beacons will be shut down on or about Dec. 15.

BRITAIN WITHIN

me.' That would almost apply to Mr. Strauss and myself."

Asked for a second time whether the United States and Russia had been consulted beforehand on Britain's attitude toward Count Sforza, Mr. Eden answered, "no."

No Objection to Sforza

He then explained that "the British have no objection to Count Sforza being a member of the Italian government—he has in fact been such a member for some time past." The form of his statement implied that Britain's objections were solely against Sforza becoming Foreign Secretary.

The discussion was broadened to include Britain's policy in other liberated countries.

Mr. Eden said that any action taken by Allied troops in Belgium was carried out under instructions of Gen. Eisenhower and that while Belgium remained a zone of military operations the Supreme Commander must be free to take whatever action he thought necessary to keep order.

Asked if United States authorities were in agreement, Mr. Eden replied "yes, so far as I am aware."

When Ivor Thomas, Labor, asked whether the government's views were being modified in the light of the United States statement in favor of a hands-off policy in Italy, Mr. Eden replied:

"I can assure you that my answers are revised up to the very last minute."

"I explained the attitude of the British government in my statement of Dec. 1," said Mr. Eden. "The statement subsequently issued by Signor Bonomi in no way modifies the views of His Majesty's government."

Not a Good Choice

Eden said Dec. 1 that British authorities "did not feel Count Sforza would be a particularly happy choice as Foreign Minister" and accused Sforza of working against the Italian government of Prime Minister Ivanoe Bonomi, who was co-operating with Britain. Bonomi later denied that Sforza had worked against him and said he felt Mr. Eden meant the Badoglio government instead.

"Do you seriously mean to maintain the attitude that Count Sforza has worked against Signor Bonomi when Signor Bonomi says that that is not so?" asked Sir Richard Acland, leader of the Left-Wing Commonwealth Party.

"I have said what our position is," replied Mr. Eden. "I have nothing to add."

Rights of Workers Protected Under Present Labor Code Minister Tells Cheese Makers

Hon. Charles Daley Gives Address to Delegates of Cheese Makers Convention

Speaking before members of the Central Ontario Cheese Makers' Association here Tuesday afternoon at their 17th annual convention, Hon. Chas. Daley, labor minister for Ontario, told listeners that labor would not stand to gain if socialistic doctrine were to be adopted in Canada.

Under present day legislation the rights of workers are protected, while a program of social security doing much to guarantee full employment and continued prosperity is being put in readiness for adoption. Added to this is the fact that Canada has practically unlimited national resources.

"If we can supply full employment and continued prosperity for workers in the post-war era there should be no adoption in Canada of any system which destroys initiative and awards those who shirk their responsibility," stated the labor minister. "If we work together we can look to the future with hope because when our boys come home from overseas we will be able to supply full employment at fair wages."

Traced Cheese Industry

Appreciative of the fact that he was speaking to an audience whose life interest was that of the cheese industry, Mr. Daley cited the early history of cheese making, indicating coagulation of milk and the rudiments of cheese making had been known to the ancients 1,000 years prior to the Christian era. He referred to the growth of the industry in Canada from its inception until it reached its peak around the turn of the century and stated that he had been astounded to learn that the Canadian production of cheese had fallen from a peak of over 200 millions of pounds in 1900 to approximately 163 millions of pounds last year. "In contrast to this, however, home consumption of cheese had risen," he said.

Must Retain Market

The minister saw a tremendous work ahead if foreign markets were to be retained for Canadian cheese in the post-war period. "Canadian cheese was a commodity, which must be exported as production was far above that of domestic demand," he said.

Turning to labor Mr. Daley likened this commodity to a pendulum, which he said swung too low during the depression years. In contrast to this, during war years labor had been scarce with result that labor costs had risen. The duty of a labor minister was to act as a leveller and in case of the cheese industry keep things in line, always considering that Canada is an exporting nation.

The minister outlined what legislation had been put into effect by the Drew government and by preceding governments to benefit workers and to help assure constant employment at fair wages.

Speaks on Legislation

He told of the activities of the Industrial Standards Act and its efforts to end sweat shop conditions; the compensation act; and of the Industrial Labor Board and its setting of minimum wages. Through more recent legislature hours of work per week had been limited to 48 with workers guaranteed vacations with pay, while the regional war labor board adjusted wages in keeping with conditions existent in each particular district. The Labor Relations Board decided which union organization would represent workers in industry.

Apprenticeship training program would be greatly enlarged following the war to help adjust rehabilitated war veterans into peacetime activities. "Many soldiers now fighting overseas had never worked at civilian trades as they had gone directly from school into the services," said Mr. Daley. All of this legislature had been brought into being to help assure workers a fair share of their efforts.

Reviewed History of School

Dr. A. L. Gibson, superintendent, Eastern Dairy School, at Kemptville, stressed the importance of dairy school training for cheese and butter makers, and reviewed the history of the Kingston dairy school which he said had recently celebrated its 50th anniversary. Observance of anniversaries mean little however, he said, unless progress is reviewed.

Reviewing the growth of the cheese industry in Ontario, Dr. Gibson stated that the first cheese factory had been established in Oxford county in 1864. Thirty years later there were 900 factories in Ontario, 300 more than there are today. The speaker claimed the period between 1864 and 1894 "a period of transition" wherein farmers of the province turned from wheat growing to dairying. This transition he asserted was a godsend.

Speaking of organization in the various branches of the dairy industry Dr. Gibson stated he felt there should only be one association, claiming that where all branches had their separate organization no one branch could prosper on the decline of the other.

One of the foremost objectives of any dairy school should be the demonstration that better cheese and butter could be manufactured there than at country factories, where possibly conditions may not be as favorable. Lack of sufficient staffs had made this demonstration impossible at the Kemptville school and the speaker asserted a full time staff was necessary.

Quality Important

Importance of quality of product was such that a rebirth of the pioneer spirit shown by those responsible for the establishment of dairy schools was necessary if Canada was to hold her place in the post war cheese export market, stated the speaker. The price of export cheese on the post-war market would be decided by the countries competing who could supply at a cheaper price.

Establishment of a system of payment for milk wherein a standard sanitary quality was set as the basis rather than by butter fat content would be fairer to the farmer who sent clean milk to the factory, in the opinion of Dr. Gibson. The present system of payment for milk was unfair to the farmer sending clean milk when the price he received might be lowered by dirty milk reducing the grade of cheese.

Tribute Paid Makers

Mackenzie Robertson, of Belleville Creameries, spoke briefly in tribute to cheese makers for the high quality of cheese manufactured and for the completion of another season's hard work despite a shortage of labor. "He recognized," he said, "that cheese makers were already overworked, but suggested in the post-war period that makers undertake to give greater care to their whey cream. With proper cooling a vastly better quality of whey butter would result.

Mr. Gordon McLean of the Montreal Provision Trade Board indicated that from a bargaining standpoint there was little for him to discuss as the destination of cheese and the price to be received was predetermined under wartime regulations. He trusted however that the war would soon be concluded when a return to normal trade would be possible. For that period he pledged the support of the trade board to do all in its power to market Canadian cheese abroad.

Rev. A. J. W. Myers of Tabernacle Church opened the afternoon session with invocation while members of the Association and officials were welcomed to the city by Mayor Harry Rollins and to the county by Warden Thomas Fleming. Response on behalf of the Association was given by John H. Dudgeon of Thomasburg, veteran cheese maker and acting secretary for the convention. Guest speaker, Hon. Chas. J. Daley was introduced by R. D. Arnott, M.P.P.

Council Approves 2 Skating Rinks For Children

Rinks Will be Operated on East and West Hill Playgrounds

Two skating rinks for the children of this city will be immediately erected by the City council and will be under direct supervision and have all facilities according to a recommendation passed by that body at their regular meeting on Tuesday evening. A number of the members wished to have rinks placed at two schools in different sections of the city but Ald. Clapp, chairman of the committee in charge thought it advisable to have the two good ones and if they were a success, more could be erected early in the New Year. An amendment to have the two rinks at the East and West playgrounds also two more at Pine Street and King George School was defeated and the original motion was carried. These rinks will be of the meagre construction, simply a skating cushion and the area will be flooded and kept in good condition. There was a suggestion that two hockey cushions be erected but the majority of the council favored having only the skating rinks.

To Hire Foreman

The hiring of Frank Sparks at $40 weekly as Public Works foreman brought discussion and objection from Ald. Clapp and several other members. Ald. Clapp maintained that to maintain democracy the position should be advertised and that the salary to be paid for higher than the man was getting that was formerly doing the job. "This has all come out of the interim report" said Ald. Clapp and "I thought the committee was formed to discuss the wages and staffing in the City Hall, I think some returned man should get this job and Ald. Trudeau agreed with his suggestion. Ald. McDougall expressed the opinion if he was hiring a man for his business he would select his own man. He stated that Mr. Sparks was a veteran of the First Great War and that the chairman of Public Works was satisfied that he be hired and capable of doing the work.

Says There Is Difference

Ald. Allin thought there was a difference in hiring a man for your own business and hiring one for the city because the members were responsible to the taxpayer. Ald. Follwell was of the opinion, that the applicant filled the bill and would vote for the motion. The motion was carried and Ald. Clapp asking for the Yeas and Nays, the vote was recorded Yeas, Butler, Chamberlain, Clarke, Follwell, Hyde, McDougall, Pringle, Wilbur and Woodley. Nays, Allin, Armstrong, Clapp and Trudeau all expressing the principle that the job should be advertised.

Mr. Fred Rawson, manager of the Rawson Bus Line appeared before the council requesting that parallel parking be instituted along Front Street to prevent a recurrence of the incident of last week, when his busses were unable to operate because of the congestion on that street due to a heavy snowfall and the irregular parking of cars. At the close of the discussion Aldermen Armstrong and Clapp with Chief Probert were appointed a committee to meet Mr. Rawson on this matter. Mr. Rawson stated he was at the meeting primarily for the safety of the people and to devise ways and means to get factory workers to their employment on time. "You must understand that the bus line is handling between 5,000 and 7,000 passengers a day and if Front St. is not kept open it is impossible to maintain schedules. Ald. Allin suggested that the busses be routed up Pinnacle street, when congestion occurs but Mr. Rawson stated this was not feasible because a route could not be changed in a minute. "We have to give service" said the manager. Ald. Clapp suggested that parking be allowed on only one side but some members objected to this as it might have a tendency to decrease business.

Not Regular Occurence

Ald. Woodley enquired if what happened on Saturday last was a regular occurence and Mr. Rawson replied in the negative and Ald. Armstrong stated that Mr. Rawson was not there with a complaint but to give an explanation of the difficulty he was up against. "I will admit that the conditions on Saturday were dangerous" said Ald. Armstrong but the storm broke with such suddenness and at a time when the traffic would be the heaviest, that the condition did arise and that he could appreciate Mr. Rawson's difficulty in trying to maintain a schedule. Ald. Chamberlain suggested that the busses and the drivers co-operate. The committee reported before the meeting ended stating that one solution would be to rope off one side of Front Street and clean it and go to the other and this was accepted by the council in principal. Snow removal was also discussed in the form of a recommendation that the clerk write Niagara Falls, Ontario, to secure information as to how snow is removed in that municipality it being reported they have a fine system.

Motion Introduced

Ald. Woodley introduced a motion requesting the clerk to write the School Board requesting that all school sidewalks be shovelled of snow after each storm. Ald. Clapp wanted to know why so many people were left off the voter's lists and why it was the assessor did not visit each home individually and find out who is living in the different places. Ald. Clarke on his enquiry as to the progress of the committee appointed to confer with outside municipalities with respect to fire protection, Ald. Woodley, chairman of the committee stated a report would be in council for next meeting. Three by-laws were passed for the transference of property. Ald. Clarke announced that the Treasurer has received the two mill subsidy from the Ontario government amounting to approximately $33,000. Ald. Allin congratulated the City Clerk on the fine handling of the election machinery and which was voiced by the remainder of the council.

Ask for Survey

At the committee meeting of Thursday night Ald. McDougall, who has interested himself in the Moira River survey moved "that the Clerk of the City of Belleville be requested to write the Hon. Dana Porter, Minister of planning at Toronto with respect to making a survey of the Moira River Valley on the same basis as the Ganaraska watershed, as soon as practical, with a view to controlling floods, conserving water and preventing soil erosion and that a copy of the resolution be sent to the County of Hastings, the Village of Tweed and the various townships located in the Moira River basin" and this motion was accepted unanimously in open council. The City Engineer was instructed to prepare the estimated cost of erecting two hockey cushions of regulation size and the cost of four skating areas on the westend playgrounds, the eastend playgrounds, at King George School and Pine Street School.

To Call for Tenders

The comptroller was instructed to advertise for tenders covering the market tolls and fees for 1945. Street lights will be placed near 8 Isobel street and 6 Russell street. A committee of Aldermen Trudeau and Follwell was appointed to contact Mr. Walter Hamilton and endeavor to obtain information regarding the use of a tractor equipped with snow plough to be used for cleaning snow from sidewalks. The City Engineer was requested to report on Mr. Deline's sign at the corner of McDonald Avenue and Dundas Street east re permission obtained for the erection and to ascertain what transpired regarding the investigation carried on some time ago and also the possibility of taking out the boulevards. There being no further business the council adjourned.

DEBATE IS SHARP

Mr. King said he took full responsibility, as president of the Privy Council, for distribution of 87,000 copies of his recent radio speech by the Wartime Information Board. He said it was in essence an appeal for public support of the recruiting campaign for voluntary enlistments.

His appeal had been justified. In the 26 days since it was made 6,297 men had volunteered for general service. Of these 2,701 were from the home defence army and 3,596 from the general public and reserve army.

Market Till 1946

Agriculture Minister Gardiner said that Canada had been informed beef cattle exports were not required in the United States at present but a market for Canadian processed beef was assured in the United Kingdom until the end of 1946.

J. G. Diefenbaker (PC — Lake Centre) said that the government had perpetuated discrimination and inequality of service by imposing only partial conscription, and in failing to fave the situation had endangered "the last vestige of unity in this country."

The Prime minister dared not tell the people that he would see additional men of the 60,000 home defence army effectives would be made available for overseas, but the people should be told.

The matter could be finally decided only by giving the people an opportunity by way of an election, when they would demand equality of service and sacrifice in the war.

Confidence in Minister

Mr. Slaght said he had confidence in Defence Minister McNaughton and the policies he supported. He hoped Gen. McNaughton would require commanders in the field to make full, regular and accurate reports on the exact reinforcements position; that ample reinforcements would be provided to meet these needs; that men who had been wounded should not be allowed to return to the front line until they had made complete recovery and that men who have been overseas for years, with front line service, should be granted leave to return home.

Mr. Slaght said he is retiring from politics at the end of the present parliament. In the past he had differed from his party, notably on the question of monetary reform. He had no apologies for that.

His actions in the Banking Committee last session in co-operation with G. G. McGeer (L-Vancouver Burrard) had been condemned as time wasting by leading members of the "Tory party" and some Liberals. Yet as a result one of the large banks had been compelled to "disgorge" more than $2,000,000 to the public treasury in taxes which would otherwise have gone into inner reserves. That was more than the cost of a session of parliament.

Mr. Slaght said he came to Ottawa prepared to vote against the government if it did not take action to send reinforcements overseas.

"I believe the course taken by the Prime Minister and Gen. McNaughton is the proper course to take," said Mr. Slaght.

The Progressive Conservatives were using "political trickery" in their amendment to the government confidence motion. Mr. Bracken should be available to answer questions in the House, where he has no seat. He suggested that Mr. Bracken was "too timorous."

Mr. Graydon rose on a question of privilege and the House was noisy with interruptions. Speaker J. A. Glen called for order.

Finally Gave Up.

Mr. Graydon finally sat down after saying he had tried to obtain a hearing five times and had not been successful.

Armand Choquette (BP-Stanstead) said the Bloc Populaire Party opposed any kind of conscription. The order-in-council was passed for "political expediency" and to satisfy opposing views within the government.

Men were being sent to their death on the battlefield because the government sought to avoid a crisis. If Liberal members supported the government on the confidence motion they would "be kissing the hand of their murderer before he struck the final blow."

Speaker Glen said Mr. Choquette's latter remarks represented a blot on the escutcheon of the House and members assented when he suggested they be struck from the record.

Hon. Dr. H. A. Bruce (PC-Toronto Parkdale) said the Canadian people would not be satisfied with any "half-hearted and uncertain" conscription measures such as the government proposed but wanted an all-out war effort.

"This is simply one more shameful episode in five long years of eager searching for the line of least resistance," he said.

Mr. King had promised the government would resort to conscription for overseas if the need became imperative.

Words Expunged.

"However, the Prime Minister prefers to break his pledged word and sacrifice the lives of our Canadian boys on the battlefields of France and Italy rather than lose votes in the Province of Quebec," said Mr. Bruce.

Speaker Glen said the words used contravened the House rules and Dr. Bruce finally agreed to withdraw them and have them expunged from the House record.

Shortly afterwards, Mr. Black made a comment on the government position which Speaker Glen said he understood to be similar to that used by Dr. Bruce. He again asked for withdrawal and Mr. Black acceded.

Mr. Black said Gen. McNaughton might have stayed with his troops overseas instead of leaving them to go into battle without him.

Critical of McNaughton

"He came home, was promoted after coming home, and on top of that he treats himself to a cabinet plum worth from $12,000 to, if he can be elected, say $16,000 a year.

"That is not McNaughton the soldier, the idol of the army, the idol of Canada. That is McNaughton the politician, the fallen idol, the idol with feet of clay".

Mr. King said he had not interrupted Mr. Black in his references to Gen. McNaughton "because I have been considering the source from which his remarks are being made."

Mr. Black said his source would be found quite as reliable and respectable "as some other courses." He could not support the government in its present "makeshift policy."

F. G. Sanderson (L—Perth) said he would support the government with the hope that before the January session begins Gen. McNaughton will be able to send overseas all the reinforcements needed by the men overseas.

The government to date has "a record second to none" among all our Allies in this war, Mr. Sanderson said.

The people were war conscious but not in a party sense.

Get on With War

"They want the government to go on with the war," he said, "and this government or any which succeeds it should bear that in mind."

The people were not thinking of parties and party advantage. They were thinking of victory and peace. The casualties were heavy and would continue so for a long time to come. The war was far from over. The people of Perth county were "strong for conscription."

Convinced that the measures taken by the government would be carried out by Defence Minister McNaughton and would provide the reinforcements required, he proposed to vote against the opposition amendment and support the motion of confidence in the government.

Col. Lapointe said he could not "go back" on the views opposed to compulsory overseas service he had expressed to his people, especially when he was not convinced that the action taken by the government was necessary for winning the war and the security of Canada.

Can't Vote With Govt.

He regretted that because of the wording of the confidence motion asking the House declare it will assist the government in maintaining a vigorous war effort, he would not vote with the government and thus express his confidence in the leadership Mr. King had given. There was no one else the people he represented would want to see as Prime Minister, but on the other hand they could not forget the breaking of a pledge which to them was sacred.

"I hope that the task to which the Prime Minister has devoted his whole life, and the national unity which he succeeded in realizing in Canada, will not come to an end because of the present issue."

There was unity among Canadians fighting at the front and the same spirit should be displayed on the home front.

Clarence Gillis (CCF—Cape Breton South) said he felt that former Defence Minister Ralston had been "let down by someone" and was not responsible for the situation which developed. He should not have resigned from the Defence Department but should have remained and made changes.

Mr. Gillis said he did not think 16,000 men would be sufficient reinforcements and others would have to be sent.

Harry Leader (LP—Portage La Prairie) said the change in government policy to partial conscription represented a "somersault."

Admired U.S. Policy.

As a Liberal Progressive member he had admired the United States system under which none was exempted from military service if physically fit.

"I want to say that I can vote against the government and intend to do so when the vote is taken, with clear conscience and wishing them luck," he said.

Aselius Denis (L—Montreal St. Denis) said he believed Mr. King could have avoided the situation which now had developed and he regretted that a lack of foresight has resulted in the need to resort to compulsion for overseas. He would vote against the government on the main motion.

Prime Minister Mackenzie King said he had "made no promise to anyone" that this partial conscription order would be the last one brought down by his government.

Made No Promises.

Mr. Diefenbaker asked the Prime Minister whether at any time during the last week or so he had "given assurance to any group or bloc or member of parliament that this is the last order in council that will be brought down by this government?"

Mr. King replied: "May I answer my Honorable friend at once. I have made no promise to anyone."

Mr. Dierenbaker retorted.

"That is exactly the point I have been making. The Prime Minister dare not tell the people of Canada that he intends to see that the 42,000 men (drafted infantry potential) are made available for overseas service and that there will be further orders in council"

IN MEMORIAM

AYLESWORTH — In loving memory of my dear daughter, Bessie Bernice Aylesworth, who passed away December 6, 1932.

No one knows how much we miss you,
No one knows the bitter pain
We have suffered since we lost you,
Life has never been the same.
In our hearts your memory lingers,
Sweetly, tender, fond and true.
There is not a day dear Bessie,
That we do not think of you.

—Ever remembered by Mother, and brothers, Harold, Garfield, Pte. Edwin with the armed forces in Italy.

AYLESWORTH — In loving memory of my dear sister, Bessie Aylesworth, who passed away twelve years ago today, December 6, 1944.

A light is from our household gone,
A voice we loved is stilled,
A place is vacant in our home
Which never can be filled.
Time won't heal the broken heart,
Time won't make the wound less sore,
Time will never stop the longing
For a loved one gone before.
There is a link death cannot sever,
Love and remembrance live forever;
Oh, for the touch of a loving hand
And the sound of a voice that is stilled.

—Sadly missed by Mother, Brothers and myself, Pte. T. E. Aylesworth.

To The Electors of the City of Belleville:

I wish to take this opportunity to sincerely thank the electors for their wonderful support Monday, and wishing you the Compliments of the season.

Alderman C. R. Clapp

Prof. Langford Talks on Planning At Kiwanis Club

"Community Planning" a subject, that the City of Belleville is vitally interested in at the present time was the subject of an address by Professor George B. Langford, Director of Planning and Development, under the portfolio of Hon. Dana Porter, Queen's Park, Toronto, at the weekly luncheon of the Kiwanis Club held at the Quinte Hotel on Tuesday. The meeting was held in the main dining room of the hotel owing to the regular luncheon room being occupied by delegates to the Central Ontario Cheese Makers Association. Jack McVeigh was in the chair with Harold Carruthers as songleader and Bill Navin at the piano. Albert Jones collected the several fines.

Ald. Frank Follwell and Mayor-elect for 1945 and one of the most active Kiwanians thanked the members for their fine support at the polls, when he was introduced to the club. Aldermen Lorne McDougall, Jack Trudeau and Ormonde Butler also members of the club, who were re-elected on Monday also were asked to rise and receive the congratulations of the club. Regret was expressed by the president, that Bob Pringle failed to make the grade for re-election. Cliff Baragar reported, that the Blood Donor canvass for the city by the members was exceeding expectations and hoped the boys would continue the good work. He stated there would be only the completion of the team's canvass now operating before the Christmas season and it is hoped that enough donors have been secured to keep the clinic busy until after the new year.

More Blood Donors.

Bill Steer, chairman of the committee stated there were 30 on hand to give blood on Thursday night last with 16 being new donors, while on Sunday there were 135 donations made, 62 of which were from Belleville and 31 of them new donors. Congratulations were extended to Jack and Mrs. White, they having recently celebrated their 25th wedding anniversary. Anthony Cekota presented J. O. Herity with his new book "The Battle of Home", which described the emigration of his people from Czechoslovakia to Batawa near Frankford. Mr. Herity thanked Mr. Cekota sincerely for the honor of having the first book released and was sure that it would make a ready sale as it was a most interesting contribution to the literature of this country and showed that the Czechs would in the immediate future make a grand contribution to the life and art of this Dominion.

Inaugurated in May.

Introduced by A. B. Collins, K.C., Professor Langford stated, that the department which he represents was inaugurated in May of this year by the Minister and himself and its purpose was to assist in the rehabilitation of the veterans and also contribute help to municipalities, which are seeking community planning. He stated a successful conference was held in London and another would be held in Kingston immediately after the New Year. He said progress had been made in surveys of the Grand, Thames and Ganaraska rivers and some surveys have been made for municipalities. "In Community Planning" said the speaker "we are only trying to maintain the Canadian way of life and that does not mean a city of slums, people on relief, those unable to pay hospitalization because we wish to eliminate those things," said Professor Langford. He showed, that the planning for D-Day was the greatest the world has ever seen and which will ultimately result in victory. "In this country we must start on a new program," said the speaker "because we can see what is happening in France, Greece and Belgium. We do not expect that here but we must change the rules. No government can make plans because, that will be regimentation but the government can offer suggestions to municipalities and assist in their planning."

Ten-Year Plan.

"Lovely big gardens and beautiful thoroughfares is not the idea of department for planning," said Professor Langford, "but we would like to see the municipalities undertake planning for new schools, new construction, hospitals, sewage disposal, slum clearance and better transportation." He showed that soil erosion was causing plenty of waste and that this should be thoroughly investigated and any plans, that are made should take in all classes of citizens not the fortunate few. He stated, that the department was working on a ten-year plan of housing that would construct 5,000 new houses in the Province each year. This would give employment to many and stimulate the industries, that have to supply the houses with everything from a kitchen sink to the rugs on the floor. He stated, that our democracy will not take another beating like it took in the last depression and a boom and then a depression must be fought at all costs. "If we can dig up so much money for war we certainly can find the money for peace", said the speaker.

He urged the city fathers in Belleville to look over their city and see if there were enough playgrounds for children, enough transportation facilities and enough housing because local planning will create local jobs. He thought that money would be available at a low rate of interest sufficient to interest municipalities in planning for the future. Kiwanis appreciation was expressed by I. L. Moore.

2,000 Home Defence Troops 'Go Active'

Ottawa, Dec. 6 — (CP) — More than 2,000 home defence troops "went active" during the two weeks ended Dec. 2 while enlistments from the public and from the reserve army during the same period totalled 1,900, Defence Headquarters announced yesterday. The announcement did not give the exact figure for home defence "conversions" but said it was higher than "in any previous fortnight" and that it was 30 per cent higher than the previous fortnightly record, which was in the two weeks following the invasion of Europe last June 6.

REV. J. G. SPARLING IS INDUCTED AT CHRIST CHURCH

Time-Honored Ritual is Conducted by Lord Bishop of Ontario

With the beautiful and time-honored ritual of the Church of England the Rev. J. Grant Sparling, recently appointed rector, was inducted by the Right Rev. John Lyons, Lord Bishop of Ontario, into the incumbency of Christ Church parish before a very large congregation on Tuesday evening.

The members of the clergy present besides Bishop Lyons were Rev. F. C. Beaser of Roslin, Rev. John Brownlie of Marmora, Rev. J. Cantrell of Milford, Flt. Lieut. the Rev. J. de P. Wright of Mountain View Bombing and Gunnery School, Rev. A. Beauchamp Payne of St. Thomas Church, Belleville, the Rev. Northcotte R. Burke of St. John's Church, Ottawa, Rural Dean W. J. Robinson of Tweed, Rev. C. C. Brazil of Stirling, Rev. E. N. Grant of Wellington, who acted as Bishop's chaplain

The Service

The service opened with the order of evening prayer taken by the Rev. Everett Smith, Mr. George Meads, lay reader of Christ Church, reading the lesson. For the induction service the Lord Bishop and clergy moved from the sanctuary to the steps of the chancel where the newly incumbent stood before the Bishop who was seated while the declarations were read. The declaration of assent was read by Rural Dean Rev. W. J. Robinson of Tweed. Bishop Lyons thereupon inducted the Rev. Mr. Sparling in these words, "I do now induct you into the real, actual and corporal possession of this church with all the rights, privileges and emoluments thereto belonging."

The church wardens, Ernest W. Vanner, rector's warden, and Horace Wright, people's warden, presented the keys of the parish church to the incumbent with the words, "On behalf of this parish and in obedience to the mandate of the Bishop of the Diocese I present to you the keys of this church in token that we acknowledge you as lawful incumbent of this parish." Rev. Mr. Sparling acknowledged the keys as the pledge of their recognition of him as the appointed minister.

Procession

Then followed the impressive ceremony of the procession of the bishop and clergy to the font where the Bishop read the words of Christ from the 28th chapter of the Gospel of St. Matthew and repeated the admonition to the minister respecting the sacrament of baptism and preparation for confirmation. The clergy then proceeded to the prayer desk and in turn to the lectern, then to the pulpit and to the altar, the duties of the minister being defined at each station.

The minister pledged his word for the performance of the duties of his office.

During this part of the service, the choir and congregation sang the appropriate verses of the hymn "I Love Thy Place, O God."

The Sermon

The Rev. N. R. Burke who delivered the sermon expressed his pleasure in being asked to preach at the induction of his friend, the Rev. J. Grant Sparling. "All I can say to this congregation is, I congratulate you," the preacher stated. "Be good to him and keep him as long as you can."

He called upon the people to go with the minister all the way. Evangelism is the great work of the church and there are great obstacles in the way.

If the Christian Church is going to keep the people once it gets them the people will have to get dullness out of the Christian church. "We need churches that are alive. Can you imagine some not finding the doctrine of Jesus Christ thrilling?

"Do not let the people talk defeat in the church. There are more hopeful things than we have seen in many a year.

"Each one of us is an evangelist of some sort or kind.

"To some people the church means a comfortable place to sit in and a place where one puts the smallest coin on the plate.

"We should get new members and every member should have a job to do in the church. You cannot leave it all to your rector.

"Evangelism has to be done through the people. Tremendous things should happen. An evangelistic church will then be a missionary church."

Rev. Mr. Burke told of one congregation which increased its missionary givings three hundred per cent through its evangelistic and missionary spirit.

"We want to bring back the children into the church and father and mother with them," he said.

Mr. George Maybee, organist at St. George's Cathedral, Kingston, played at the organ for the service. The choir in charge of Mr. Arthur Simpson sang an anthem.

At the close of the service a reception was held for Mr. and Mrs. Sparling in the Parish Hall at which Mr. Arthur Simpson was in the chair.

Reception in Parish House.

The Rector's Warden, Mr. E. W. Vanner read an address of welcome on behalf of the Christ Church congregation, "I wish to welcome to our city and parish our new rector and his wife, Mrs. Sparling. We feel we are fortunate that our Lord Bishop having in mind a man so well equipped to carry out the work of this parish has seen fit to appoint a man of Mr. Sparling's qualifications. Somehow I feel tonight that our late rector is with us in spirit sharing the knowledge that the torch he has laid down has been taken up and held high by our new rector.

"For us this congregation the duty is to keep it burning brightly and go marching forward together for Christ Church.

"We trust you will be blessed with many happy years in your ministry here and that looking back through the years you will be able to say that you spent the most fruitful years of your ministry with us in Christ Church, Belleville. May God's blessing be with you both is the earnest wish of this congregation".

The Rev. J. A. Dilts of Holloway Street United Church, representing the Belleville Ministerial Association, brought greetings.

The Right Rev. John Lyons, Bishop of Ontario, spoke in happy vein of the occasion of the induction and expressed the confidence of the successful incumbency of Mr. Sparling.

Alderman Frank Follwell, who was the day before elected as mayor for 1945, brought words of greeting on behalf of the city and the council and said that he had attended the induction of Mr. Sparling and he would be pleased to have the new rector attend the inauguration of the incoming council.

Rev. Mr. Burke of Ottawa, who has long been a friend of Mr. Sparling saw happy augury in the appointment of Mr. Sparling to Christ Church parish.

The new incumbent spoke appreciatively of the welcome. Mrs. Sparling and he had received in Belleville and expressed the hope and faith in the future of the parish.

At the close the Ladies' Guild members under the direction of Mrs. Theobold served refreshments of tea, coffee, sandwiches and cake.

Kingston Presbytery Of Presbyterian Church Meets at St. Andrew's

The Presbytery of Kingston, Presbyterian Church in Canada, held its regular quarterly meeting on Tuesday in St. Andrew's Church. Rev. R. C. MacLean of St. Andrew's Church, Trenton, the Moderator for the ensuing year presided for the first time. The absence of two members, Mr. A. B. Baird, elder representative from Belleville and of Rev. A. E. Cameron of Pittsburgh was noted and expressions of sympathy ordered sent to them with good wishes for speedy recovery. Rev. A. E. Cameron having sustained a broken shoulder in a fall a short time ago.

Routine business occupied a good part of the time. Rev. C. E. Kidd, Gananoque, convener of the "Budget" Committee made an interim report comparing givings of the congregations within the Presbytery with givings for the same part of 1943. The name budget covers funds raised for the work of the church outside the local congregational expenses. His report could not give the complete picture as the year ends on January 31st; but a satisfactory increase was indicated. For 1945 the Presbyter. received the allocation of $9,800 as sent down from the Synod of Toronto and Kingston and apportioned the responsibility to raise this amount to the congregations by a general increase of ten per cent on the allocations for 1944.

At the afternoon meeting a nominating committee suggested the name of Dr. H. L. Stewart, of Halifax, as the Presbytery's nominee for the vacant position of Principal of Knox College, to succeed the retiring principal, Dr. Thos. Eakin. Nominations were invited by the college Board for the vacant chairs of Old Testament and of New Testament, but the Presbytery did not offer any names for appointment to these positions.

A resolution covering the sale of liquors on V-Day was passed as follows: Resolved that this Presbytery desires to have all beverage rooms and other places of sale of intoxicating liquors closed throughout the Province on the day in which victory is declared.

The pension fund as touching congregational obligations towards its establishment was carefully considered and the various congregations of the presbytery were asked to do their utmost to meet their payments promptly.

Regarding the observance of religious ceremonies on V-Day the Presbytery sent through its ministers and lay members instructions to all Presbyterians under their care to be guided by pulpit announcement of local congregations covering the fullest co-operation in community services of thanksgiving and the fullest support to any denomintional service their own particular church may undertake.

The next regular meeting is to be in Belleville on Tuesday, March 5th.

HONEY PRODUCTION DOWN

Toronto, Dec. 6 (CP)—Estimated honey production in Ontario for 1944 is 26 per cent below 1943, G. F. Townsend, Provincial Apiarist, told members of the Ontario Beekeepers' Association yesterday. Chief cause of the decrease, he said, was the weather. A total of 15,034,000 pounds of honey was produced this year by 203,000 colonies of bees.

CANADA SELLING NATION SAYS LABOR MINISTER

Thurlow Progressive Conservative Association Addressed by Hon. Charles Daley

Development of her natural resources to the point of maintenance of continuous, profitable and productive industry, is the hope of post war Canada, the Hon. Charles Daley, Ontario Minister of Labor told the Thurlow Progressive Conservative Association at its annual meeting in Cannifton Tuesday night.

"I do not feel pessimistic about the future," he said. "I think that with the tremendous natural resources of Canada; with her greatly increased capacity of industry; with the skill of her workmen; with the incentive, initiative and courage of her people, that if we accept our responsibilities, take interest in the affairs of province and country and do our part to have Canada maintain the prosperity of today, we can give reasonable employment at reasonable hours weekly, so that when the boys come home they can say 'This is Home'."

Canada can go much "roadbuilding" the Minister said, "but we must not forget we are a selling nation. With the magnitude of our resources compared to the size of the nation, we cannot hope to consume all we can manufacture. We must be competitive. Competition depends on cost, and cost depends on labor."

Keep Industry Active

"The Dominion," he went on, "is faced with the problem of keeping all her industries active and get for labor all that can be paid, keeping in mind the economic possibilities of world markets.

"We need in this country a form of social security so we can grow old gracefully and not impoverished. My idea of social security is to develop the economic situation of the country and provide jobs for all willing to work, and assistance for the sick and the aged."

How to get these jobs? he asked. By continuous, profitable productive industry. That is the hope of the country.

He warned his audience of the "insidious vicious type of National Socialism that has been tried and failed miserably in other countries, which is now creeping into Canada."

"It has grown to the point where it is strong. If it is allowed to go on and if independent people do not use their influence to combat this menace, it can grow until it destroys the things which built up this country. It will destroy initiative, the labor of pioneer forebears, skill courage and capital. That means you farmers," the minister added, "for in their eyes you are capitalists, too."

"We must be serious about this thing," he said, "if we are to develop Canada sanely and progressively. The Liberals and Conservatives have done much for the dominion down through the years, building it up commensurate with her economy. These people would tear it down."

Defended Stand

The minister defended labor's stand of a forty-eight hour week. "Now the radicals want to make it forty," he said "but forty-eight hours is a reasonable length of time to work at present day high-speed labor." He favored the week-holiday plan for "industry profits by people who rest properly and come back contented."

Speaking on the present situation at Ottawa, the minister stated that it was his opinion that "your boys and your sons, the kids down the street, who are doing such a swell job over there, are entitled to all the reinforcements and equipment available. There should be equality in service," he added, "and that means conscription, where one Province takes the same responsibilities as the others."

The Hon. Mr. Daley was introduced by Roscoe Robson, M.P.P., and the appreciation of the large crowd present expressed by Chairman Fred Mitchell.

Brief Session Features Opening Of County Council

Addresses by Warden Thomas Fleming and County Clerk Eric Denyes, who was recently discharged from hospital after undergoing a serious operation, featured the brief opening session of the Hastings County Council in Shire Hall on Tuesday afternoon. Important committee meetings necessitated the brevity of the meeting.

Warden Fleming expressed his pleasure at the recovery of the county clerk, whom he personally thanked for his assistance during the past year.

"There is one thing we are all agreed upon," he said, "and that is that we are all thankful for the advances made in the war effort during the past months. If there ever was a time when we must back the boys overseas with all the man-power, equipment and supplies possible, that time is now."

The Warden explained that he had departed from traditional council procedure by eliminating the annual warden's banquet this year. "On the advice of several friends, I have decided to cancel the banquet and place the equivalent in money in the coffers of a war organization to help the boys overseas. If there is any blame attached to this procedure, it is purely mine."

Tribute to Cheese Makers

He paid tribute to the Central Ontario Cheese Makers Association now in convention here. He had watched their efforts with a good deal of interest down through the years and the splendid advances in the production of cheese in this part of Ontario are due to their efforts. He thanked his councillors for the co-operation given him during the year and asked their careful attention to the matters to come before the body during the present session.

County Clerk at Session

County Clerk Denyes told the council he had gone "absent without leave, purely on his own initiative, but it could not be helped." He expressed appreciation of the many kindnesses shown him by council during his sojourn in hospital and for the assistance extended by the warden. He paid special tribute to Miss Ruth Dunning, his assistant, for the efficient manner in which she had carried on the administrative work during his absence.

During the brief business session of the meeting several applications for county auditors were read and referred to the council as a whole on by-laws. The council resumed the regular sessions this morning.

(CP)—A mass meeting of employees of the Firestone Tire and Rubber Company plant yesterday voted to return to work, ending a four-day sitdown strike involving 1,300 employees of the company. William England, president of Local 113 of the United Rubber Workers of America, told the meeting he had assurance from J. P. Nichol, department of Labor Conciliator, that a priority had been arranged for the hearing of their dispute by The Ontario Regional War Labor Board. The decision to return to work was based on the assurance that the hearing would be held by Dec. 15.

Everett P. Yorke To Head Thurlow Conservatives

Mr. Everett P. Yorke was the unanimous choice of the Thurlow Progressive Conservative Association as its 1945 president at the annual meeting held in the Orange Hall, Cannifton, last night. He succeeds Mr. Fred Mitchell.

Other officers elected are: 1st Vice President, E. C. Townsend; 2nd Vice President, Douglas Atkins; Secretary Treasurer, Seldon Homan. Poll chairman are, Poll 1, Bert Charlton; Poll 2, Dave Rollins; Poll 3, James Bunnett; Poll 4, R. Stapley; Poll 5, Stanley May; Poll 6, Frank Easton; Poll 7, E. P. Yorke; Poll 8, Alfred Wickett; Poll 9, Cecil Ketcheson and Poll 10, Fred Gray.

Mrs. Bert Docter was elected president of the Ladies' Association at the same meeting. 1st vice president is Mrs. Arnold Mitchell; 2nd vice president, Mrs. D. Osborne; secretary treasurer, Mrs. F. Mitchell and pianist, Mrs. Harry Harrison.

Present were a number of outstanding party men of the county and province. The guest speaker was the Hon. Charles Daley, Minister of Labor for Ontario, whose address appears in another column; Roscoe Robson, M.P.P.; Mr. William Davis, Maple Leaf, president of the East Hastings Progressive Conservative Association; Mrs. Douglas Atkin, president of the East Hastings Ladies' Association; Mr. W. E. Tummon ex. M.P.; Reeve George MacDonald and others.

No Waste of Time.

The election of officers of both organizations was ample evidence to use the words of the Hon. Mr. Daley, of spirit and efficiency. The members of the men's association held their conclave in one end of the hall; the women in the other. In a comparatively short time, the elections were over. "It reflected the confidence the members here have in each other," Mr. Daley said. "That is easily seen in the lack of argument and saving of time."

An outstanding program of entertainment was provided for the occasion. The Donovan children, talented Belleville dancers headlined a variable bill with their singing and dancing versatility. Mrs. William Insley was heard in a vocal solo as was Jack Clark. Mrs. Clark gave a clever reading "Freedom" and the lusty baritone voice of W. E. Tummon was heard in several Scottish numbers, with Mrs. Harrison at the piano. Mrs. Harrison also gave a humorous recitation and Miss Arkell entertained with Hawaiian songs with ukelele accompaniment.

Mr. Robson, Reeve MacDonald and Past President Mitchell gave brief addresses during the meeting. Refreshments which were served at the close were preceded by the unannounced tap-dance of a stranger, whose feet were unable to deny the lilting strains of an Irish jig played by Mrs. Harrison.

Warning to the Huns

Germany in her resistance and scorched earth policy is to make the situation harder for herself and to multiply her sufferings and hardships, General Eisenhower has warned the German people. For the German army is going to be defeated and the armies of the United Nations will advance and occupy more and more of German territory until Nazism and the German armies surrender or are forced to be crushed.

The warning to the German people is that the scorched earth policy does not affect the Allies who carry their own food but it will be of grave import to the Germans for "the hopes of the German people to avoid economic collapse after the defeat are largely involved in opposition to the Nazis' projected destruction of German property and natural resources, before occupation of the Allied troops. In putting the torch to their country to halt the Allies, the Germans are raising up a mountain of economic and other trouble for themselves in the future.

The General's warning that no compensation will be allowed for such destruction of public utilities, mines and so forth should show the Germans the futility of destroying the very things they may need for their use after the war is ended. If the German forces make Germany a desert, Germany will remain a desert for the German people. Even the fanatical Nazis and the German people who have done the will of the Nazis will find out that what the Nazis destroy they themselves have need of.

The Two "Queens"

The British Mutual Aid White Paper and the President's seventeenth report on Lend-Lease describe among other things the important assistance given to the United States by the British Merchant Navy. On February 8, 1943, Admiral Land had said, "Our troop movements would not be possible but for Britain's large troop carriers," and the two documents now reveal not only that 865,000 American troops were brought to Britain in British ships in one year to July 30,1944, but also the remarkable achievements of the world's two biggest liners, the "Queen Elizabeth" and the "Queen Mary," in bringing 320,500 of that number—more than one in three—equivalent to well over twenty divisions.

Both ships were built by the world-famous firm of John Brown of Clydebank. The "Queen Mary," 81,235 tons gross, launched on September 26, 1934, with accommodation for 3,500 passengers and 1,500 crew, and a speed of over thirty knots had in the three years twice won the Blue Ribbon of the Atlantic, temporarily losing it in 1937 to the French liner "Normandie."

The "Queen Elizabeth," 83,673 tons gross, has received less of the limelight, being launched in the autumn of 1938, and making her maiden voyage to New York unheralded in the fateful year of 1940.

The "Queen Mary" was laid up in New York from September, 1939, to March, 1940, but since then has sailed to many of the world's greatest ports—Rio, Capetown, Suez, Bombay, Singapore and Sydney, besides numerous returns to New York. At one time the German pocket battleship "Luetzow" was out in the Atlantic seeking her unsuccessfully, and the Germans actually claimed the "Queen Mary" had been sunk a few days before she arrived safe at Rio.

Both "Queens" brought American reinforcements to Australia in time to stave off the threatened Japanese invasion. In all, the "Q-M" made six voyages to Australia alone in the first three years of the war. But her most notable achievement was in the summer of 1942 when Rommel was at Alamein. She brought troops and supplies representing half a division to Suez via the Cape—a 12-thousand mile voyage—in a few weeks. In doing so she probably saved the situation in that most critical theatre at that most critical time.

In 1942 she was on active service in every ocean and carried tens of thousands of troops. She had already begun bringing American troops to Britain. The figufes in the documents, of course, refer only to east-bound traffic. West-bound, the "Queens" have been crowded to capacity with other forces—airmen for training in Canada under the Commonwealth scheme and British merchant seamen to man the new ships built in the United States. The latest mention of the "Queen Mary" was the announcement that she carried Mr. Churchill to and from Canada for the Quebec Conference in September, 1944.

The "Queens" in their war careers have given outstanding proof of the excellence of British marine engineering. Their engines have maintained a maximum speed on runs far longer than those for which they were originally designed. This speed has provided quick and safe passage for hundreds of thousands of troops to all the main battle fronts except the Russian. Their speed of over thirty knots is too high for convoys, but it is also too high for U-boat interception. (It is reported that the "Mary" once sailed through a pack of some 25 U-boats without their being able to train their torpedoes in time.) The normal capacity of 5,000 passengers and crew on the "Mary" was more than doubled in the complement of 16,000 reported on one occasion. This involved wholesale alteration, panellings torn down to accommodate more bunks, the swimming pool boarded over for extra mess decks, the kitchens enlarged to feed extra numbers, though even so on some voyages it has been possible to serve only two meals per day.

Will There Be Lean Crop Year?

(Time Magazine)

The U. S. War Food Administration last week hedged against a long war and bad weather. Farmers were told that the crop goal next year will be 364 million acres, four million acres more than farmers planted this year for the greatest harvest on record.

Six weeks ago farmers were thoroughly alarmed by a dark prediction; since the war was nearly over, the U. S. would be stuck with stock-piles of food that would glut the markets and scuttle prices. Last week DFA decided that this prospect had faded. If the European war runs through the winter, stock-piles of wheat, corn, etc., will soon be down to reasonable sizes. Typical example: in three years the U. S. has consumed 400 million more bushels of corn than it produced.

But more than anything else WFA was wondering about the weather. The U. S. has had seven fat years, three of them yielding record crops. The lean year is overdue. If the weather next year is "just normal" WFA expects food production to average 5 to 10 per cent under 1944.

Won't Get Stale

One thing to look forward to after the war is bread that won't get stale. It will stay fresh for two weeks—just as fresh as when it came out of the oven.

Girls in the British army are already making this new kind of processed bread. In fact, it was supplied to invasion troops who landed in Normandy.

Be It Ever So Humble

(Montreal Herald)

The home remains the cornerstone of society.

Recent surveys in connection with juvenile delinquency, crime prevention, education, national health—and they have been many—indicate that effective measures to correct social ills must start in the home.

The existence of homes and their quality emerge as essential factors.

If anyone was caught here by the heavy snowfall and the sudden advent of the winter last week, it is unlikely he will be caught again this season at least. While there are some who wait until winter is upon them before they start to prepare against it, most people had taken advantage of all precautions to be ready whenever the winter should come.

With municipal elections out of the way here, people can concentrate upon the war effort and their performance of duty and devote more attention to the Christmas season.

MAN'S GIFTS

They tell us man was made to mourn,
And earn his bread,
To rise for toil at early dawn,
Go late to bed.

But did he nothing more than feast,
From purpose free,
Then little better than the beast
Would mortal be.

But God gave him the gifts of dream
And thought and prayer,
And love of sky and field and stream
And all things fair.

God fashioned man high goals to gain,
Know false from true,
And, spite of care and grief and pain,
Greak works to do.

MONARCH OF ALL I SURVEY

The idea expressed by the familiar saying, "I am monarch of all I survey," is very ancient.

Lucius Seneca, who lived in the days of the first Caesars, expressed the idea in his "Letters to Lucilius," which were not really letters but a collection of maxims and moral remarks.

One sentence in Seneca may be roughly translated: "It is superior to all, the lord of all it surveys."

Apparently the English poet William Cowper (1731-1800) was author of "I am monarch of all I survey" in that particular verbal cloak.

In 1782 Cowper published his first volume of poems. This volume contained a poem entitled "Verses supposed to be written by Alexander Selkirk."

Four lines of this poem run as follows:

I am monarch of all I survey,
My right there is none to dispute:
From the center all round to the sea
I am lord of the fowl and the brute,

Alexander Selkirk, in whose mouth the poet put these imaginary words, was, in a measure, the prototype of Daniel Defoe's "Robinson Crusoe."

Selkirk was born in 1676 and was the son of a shoemaker and tanner at Largo, Scotland. When he was 19 he was summoned by the local kirk-session on charges of "indecent behavior in church." Instead of answering the summons Selkirk ran away and became a sailor.

In 1703 he joined Dampier as sailing master of the Cinque Ports galley in a privateering expedition to the South Seas.

Two years later while the Cinque Ports was at anchorage off Juan Fernandez Island, Selkirk quarreled with his captain and at his own request was put ashore with only a few ordinary necessities.

He remained alone on the island for four years and four months. He was finally taken off by Captain Woodes Rogers, who afterwards published the story of his voyages. In 1719, two years before Selkirk died, Defoe published "Robinson Crusoe," the main outline of which was suggested by the experiences of Selkirk on Juan Fernandez.

Raven as A Pet

(F. Warburton in Manchester Guardian)

—About six months ago we adopted a raven, or, more truthfully, he adopted us. In our ignorance at first we believed him to be a young crow. Nobody wanted him and his first advances were rejected. He was chased from every door of every section on the technical site. Eventually he took to the perimeter, where it was his habit to limp about with one wing dragging. Every W. A. A. F. driver who caught sight of him must stop her vehicle and get down to fondle the poor lame bird.

There was, and is, nothing wrong with his health. He is too lazy to look for food or he has never learned how to find it. Rather than have him starve to death we found a home for him in the M. T. section, a kindness which he has repayed by the theft of anything that glitters. Somewhere on this camp there is a robber's hoard of rings and brooches, threepenny pieces and silver coins. We have named him Ali Baba, because he is sharper than any 40 thieves.

Ali has his proper place as a recognized pet. He lives on everybody's freely given charity. Sitting on your shoulder, he will share your morning "break" and thank you for the crumbs by filching the fountain-pen from your pocket.

SORRY, NO BABY

Woman aged 33, has had three years sojourn in a tuberculosis sanatorium, for advanced pulmonary tuberculosis, was discharged from san four years ago, still takes pneumothorax treatment (collapse of affected lung by injections of air or nitrogen into pleural cavity at intervals of weeks or months). Her husband, she says, has chronic osteomyelitis in one leg (this, presumably, is tuberculosis of the bone marrow, though of course it may be non-tuberculosis).

Now the couple want to have a baby.

Would it be wise for them to do so? Could they have a healthy child? Even if a child would not inherit tuberculosis or osteomyelitis, asks the couple — it is notable that they both sign the letter — would the child inherit a tendency toward these diseases? Or would the child be weak and sickly?

No, the couple should not have a baby, at least not unless or until their doctor believes it would be safe — safe for the baby. Whether the osteomyelitis is tuberculous or not is unimportant — nothing hereditary or even communicable about osteomyelitis of any kind.

But the young woman's lung tuberculosis is presumably still active, else no further injections of nitrogen or air would be necessary. So she would be almost certain to infect a baby with tuberculosis if she nursed, cared for or kept the baby with her for any length of time, in spite of every meticulous care or precaution she might take to avoid infecting the baby.

No, tuberculosis, whether of lung, gland, bone or other tissue or organ, is not inherited. A child born of a tuberculous parent may be as healthy as any child — but unfortunately such an infant is almost certain to catch tuberculosis if the mother has the disease in active stage, and for this reason it is absolutely imperative that a baby born to a tuberculous mother be taken away from the mother and kept away from her, for the baby's sake. There is no exception to this, I believe.

When this couple ask whether their baby would be "weak and sickly" I suppose they mean with poor or low "resistance" — but I don't know what that means, so let's compromise on immunity, for immunity is something doctors do know something about. Candidly I have no idea whether a child born to such parents would have too little, a fair degree, or no immunity against tuberculosis. It could be easily determined, however, by applying to the newborn baby a tuberculin test.

Questions and Answers

Chewing Gum

Is chewing gum harmful after the sweet part has been swallowed or absorbed? (Mrs. S. E.)

Answer—No. Chewing wheat is better, I think. Try carrying a handful of plain wheat and chewing some when you want something to chew. Gives you desirable vitamin B complex for one thing. Send stamped envelope bearing your address for pamphlet: "Wheat to Eat" —do not send clipping.

I & T Club

I have been a member of the I & T Club for years — have found it keeps my hair looking so naturally dark that my friends are generally astonished when I tell them I touch it up to keep it that way. I add a few drops of olive oil. There is only one drawback — it rubs off on my pillow case. (Mrs. D. E. W.)

Answer—Seems as thought there's always something to take the joy out of life. All I know is that many readers have expressed satisfaction with the use of iron and tea to touch up their graying hair — of course it dyes the hair black or dark brown— Put a piece of copperas (iron sulfate, not copper) size of a bean in a pint of ordinary tea (black or green tea). Apply to gray hair as often as necessary, by drawing strands through soft cloth wet with the iron and tea.

Nurse The Baby

How long should a mother nurse her baby? (Mrs. J. E.)

Answer—Eight to ten months.

LONDON LETTER

By FRANK LOWE
Canadian Press Staff Writer

London, Dec. 6 —(CP)— Pictures streaming back from the fighting fronts to newspapers here show that the Englishman who in civilian life is a hide-bound devotee of the bowler hat and striped trousers school, develops, once he goes into battle, a flamboyance in dress which would daunt the imagination of a Parisian modiste.

Best known exponent of this dress revolt among the soldiers, of course, is colorful Field Marshal Montgomery. His corduroy slacks, leather jacket and beret liberally be-sprinkled with badges are as well known to picture magazine fans as Betty Grable's legs.

But it isn't so well known that this innovation in military dress was started by an unknown junior officer who boldly defied convention by wearing peacetime slacks with his battledress tunic.

"Monty" approved, and now, pictures show, officers appear in slacks varying in color from light fawn to dark brown. And there is also a story (unconfirmed) of a certain officer of the terribly-correct guards appearing in a pair of purple horrors.

This fad is an old one — a much newer one is the wearing of colored scarves made from parachute silk. Everybody who is anybody, sartorially speaking, wears them, returning soldiers say, and their testimony is borne out by pictures.

These show officers and men looping silk scarves of white, brown, yellow, striped and green around their necks — and they do things to a khaki uniform which the war office never intended.

Then, topping this, are hats that bear no resemblance to the prescribed tin derbies. British soldiers don't like steel hats, and they won't always wear them, even in the front line.

Instead they were sloppy berets, weighted down with metal tags including the flags of the countries they have liberated.

Another dress innovation which might, but apparently never does, lay a soldier open to the grim charge of being "improperly dressed," is that of wearing German belts complete with their eagle and swastika buckles. And hanging from these are generally prized lugers or other German weapons, highly valued because of their workmanship.

Holloway St. Group Presents Dramatic Sketch

The regular meeting of Holloway Street Y.P.U., was held on Monday evening, with the Citizenship group providing the program.

Shirley Hitchon, convener of the group, presided over the short business period. Maude Burke acted as secretary in the absence of Pat Thurston.

The Worship Service had as its theme "Happiness". Assisting the leader were Marjorie Dilts who read a story to show how sharing talents and possessions brings happiness to others and ourselves. Marjorie Tummon read an approriate poem, and Isobel Richardson played the piano.

The Citizenship group then put on a skit 'Seven In Search of Joy', the cast of which was—

Prince—Max Maguire.
Professor—Hildegarde Helliwell.
Courtier—Harry Denton
Merchant—Marion Daniels
Clown—Norma Arkles
Artist—Velma Thompson
Peasant—Jennie Burris.

The prince sent these seven subjects in quest of the most priceless treasure 'Joy'. Six of them sought diligently for it but to no avail. The seventh, the peasant, did not search as she was too busy making a living for her family, but in her life of service to others she found and experienced true joy.

Mrs. Denton and Mrs. Mott caused much merriment when they sang with feeling and pathos, "When You and I Were Young Maggie". Their quaint and clever costumes added much to the number.

Mr. Dilts spoke briefly, commending the group who put on the skit. "Happiness cannot be found by looking for it", he remarked "but rather it is a by-product of living a life of service".

The meeting closed with the Mizpah benediction.

"How Do We Follow Jesus Today," Theme Of Inspiring Sermon

(Contributed)

Preaching from Christ's call to the disciples "Follow Me" which is recorded in all the gospels, Dr. Myers in Tabernacle United Church Sunday evening asked "How do we follow Jesus today?"

Certainly each individual has his own "cross" to take but there are three ways in which the disciples had difficulties that concern us equally.

(1) Money matters. All the disciples could doubtless have earned more. Many events reveal that they rebelled against the lack of material things they might have had. Jesus himself, a good workman left a good trade to expound wildly new ideas.

(2) Getting along with people: In our homes the parents seem terrible old fogies to the young, the grandparents even worse. The young people are felt to be all wrong by their elders. Then there are the people we work with. They are not always easy to get along with.

(3) The humdrums daily grind: Jesus was tempted to do something spectacular, to throw himself from the pinnacle of the temple. When he talked of a Kingdom, those nearest to Him comprehend only an overthrowing of the temporal government. How dull we find the everyday contacts.

In conclusion, Dr. Myers pointed out that in order to follow Jesus today we must emphasis the value of the human individual and in order to do that we must support all social agencies for our brother man.

RAWDON

Surprise Party And Presentation To Earl Ruttan

Rawdon.—On Thursday evening, November 30, the Fourth Line tendered Mr. Earl Ruttan a surprise party at the spacious home of Mr. George Young and his mother, Mrs. Frank Young with a good representation despite the stormy evening.

All enjoyed a round of various games and at eleven Mrs. Percy MacMullen called the gathering to order and Earl was given a special seat of honor.

An illuminated address in booklet form with the signature of each one in attendance was read by Mr. George Young and Mr. Angus Johnson presented Earl with a nine-piece "Travelling Kit" in Morocco leather zippered case. The address was signed by Florence MacMullen and George Young.

Earl graciously thanked his friends for the lovely gift, thanked Mrs. MacMullen and Mr. Young for arranging the party and the Young family for the use of their home.

All enjoyed the refreshments served by Misses Alma Johnson, Doris Sine and Mrs. Sid Demorest, and at a late hour the guests departed homewards wishing Earl all kinds of prosperity and happiness in the Kingston district.

Earl has made many friends during his six years sojourn on the fourth concession when he came as a stranger from Port Hope.

During the winter of 1942, he was one of the cast of the play "The Loose Brick in the Chimney", which won the silver trophies, (South Hastings District) and (Belleville Presbytery), for Mount Pleasant Young People's Union.

Children of Mary Hold Meeting

The Children of Mary of St. Michael's parish met for the last time in the 1944 term on Monday evening last with about fifty Sodalists in attendance.

Miss Gertrude Lynch, president of the Sodality, announced that the new members would be received into the Society on Sunday evening, December 10. Reverend Sister Mary Lenore, directress of the Sodality, made an announcement concerning the procession for the occasion.

The patron of the Sodality is the Blessed Virgin Mary. Since, upon its affiliation to the Mother Sodality at Rome, the Sodality has been given the privilege of choosing a second patron, a discussion was held on this subject. The members chose Saint Ann, mother of the Blessed Virgin.

Madam President then asked for suggestions for an article on which to sell tickets and raise funds for the Sodality. A pair of blankets was decided upon, the tickets for which will be sold by the members.

Rt. Rev. Monsignor Nicholson and Major, the Rev. Father McCabe, visited the meetings displaying their interest in the activities of the Sodality.

Miss MacDonald of the Social Committee suggested that the Children of Mary hold a social evening in the Academy auditorium. As its contribution to the meeting, the Eucharistic Committee presented Miss Marcelle Thomas, who spoke on "Why Children of Mary Should Receive Communion More Often". Miss Thomas suggested that the Sodalists receive Holy Communion as a group on the aproaching feast of the Immaculate Conception. Miss Marie Doyle of the Publicity committee reported that the Sodality Bulletin was being published, and suggested the night of the party as a suitable time for distribution of copies to the members.

Our Lady's Committee represented by Joan McIntyre, Loyola Chapelle Mary Jean Hudson, and Teresa Meagher, presented a very successful skit to illustrate the virtue of hope and discourage despair. This original skit was the work of Miss Joan McIntyre. Miss Mariana Thompson, chairman of the Catholic Truth Committee, announced that a library for the Children of Mary is to be set up, and suggested that a sum of one hundred dollars be given by the Sodality to buy books. This motion was carried.

With Miss Mary MacDougall at the piano, the meeting closed with a sing-song of Christmas carols, in which all the girls participated.

Rare Old Paintings Highlight Talk On Apostles Peter, Paul

The Young Women's Guild of Tabernacle Church met on the regular Monday evening at the home of Mrs. Wm. Hunter, Albert St. Miss Lashbrook presided at a short business meeting when the Christmas donations to various relief funds were planned.

Miss Dorothy Kirkpatrick was in charge for the evening and gave a splendid word picture of the lives of Peter, the disciple, and Paul, the apostle. Highlighted in the background were oil paintings of Peter and Paul aglow with light and color which grew upon the audience as Miss Kirkpatrick recalled the stories of them as given in the Bible. Peter, chosen by Jesus, taught love by Him and forgiven though he denied his Lord; then leading the disciples to their ministry after His death. Paul, who persecuted the Christians until he saw the error of his ways and spent his life in Christian work and who penned the letter of love to the Corinthians. Peter was impetuous and loving and had only moments of greatness. Paul was a great man, steadfast and loving, who was able to write "I have fought the good fight, I have kept the faith." Both died martyrs.

Following a prayer Miss Kirkpatrick told the history of the paintings as far as it is known. Art critics on this continent are only able to say they are very rare and extremely valuable, but the artist is unknown. Miss Kirkpatrick obtained them from a family who descended from a German Count who acquired them probably while travelling in Spain about 220 years ago. They are painted upon wood and may have been two of a cathedral set. The Guild is indebted to Miss Kirkpatrick for allowing them to share her treasures and her thoughts.

A lively auction sale of seasonable goods was held and proved profitable with Mrs. Carl Read as auctioneer. A social hour ended the evening.

A "Help Yourself" Hotel

(From the St. Louis Globe-Democrat)

Taking a tip from self-service markets the Odorizzi brothers of Staunton, Ill., converted their 15-room hotel into a "help yourself" inn a year ago.

The wartime pinch, which sent service standards of most hotels hurtling earthward and closed the doors of others, merely prodded the ingenuity of Louis and Victor Odorizzi.

When their desk clerk got his "greetings" from Uncle Sam there was no gnashing of teeth nor haunting of local employment agency. Equipping the desk in the lobby with a supply of envelopes, an open register and keys to all 15 rooms, the Odorizzis decided to let John Q. Public look out for himself. A sign tacked above the door instructs the guest to register, choose a key, deposit his money in one of the envelopes along with his name, address and room number and climb upstairs to pleasant dreams, dragging his luggage behind him.

As well as curing the employment headache, managing a co-op hotel has given the Odorizzis a new confidence in their fellow man. Asked whether the "honor system" of collecting room rent didn't prove an expensive proposition, Victor came back with an emphatic "No!"

"Not one penny have we lost since we hit on this idea a year ago," he said. "The hotel is filled every night mostly with transient trade, and every morning the money is waiting on the desk when we come to collect . . . What's more, our customers don't walk off with linen, towels, ash trays and everything else that isn't nailed down."

Mexico City's Homelike Prison

(By George Waller, Jr. in "The Inter-American")

Prison without bars is a phase which has been promiscuously applied to any manner of loose confinement, but it was never more nearly true than at the Penitenciaria del Districto Federal in Mexico City.

No other penitentiary in the world is as free with privileges and liberties to its inmates as Mexico's "big house." Behind this is neither laxity nor graft in the prison administration, but a sympathetic understanding of the causes of crime in Mexico. Most of this is due to the vast poverty and ignorance of the country itself, and Mexico is determined to return to the streets better citizens than are daily funneled into her jails.

Most striking of Mexico's progressive prison reforms is the custom of conjugal visits to combat homosexuality. Introduced by Gen. Augustin Mustieles 10 years ago, this custom has been frenquently lauded by foreign prison authorities and urged for adoption by the American Prison association.

Second as an eyebrow raiser is Mexico's encouragement given to convicts to continue their former occupations and practice professions or establish shops in their cells. Prisoners who never knew such enterprise (over half) are urged to learn a useful trade in one of the penitentiary's workshops. Inmates who have no wish to work are not confined to their cells but are free to roam their respective gallery courts. Thus, a miniature economic and social system is set up within prison walls.

Profits, via both private and prison work, are retained by the workers, except for 30 per cent withheld by authorities until the convicts are released. Those who profit purchase supplies from prisoners engaged in other occupations, enjoy radios, magazines, better meals, and send weekly pay benefits to their needy families on the outside. Those who labor not at all live by conventional minimum prison standards and learn again society's maxim that you only get what you work for.

In return for such privileges, the administration of Latin America's largest and, in the opinion of many, the world's most progressive prison is rewarded by a population of unmatched morale—contented, comfortable in a prison routine which has made concessions to the pattern of everyday living, and harboring few schemes for revenge on society or jail breaks.

REUNITED

Some people say "It's a small world," but it was big enough to keep these two sisters apart for 22 years until they met in New York recently. They are Mrs. Harold McCarthy, left, of Glenn Ranch, Cal., and Lieut. Josephine Allen, of the British Auxiliary Territorial Service, recently on assignment in Canada. Mrs. McCarthy, well known in California for her work of entertaining servicemen at her ranch, came in from the sunny state for the reunion. Lieut. Allen is the wife of Maj. Nelson Allen of the British army.

Local Softball Teams Honored At First Annual Banquet, Trophies, Crests Handed Out

SACO 'Marines' and Esquire Juniors Feted by League; Softball Dignitaries Were On Hand

PRESIDENT SPEAKS

Softball celebrities from all parts of Eastern Ontario gathered at the Y.M.C.A. as guests of the Belleville Men's Softball Association in the latter's first annual banquet last evening to honor Belleville's two O.A.S.A. finalists, the SACO "Marines" and the Columbian Squires. The "Marines" were feted in advancing to the Intermediate O.A.S.A. finals, while the Squires brought similar honors to this city in the Junior provincial softball ranks.

"Belleville is the only city in Ontario to advance two teams into the provincial softball finals in 1944 and that should command not only respect but the interest in softball for years to come", stated C. B. Colling, chairman of the Parks Commission, who acted as master of ceremonies for the evening. Softball principals from as far as Kingston and intermediate points were present to add felicitations and congratulate President J. Samain and his executive in bringing together for the first time the softball personnel of the local league.

President Speaks.

In welcoming the players, managers and supporters, who numbered some 140, President Samain assured the softball enthusiasts of Belleville that the co-operation of all concerned in the game had elevated the game to a major position in Belleville today. "Tonight's gathering is for the players of our league. Something to bring them together with the executive heads on a common level and I do stress the importance of league meetings, which I hope will be as well attended next spring at our annual meeting as we witness here tonight", urged President Samain.

"As Secretary Don Lee has told you your league has enjoyed a successful year both financially and on the playing field. It is seldom a city like Belleville has the privilege of seeing two teams advance to the provincial softball finals. However, we did accomplished this honor in 1944 and there is no reason why softball should not advance to even loftier heights in the future", concluded the president as he added the season's greetings.

Before calling on O.A.S.A. executive heads Chairman Colling assured the meeting the City Parks Commission was in a position to assist the advancement of softball in any desired degree insofar as playing facilities were concerned.

Kingston There.

Mr. Ernest Simpson, O.A.S.A. executive member from Kingston, was called upon to present the provincial crests to the SACO "Marines". "I can say this is the finest tribute to softball I have had the privilege to pay in many years. With much a representative gathering of players, officials and fans the future of softball is definitely assured in Belleville. However, speaking of past diamond battles between Kingston and Belleville I would like to congratulate "Red" Townsend, of Belleville and "Bang" Jordan, of Kingston, upon the splendid manner in which they handled last fall's series", stated Mr. Simpson. He then presented the official crests to Manager Max Peoples of the "Marines".

Mayor Harry Rollins, vice president of the O.A.S.A., congratulated the league upon its initial venture following which he reviewed the past history of softball in Belleville. "At the netx annual meeting of the parent body I intend to bring up the question of an O.A.S.A. trophy for Southern Ontario without the problem of having to play a belated series with the northern part of the province unless mutually agreed upon. There is no doubt softball has advanced to major proportions in this area of recent years. Belleville had two teams in the provincial finals, while Batawa won a provincial championship. All of this speaks highly of the progress of the game from the time when Harry Knot and I first affiliated softball with the parent body nearly a decade ago", concluded Mayor Rollins.

Trophies Awarded.

The Bank of Commerce Trophy, emblematic of the winning of the City Softball championship, was presented by Maurice Callaghan and accepted on behalf of the "Marines" by Manager Peoples. The Freeman Trophy, given to the team finishing first in the city league, was presented by Ralph Smith and accepted on behalf of te Marines by Ted Henn, captain of the team. Geo. A. Lee presented the members of the Columbian Squires juniors with Point Anne Cementmen". A mo-champions of Eastern Ontario, which were accepted by Manager Jack Doran, who paid especial tribute to Coach Johnnie Boyle. Mr. O. Pinkston, of the Parks Board, presented the Intermediate finalist crests to the Marines. Mr. C. Gibson thanked the Parks Board for their splendid co-operation in the provision of a playing field in 1944 while Homer Townsend added words of comment to the featuring of softball in the minor league ranks. Present along with Mr. Simpson of Kingston was Don "Bang" Jordan, former Belleville and Trenton player, now a Kingston umpire. Also introduced were Charlie Dion and the team along with Murney Green and the "Point Anne Cementmen". A moment's silence was held in memory of Bubby Gaulin and "Pop" Robinson, the former having died during the season, while the latter was killed in action.

Secretary Don Lee extended to the entertainers the appreciation of the meeting. The evening's entertainment consisted of several vocal solos by Miss Ethel Smith, a saxaphone solo by Bobby Young and two well-received songs by Bill Navin, who also acted as accompanist.

CANADIENS BEAT BOSTON BRUINS BY 4-1 COUNT

Veteran Toe Blake Powered the Attack With Two Goals and an Assist

By The Canadian Press

Boston Bruins' drive toward the top half of the National Hockey League struck a familiar snag last night when Montreal Canadiens outskated the Bostmen for an easy 4-1 triumph before 13,000 at the Boston Garden.

The victory was the Frenchmen's fourth straight over the Bruins this year and boosted their league-leading margin to three points over the idle Toronto Maple Leafs.

Veteran Toe Blake powered the Canadien attack with two goals and an assist and took a 26-25 lead over Bruins' Bill Cowley in the circuit's scoring race. The Boston centre was held pointless.

Assisted by Elmer Lach, Blake got the Canadien offensive rolling with a disputed goal late in the first period. Bruins argued that Lach had been in the crease but Referee Chadwick ignored the protest. Dutch Hiller made it 2-0 only 36 seconds before the period closed on a passing play with Buddy O'Connor and Fern Gauthier.

Cain Spoils Shutout.

Bruins put on a sustained assault in the first half of the second, only to have Maurice Richard break away and set up Blake for his second goal at 10.39. It was the Habitants' high-scoring twins again who put the game out of Boston's reach midway through the final period, with the speedy Richard sinking Blake's pass for his 16th goal of the season.

Old Herbie Cain spoiled Goalie Bill Durnan's shutout with less than three minutes left when he drove him a 15-foot angle shot on a pass from Pat Egan.

Boston Winger Bill Jennings pulled a groin muscle in the first period. Centre Art Jackson replaced him on the front line and Bill Cowley did a double shift by centring both first and third lines. Defenceman Jack Shechuk was a second Boston casualty when he was cracked on the head by a stick in a second-period scrimmage.

Detroit Red Wings announced the recall of goalie Harry Lumley from Indianapolis of the American Hockey League to replace Connie Dion who will do his net-minding for the Capitols.

Don Whitmore, wingman of the Navy grid team, polled more votes for a place on the mythical all-American eleven than any of the backfield favorites in U.S. college football, it was announced yesterday at St. Louis.

The Army eleven, winner of nine straight games during the football season, yesterday was awarded the Lambert Memorial Trophy at New York as the outstanding eastern College team of the year. Navy won the trophy last year.

The International Baseball League yesterday at Buffalo re-elected Frank Shaughnessy as president for a three-year term and adopted a 154-game schedule to open April 19 and close Sept. 9.

James Darling, past-president of the Ontario Church Basketball Association, was elected president of the newly-formed Niagara District Intermediate Women's Basketball League at St. Catharines. There will be three St. Kitts teams and two from Merriton. A sixth club, the Merry Macs of St. Catharines, also may enter.

Three rinks from Hamilton, two from Sarnia and one each from Toronto, Kingston and Galt remained unbeaten after the first day's play in the 12th Annual Seniors' Bonspiel at Hamilton.

The Sarnia quartets, skipped by Homer Lockhart and W. A. Watson, went through both starts without any difficulty. The Hamilton rinks, two from Victorias and one from Thistles, also were easy victors.

Several of the pre-bonspiel favorites fell by the wayside.

The League will be divided into two sections with Perth, Westport and Smiths Falls Rideaus in one group and Prescott, Carleton Place and Smiths Falls Mic-Macs in the other. The first two clubs in each section will be eligible for league title playoffs.

ST. MIKES WIN FIFTH STRAIGHT BY LARGE SCORE

Swamp Marlboros by 15-1 With Falcons Beating Port Colborne 9-2

(By The Canadian Press)

St. Michaels and St. Catharines each advanced two more points ahead of Oshawa Generals while Galt Red Wings went into a tie for third place with the Memorial Cup Defenders in the O.H.A. Junior "A" standing as a result of their respective victories last night.

The amazing Toronto students overwhelmed Marlboros 15-1 in Toronto to win their fifth straight game without a defeat. St. Catharines Falcons at home disposed of Port Colborne 9-3 for their fourth successive triumph to remain in second place. In the other half of the double-bill at Toronto, Galt Red Wings managed a 5-4 win against Young Rangers to draw even with the idle Oshawa Generals for third spot in the standing with four points each.

St. Mikes swept through Marlboros to make it 4-0 in the first period and added four more goals in the second before Marlies broke into the score column. The match was virtually a matter of chalking up the Collegians' scores as follows: Tod Sloan, 5; Morston, Paul and Thomson, two each, and Blute, Ardunel, Sadler and McCormick, one each. The goal-finder of the Marlies was Marzalik.

In the other tilt at Toronto Bill Curik scored the first and fourth goals for Galt but it remained for Pete Babando to pick off the winning counter in 13:20 of the final frame for his second counter of the set-to. Pavelick scored one for the Red Wings. Rangers' snipers were Pidhermy (2), Payne and Dewsbury.

The Falcons led throughout at St. Catharines against Port Colborne and McMurdy, Peterson and Davis accounted for two tallies each, Edwards, Dawdy and Unger dividing the other three. For the ports, the scorers were Morgan and Savicky.

There were 12 penalties, with McMurdy of Falcons drawing three and Clark of the losers absorbing two sentences.

LOOK WHO'S HERE

When Promoter Tunney learned John Katan had injured his hand to such an extent he would be unable to team up with Al Dunlop here tonight, the Queensbury A.C. matchmaker immediately procured "Irish Jerry" Monahan to substitute for Katan as Dunlop's partner in the grudge team wrestling bout at the Hume Arena tonight versus "Whipper Billie" Watson and Tom Collins.

"Monahan is just as rough and tough as Katan ever thought of being, as a matter of fact the "Irish Bull" knows more pugnacious ring tricks, so actually the fans will see a much better battle tonight," announced Tunney today.

Two guaranteed preliminaries will warm the patrons up for this return grudge team battle royal.

Toronto, Dec. 6 — (CP) — With another N.H.L. meeting coming up at the end of the week, that brings that presidential question to the fore again, with everyone wondering who the league bigwigs will woo with that plaintive song: "Is you is, or is you ain't my baby?" Box (Montreal Star) O'Meara, himself an avowed candidate for the job, opines that the directors get along very well under the present system, and he doubts if a change would suit them too well.

Further, he says, "We guess the N.H.L. heads won't want anybody as president who knows too much about them individually or in the mass." What they would probably like is some "noted figure who also has the tendency to be a stuffed shirt," who could be used as a mouthpiece while the directors do the scene shifting "as they have always worked, by coalition, agreement and the old rule of the survival of the fittest or the dominance of the smartest."

In Boston meanwhile, Bruins' manager Art Ross gazed into the crystal ball and came up with a forecast the next N.H.L. prexy would be from south of the border. Said Art: "The United States entries . . . are through appeasing and catering to the whims of the two Dominion representatives in Montreal and Toronto." The U. S. governors, who outnumber the Canadians 4-2 are all ready to choose an American president, and transfer the N.H.L. offices from Montreal to the U.S., continued the peppery Bruin boss.

Boxing Notes:

An exodus of Maritime fighters to New England rings may be in the cards for the near future. Bill (Moncton Transcript) Hutchinson reports that Doc Avery of Millis, Mass., has taken over the management of a group of down east boxers, and has plans for them south of the border. Among the mitters are Pordena Smith of Cape Breton, Gordon McNeill of Halifax, Tommy Spencer of New Zaterford, two British boxers now stationed in the Maritimes, Harvey Dubbs and Ollie Geldart. Besides those, he plans to get the contracts of Tiger Warrington of Liverpool, N.S., and Murray Langford.

Here and There:

Cyclone Taylor, old Ottawa professional ice star, picks Percy Lesueur as the greatest all-time goalie, while Howie Morenz gets his nod as the top centre produced in the Canadian game . . . J.A.M. Cook, western Canada war correspondent, is having trouble at the races in Europe. He wrote Dave (Regina Leader-Post) Dryburgh recently from Belgium that "it is very easy to lose money at the races over here — all one has to do is follow the tip sheets." Jam is backing post numbers three and five, but finds they don't win any more consistently than they do in Canada.

CASUAL COMMENT

by K.J.C.

"When does the next train that stops at Manchester leave here?" asked the resolute widow at the booking-office window.

"You'll have to wait four hours, ma'am."

"I think not."

"Well, maybe you know better than I do ma'am."

"Yes, sir, and maybe you know better than I do whether I am expecting to travel on that train myself or whether I am inquiring for a relative that's visiting at my house and wanted me to call her and ask about it to save her the trouble, because she's packing up her things and expects to take that train herself and not me; and she'll have to do the waiting and not me; and maybe you think it's your business to stand there and try to instruct people about things they know as well as you do, if not better, and perhaps, you'll learn some day to give people civil answers when they ask you civil questions; young man, my opinion is you won't!"

With a gasp: "Yes ma'am."

Softball Takes Bow.

Thanks to the initiative of President Joe Samain and Secretary Don Lee the personnel of the Belleville Men's Softball League sat down around a common banquet table with the executive heads of the game last night. It was a unique event in the annals of the game, simply because none of its like had ever been attempted here before. It is to be hoped last night's gathering will be the father of many such to follow.

Of course there was the conventional eulogizing of personages, but aside from this was the fact it was a players' common meeting ground at which President Samain stressed the fact he hoped similar interest would be demonstrated in attendance at the next annual meeting.

Honors were bestowed upon the SACO "Marines" and Columbian Squires, Belleville's two O.A.S.A. finalists of 1944. The Marines walked off with two trophies and two sets of crests, while the Squire juniors garnered in crests for their efforts in bringing to Belleville an Eastern Ontario junior crown. Softball notables were on hand from Kingston and Tweed to add prowess to the occasion.

All-Time Record.

With the playing of the 45th Army-Navy football game at Baltimore on Saturday records show the West Pointers have won 23, while the "Middies" from Annapolis have taken 19 verdicts with three ending in a tie. The worst defeat came in 1903 when Army beat Navy 40 to 5, while in 1923 the two squads played a scoreless tie. The yearly respective scores read:

Remember When.

It was decided at the annual meeting of the Ontario Hockey Association 30 years ago today to divide the playing time of hockey matches into three periods of 20 minutes each. Previously the games were split into two halves. (Here's one for Bill Green to peruse over.)

Monahan Included.

"Irish Jerry" Monahan will assume John Katan's burden in tonight's team rasslin' squirm at the arena. It seems Katan became rather pugnacious in Ottawa the other night and when swinging lustily at an opponent hit the ring post with his fist so-much-so he broke his hand and will be unable to wrestle for some weeks. Promoter Tunney burned the telegraph wires yesterday for a suitable substitution for Katan and wound up with Jerry Monahan. So it will be Monahan and Dunlop et all versus Watson and Collins in the big show tonight and that substitution shouldn't detract from the original villain vs. hero atmosphere that held good before.

This and That.

It cost the University of Illinois football squad $7,000 to rent the Cleveland Municipal Stadium for the Ohio State game, which drew 83,627....Cleveland has replaced Chicago as the site for the biggest games in the Midwest, because it gives the visitors better treatment ....Chicago's Soldiers' Field would cost three times the rental of Cleveland's big park.

Just about a year ago Judge K. M. Landis booted Bill Cox, owner of the Phillies, out of baseball.... It was figured Cox would be back in the good graces after a year.... It won't happen.

Byron Nelson was polished off by Sam Snead last week at Portland, but it doesn't mean that Lord Byron is going back. You can't forget that in all of last season he played in 73 tournaments and on only four occasions was he above 73. At Portland his tally was 73-74-75-74

There is every indication that K. M. Landis will be succeeded as head of baseball by a commission composed of Ford Frick, Will Harridge and Leslie M. O'Connor, despite all the talk that is making the rounds of other candidates....An example of the big turnover in baseball during 1944 is shown by figures released by the American Association....The eight clubs of the circuit employed a total of 283, an average of 35 players per team.

Sport Roundup

(By HUGH FULLERTON, Jr.)
(AP War Correspondent)

New York, Dec. 6. (AP)—A group of mid-western college baseball coaches will get together this week to plan a national organization in their trade . . . and it's about time . . . in most colleges in the United States baseball has slipped to minor-sport status and it will take a lot of pushing from the men who should be the most interested to get it back.

In his latest N.B.A. news letter, addressed to Col. Heinie Miller in Hawaii, President Abe Green proposes that Boxing's Service Athletic Fund should be continued after the war as a means of rehabilitating worn-out boxers . . . Judging by the number of worn-out fighters who are appearing these days, a lot of them will need help in a few years. . .The Women's International Bowling Congress was less than $21,000 short of having enough to buy its second ambulance plane for the Army, as of Nov. 18.

OVER A BILLION DOLLARS SPENT ON U.S. TRACKS

Every States Shows Increase With New York Leading Parade

New York, Dec. 6 (AP)—Horse race betting was a $1,126,308,645 business in 1944—enough to give every man, woman and child in the continental United States a Christmas present of $10.

Led by the fabulous $410,230,402 wagered in New York, the 27 states polled by The Associated Press enjoyed their first billion-dollar year at the mutual machines. The total was an increase of $421,166,388 over the 1943 total of $705,142,257.

Taxes paid to the states and a few cities aggregated $55,971,232 for 1944, with New York again setting the pace by collecting $27,664,307 in revenue from the wagering fraternity.

A year ago the 17 states involved collected only $32,424,738 in taxes from the bettors.

Every state showed an increase in the amount of revenue obtained from the betting. Florida and Delaware benefitting particularly. Florida's 1943 track season was curtailed by the ban on pleasure driving and Delaware park was closed for the entire year for the same reason.

The lone state with a decrease was Louisiana where the race season was nine days shorter in 1944 than in 1943.

Horse Sense Bridge

LESSON NO. 558
By SAM GORDON
The Kibitzer

There are bridge tips on tap for an expert or sap. Opportunity knocks for a lamb or an ox. And a player succeeds using signals he needs.

Available to all bridge players is the efficient signal of an opening bid of two in a suit. It signals a hand that can make a game all by itself. And it asks for responding signal.

The signal in response must tell at once whether or not partner has a sure trick. If he has not, he bids two no-trump. If he has, he bids something other than two no-trump.

Apply that to this pair of partnership hands:

SOUTH
♠Q 3
♥A K Q J 10 8 6 5
♦A
♣A 6
NORTH
♠8 7
♥9 7 3
♦10 8 7 4 3 2
♣4 3

South opens with two hearts. North replies at once with two no-trump, signalling that he has no sure trick. What gives with that signal? What cards in north's hand are conspicuous by absence?

If north has no sure trick he has not the ace of spades. Nor has he the K Q of diamonds. Nor has he the K Q of clubs. Without either of these, assurance of a slam fades.

Warned so early in life, prudence prompts South to abandon the desire to go to slam. Rather than chance going beyond its depth, the contract finally winds up at a game of four hearts.

Two tricks will be lost at once if opponents lead spades. So, south's caution is justified. But suppose west happens to get off to his natural diamond lead. All 13 tricks can be taken by south. After a quick look at the dummy hand, you are almost ready to turn up your nose at it. But if you look sharp, you will find it contains three entries. It may even take three tricks.

Six cards of a suit in opponent hands are most often divided four in one hand and two in the other. But their six diamonds could be split three and three.

It has happened in the best regulated families.

St. Louis Flyers Down the Hornets

By The Canadian Press

St. Louis Flyers trounced visiting Pittsburgh Hornets 4-1 last night in the only game scheduled in the American Hockey League. The victory blasted Hornets' hopes for a first-place tie with Indianapolis Capitals in the western division.

Flyers took a two-goal lead in the latter half of the first period on counters by Red Doran, in his first appearance of the season as a wingman, and defenceman Vic Lynn.

An attempted rally by Hornets in the second period netted them one goal, scored by Bob Gracie, while Flyers were held in check throughout. St. Louis wrapped up the game early in the final session when Art Giroux and Winky Smith drove home shots within three minutes.

Hornets will have a chance to turn the tables when Flyers visit Pittsburgh tonight. They also have another chance for a first-place tie, provided Hershey Bears defeat Indianapolis. Bears will be playing on home ice.

Liberation of A Queen

(From "Illustrated" Magazine, London, Eng.)

"I heard much firing in the late afternoon, and with two of my ladies I went up on to the palace roof to see what it was all about. There I saw masses of German troops, transport and artillery streaming across the palace grounds to the east.

"That was one of the most wonderful sights I have ever seen. One minute the Germans were there, as they have been for four years in my country, and the next they were running away, leaving scarcely a trace of their presence behind."

It is a queen speaking—Elizabeth, mother of the imprisoned King Leopold and widow of Belgium's beloved King Albert — in the private quarters she uses, a small thatched studio and villa in the vast Laeken palace grounds.

While she posed for photographs—the first which she has had taken since the death of her husband—she chatted gaily about other happenings on that fantastic Sunday night of Sept. 3 this year, when Gen. Dempsey's men broke into Brussels and chased the Germans out.

For an hour or two, she said, she watched the fleeing German hordes and then with her ladies went down into her lonely palace to change for dinner. They had scarcely sat down when there was a ring at the door. Her major-domo came to say there were three strange men asking if they might see her.

"I went into the hall myself," she said. "And as soon as they spoke I knew that they were British officers. But what a strange sight they were. The few officers I had seen during the occupation were Germans who looked like tailor's dummies.

"These men in their berets and corduroy trousers, with their faces smeared with dust and grime, looked like workmen. But to me they looked beautiful. One introduced himself as Gen. Horrocks.

"I begged them to come in with all their officers and a few of the troops I could see outside on the path. But the general said: 'No, madame—this is your house. We have merely come to tell you that we are here and that you are quite safe. I would like a few of my troops to camp in the grounds tonight but you will not be disturbed.'

"They refused dinner. But I put on my cloak and went among all the soldiers camping by their vehicles and thanked them for coming. Their presence there was a proof that now we were free, and I could scarcely speak for happiness and gratitude. I wanted to have sandwiches made for them but again they refused. But what do you think I did?

"So many of them looked utterly tired and disheveled from their long journey that I insisted at least that they must have hot baths in the palace!" She laughed and added: "Do you know I arranged 140 baths for them that night! A liberation army comes, and all that I can do is to offer them a bath. But I know it was welcome to those tired men, and I was glad to do it."

That little gesture was typical of the human touch of Queen Elizabeth which endeared her so much to her subjects. She is an extraordinarily charming and exceptionally talented woman with a wide range of attainments.

As a young woman she studied medicine and holds an intermediate degree, as well as doctorates in literature and art.

As a violinist she is in the professional class and is a superb sculptor and gifted painter. During the years of German occupation, and when her daily work for Belgian women and children and care of her own grandchildren was over she spent all the rest of her time in the studio she had built in the grounds, going into the palace only to sleep and dine.

Her absorption in her arts, she said, has helped her over what she called the "appalling ordeal" of the four year Nazi reign over her country. And it has done much to assuage the personal tragedy and grief which has overhung the last 10 years of her life. And she has had plenty.

First there was the death of her husband, King Albert, in a climbing accident in the Ardennes. They were deeply attached to each other, and his death nearly killed her. For years she kept entirely out of public life. Then there was the death of her daughter-in-law, Queen Astrid, in a car accident. Looking after the motherless royal children gave her a new interest in life.

But then came the war. Two days after the Allies landed on the Normandy beaches the Germans took away her son, King Leopold, into captivity in Germany. They took him away at a few hours' notice and he even missed seeing his children returning that day from a holiday. She does not even know where he is.

"All I get from him," she said, "is an occasional prisoner of war post card through the Red Cross as might any other mother whose son is a prisoner. But they sometimes get letters, and my son is not allowed to write those."

Two days after the king had gone the Germans came for the children also.

"I was told that two men were waiting in the small audience room," she said. "I went in and saw that they were civilians—Gestapo. They said that they had come for the children, who must leave in an hour for Germany.

"I protested bitterly, telling them that the little boy had ear trouble and was in bed with a temperature and quite unfit to travel. They said they had orders from Berlin. I fought for time. I asked them how could little children be prepared for a long journey at an hour's notice. Grudgingly they extended the time limit another hour.

"Actually I wanted to get in touch with Gen. von Falkenhayn, the German governor of Brussels, who had interceded once before when there was an attempt to remove the children. But I could not reach him on the phone. I sent messengers but could not find him. I was frantic. But it was no use.

"They took the sick child and the others away in a palace car. Yes, they even stole that, for it was never returned, nor have I heard anything from the children except that they arrived safely in Germany and that they are supposed to be with their father."

At 68 years of age Queen Elizabeth has had enough personal woe to break the spirit of most people. But her spirit remains undimmed and her affections unimpaired.

Of that spirit there is a famous story about her from the last war. She is a Bavarian princess by birth and it was thought that she would use her influence to preserve Belgian neutrality.

But she said passionately: "Fight them. If I could I would open my veins and drain out every drop of Bavarian blood!"

A great woman who today is playing a leading part, with her son the prince regent, in the rehabilitation of her freed country.

We Got Ice Fishing From the Indians

(From the new book "The Great Lakes" by Harlan Hatcher)

Winter fishing at Sault Ste. Marie a century ago was an exciting festival. The water of Lake Superior, 18 miles above the falls that connect Superior with the other Great Lakes, freezes over to a thickness of two or three feet. The big salmon trout lie quietly beneath at depths of from 90 to 150 feet.

The Indians had discovered long ago just where the schools collected and the white men at the Sault had learned the lore of the Indians. They went up over the smooth ice of the river to Whitefish bay. They cut round holes in the clear ice. They baited the hooks with small herring or gobbets of beef or pork, dropped them through the holes, lowered them on a long, stout line to the level of the school and waited. A big fish would swallow the bait and the hook and with a powerful lash of his tail give a sharp tug on the line.

When the fishermen felt that signal challenge from far down under the ice, he threw the line over his shoulder and hurried away with it at top speed. At the end of the pull he gave the line a quick, careful jerk, and a salmon trout, four to five feet long and weighing half as much as a man, shot up through the hole and floundered on the ice.

The trout were so abundant in those days that a single fisherman would haul out 50 in a single day and the colony at the Sault feasted through the long, cold winter on baked salmon trout.

Cedars of Lebanon

(London Spectator)

—An ardent naturalist recently filled his short leave in Palestine in paying a visit to the Cedars of Lebanon and wrote home to say that the 104th psalm is quite right: the birds do make their nest there. The whole place was noisy with the twittering of Citril Finches, which seemed to be the original birds that sing among the branches.

Other birds he saw nearby were chaffinches, gold finches, meadow buntings and great tits; and when cultivation ceased black-throated wheaters and that splendid bird, the blue rock thrush. He saw, too, the stone-chat, which the Italians called by the admirable descriptive name saltimpalo or "jump-on-to-a-post". About 300 cedars, some very large, remain, grouped in the bottom of a great bowl in the high red hills.

It may interest students of birds to know that active migration was observed at 7,000 feet. "Swallows and bee-eaters were passing continuously (and one house-martin). We saw a willow-wren at 7,000 and at 7,500 a flock of about 30 blue-headed wagtails feeding among a flock of goats, catching the insects that the animals kick up from the grass".

SHORTAGE EXISTS

Toronto, Dec. 6. (CP)—Departmental store heads here said last night an acute shortage of women's stockings now exists in Canada and there is little likelihood of improvement for some time. An official of the T. Eaton Company said: "Things are so bad that we only have the day's quota of stockings on the shelf for half an hour".

AT THE CAPITOL — Men like Edward G. Robinson stick to their guns ..and girls like Lynn Bari stick to their men—so Robinson finds himself with double trouble in the port of fighting men, dangerous women and enemy intrigue, "Tampico," next at the Capitol Theatre. On the same program "Wyoming Hurricane," starring Russell Hayden.

CHAPTER 7

That was all. It was interrupted by a shout of "Cut!" Then a long pause and much conversation, and the scene was repeated. Then long talk and the woman star's disappearance to her dressing room to have something done to her make-up.

Nini, Rodney, and Loveday through the fantastic setting of the studio grounds, found a taxi, went hungry and hot to one of the many restaurants that claimed to be the favorite of the stars. Everything was still all excitement, still all glamour, Loveday thought, a little weary, a little dazed. But the shadow of ending was over it all.

Chris had said that he would join them for luncheon if he could; but they had had their jellied soup and had commenced upon soft-shelled crabs, and he did not come. It made it all seem rather flat, Loveday thought, in a dispirited mood. Well, she had had so much; it had all been such fun; she ought only to be grateful and happy!

Dreamily, absently, she watched the brilliant scene. Beautiful girls streamed in; the headwaiter perspired over a list of reservations. Fans whirred overhead; waiters rushed to and from with trays balanced high above their heads. Nini identified a celebrity or two. "I wish Chris were here; he knows them all!" she grumbled.

Suddenly Loveday saw Chris, standing just outside the restaurant on the sidewalk, jamming papers into the pocket of his linen coat, talking hard to some square bald-headed man whose back was toward the window.

Loveday's heart soared. Not for worlds would she have been the one to announce Christopher's arrival; she could not have said why: she must be the last to see him.

"Oh, here's Chris!" Nini exclaimed joyfully. Loveday managed a look of surprise and pleasure; everyone was looking at Chris, of course—the headwaiter and everyone else knew Chris—but Chris seemed to see none of it as he wiped his forehead, jammed his handkerchief back into a side pocket and drew a long, satisfied breath.

"Whew! I didn't think I could make it! What are we having?"

He slipped into his place between the girls on the curved red leather wall seat, seized a bill of fare.

"Jellied Madrilene and soft-shelled crabs," Loveday supplied.

"Why not?" Chris said with a nod to summon the waiter.

"Chris, did you get the passes to Disney's?" His sister demanded.

"I did."

"But—but you have to go to Laguna?" Loveday asked in so doleful a tone that they all laughed.

"I may have to go. Bishop is to telephone me here at two. That and that," Chris said to the waiter, his brown thumb firm upon the bill of fare. "So now you want to go to Disney's?" he asked.

"Not without you," Loveday said on a pleading note.

His odd, penetrating, unsmiling look was full upon her for a second.

"Thee is very kind, Loveday," he said then, his eyes twinkling.

"But—Disney's!" Nini put in on a wail.

"But the drive to Laguna would be lovely," Loveday persisted shyly.

"Well, now I'll tell you," Chris said, pouring cream drop by drop into his iced coffee and watching it drift downward in a widening veil. "Why not have Rod take you girls out to Walt's place, and I'll wait here for Bishop's call? If I don't have to go to Laguna I'll join you right away. If I do you get out to the studio and wait for me. I'll be back by four."

"We'll match to see who stays with you," Nini, who liked a gamble on any question, decided. "Rod have you money? Wait a minute, I have plenty. Here, everyone take a quarter and the pair stays."

"Let me get you my gazelle-eyed Hibernian skylark," said Chris. "Odd man stays with me, eh?"

"But suppose it's Rod," Loveday said eagerly. "We couldn't go out without him."

She looked up, quite unconscious of anything but the excitement of the game, caught Christopher's glance and shrank back, a little confused and puzzled. Why was he smiling at her today in that odd way?

It was ony a second; the quarters were slapped down on the checked peasant tablecloth. Three hands were raised to show three flying silver eagles.

"All right, again!" Chris said. This time Nini and Rod revealed eagles, but Loveday's coin showed the tiny figure of Liberty. She felt the blood coming up into her cheeks and her throat dry, and it was with difficulty that she raised her eyes.

"You two get started. Take a taxi, Rod," Chris was saying in a businesslike tone. "We'll follow. Got plenty of money, Rod? On your way! We'll probably be right after you."

Nini hesitated, dissatisfied.

"We can't miss it!" she said. "But you'll go to Laguna," she added, suspicious without knowing what she suspected.

"Well, you can't do both at the same moment," Chris reminded her with a laugh. "But even if I go I'll be back by four. You'd better move; it's nearly two now, and it's quite a way out there."

Nini needed no other urging; she was mad to get away.

"They'll let us in without you, Chris?"

"Of course they will!"

"That was the one thing Nini wanted to do, and she was terribly afraid she was going to miss it!" Loveday said amusedly when she and Chris were alone. She felt suddenly comfortable and happy; it was always so easy to talk to Chris. Awnings over the sidewalk kept the restaurant shaded; big fans whirred lazily overhead, and underneath them the stir of pretty women coming and going, the tides of low chatter and laughter, the clink of silver and china went on.

"Why'd you pretend not to see me when I first came in here today?" Chris said suddenly, watching her smilingly, not hearing what she was saying. Loveday's color rushed up.

"Why, did I—oh," she stammered laughing. "I didn't know that you—I wasn't sure it was you, anyway---"

"You were darned sure!" Chris said lazily with another half-smile. "Well, come on, let's get on our way to Laguna!"

"But shouldn't you wait for Mr. Bishop to telephone?"

"He doesn't matter." Chris had paid the bill; they went out to the car. Loveday felt the whole warm sleepy, early afternoon world singing and shining as she got into the front seat beside him.

His business at Laguna was of not too arduous a nature. It seemed to consist of a dozen words said to a smiling man on a country house porch, an introduction to some other man, a foreigner, who seemed important and made a luncheon engagement with Chris. After that, in the company of a dozen delightfully friendly persons of both sexes, Loveday and Chris went swimming, and then he drove her rapidly back to town to join the others again.

And all the time it was heaven. It was a halcyon sea in which she floated, conscious of the roads that wound through tree shadows and sunshine along the edge of the blue ocean; conscious of her own young body, its slimness and smoothness and brownness; conscious of her grey eyes when she raised them to meet Christopher's eyes, and of her long lashes when she chose to look away. Every word and look and silence was significant; the drive was too short. Too soon they were among the long shedlike buildings of the great studio, and Nini and Rodney, hot and tired and standing in narrow blots of shadows, were watching for them.

"You've missed everything!" Nini reproached them crossly.

"I've seen all this," her brother said, unruffled. As for Loveday, she was in a daze, missing nothing, appreciating nothing, hearing and seeing everything through a strange bewilderment —everything transfigured.

When she and Nini were dressing for dinner an hour or two later she could hardly speak. Once or twice she said vaguely, "Hot! Isn't it hot!" The girls bathed in leisurely fashion, lay panting on their beds between struggles with slippers and hair arrangements. Chris took them to a new place for dinner; he said that sometimes it was exciting there and sometimes dull, but that it was always cool. Tonight it was dull; no one was there, and even with the fans going it was not cool. They went home early, and because the night was warm, and because they hated to break up, they sat on the terrace above the garden and looked at the stars and listened to the soft swish—swish of the unseen ocean.

"And Merle doesn't like this, Chris?" Nini asked. The question had been answered many times before, but Chris's little sister could never quite believe it.

"She loves this place. But no, she doesn't like Hollywood. It seems to her a sort of strain to—well, keep up with it," Chris said.

"I should think it might! But I think it's divine," Nini murmured.

"I couldn't stand much of it, too much competition. Too few good parts," Rodney said unexpectedly. "You never know where you are."

"You've exactly expressed it," Chris agreed. "It's a place of terribly intensified emotions—ambition, triumph, despair. It's like a court: you're in high favor; you're swimming along on a crest of a wave—and then suddenly you're out. You're in the tower, with your head about to come off!"

"I should say the average of happiness was low," Rodney said.

"Damn low," Chris agreed with a chuckle.

"Just the same I wish to goodness I was in it!" Nini muttered.

Loveday made no contribution to the conversation. She was stretched in a long wicker chair, her ankles crossed, her hands locked behind her head. Every fiber of her being was thrilling to delight, to an expectation and suspense that she coud not analyze.

She lay quietly in the warm dark, listening, conscious of her young body drawn to its full length on the cushioned chair, of her strong hands clasped behind her head, of her eyes that ooked up through the dark at the stars. There was no hurry. Chris wanted to talk to her; he hadn't said so, but she knew it; presently he and she would be alone. Nothing could stop it now.

Rod went yawning off with an innocent "For heaven's sake, get to bed, girls. Remember that alarm clock! Good-bye Chris, and thanks a million."

"Oh, I'll be up to see you off," Chris, who had fallen silent, roused himself to say.

"Come on, Loveday," Nini said a moment later, getting to her feet, a shadowy white shape in the mellow shadows.

"I think I'll stay a little longer. But don't you wait," Loveday said easily. She would have thought a few days earlier, that she could not say it at all. But it came naturally, in the careless tone of an older sister to a child.

Nini hesitated, protesting. She was surprised. Chris took his pipe out of his mouth long enough to say briefly, "Beat it, kid."

Loveday could feel Nini's spirit stiffening like a tangible thing that touched her, despite the distance between them. It was in quite a different tone, a tone of scorn and hurt, that Nini said, "Good night then, both of you!" as she went swiftly indoors.

Silence still. Chris smoked; Loveday lay with her young body stretched and motionless under the stars. The dark sweet night throbbed about them in perfume; shadows of the trees lay in lacy patterns on the white flags of the terrace. The soft rush of the sea punctuated the stillness like the beating of a heart.

After a while Chris put his pipe in his pocket and came over to take a chair next to her own. He reached for her hand and covered it with his own strong fingers.

"How am I going to thank you for this week?" he said.

Loveday did not answer. But she turned her head, and he could see her eyes shining in the starlight.

"It's meant to you what it has to me, hasn't it? It's meant something to you," the man said.

Loveday cleared her throat.

"Too much," she said very low, trying to laugh. "It's been a different world."

"It's been a different world," he echoed. "You see," he went on, Merle hates it all. She has to pretend—that she likes it. But it's all a struggle for her. It's always been so, wherever we were. Keeping up with the witty people, trying to impress the people who have impressed her. She is writing a book; she has a wonderful idea for a movie; she wants to get hold of Ehrlen and discuss with him an important suggestion for my play. When the Rogets take a place in Jersey and camp there Merle wants to buy the farm next theirs and do everything their doing, but on a bigger scale. When Elsie McQuade comes out in Chinese clothes Merle has a sudden bright idea about turkish trousers."

He was speaking without venom; he was not asking sympathy. Loveday made no comment.

"The result is," Chris went on, "that she's completely miserable, And that, of course, makes me miserable. I'm always conscious of her, of the strain she's under. And so this week I've seen Hollywood for the first time, the vastness of it and the fun of it, and the way these people like a girl who laughs when she feels like laughing, and comments on everything she finds strange, and swims and eats hot dogs, and enjoys everything in exactly her own way."

Still Loveday was silent; she could not speak.

"It's opened to me a sort of idea —a sort of vision—of what life could be like," Chris said. "Someone beside one who was an asset—an addition to every party, wanted everywhere. Well—that's more than I meant to say, and I guess that's all... What is it, Nini?" he added sharply as his sister, like a ghost, in her pajamas and slippers, came out upon the terrace.

"I was just wondering when Loveday was coming to bed," Nini said primly.

"Now," Loveday said, getting to her feet. "Good night, Chris."

"Good night," said Chris.

From that moment everything was changed. The dream was over, and the awakening was one bitterness after another.

Loveday had hardly reached the room she shared with Nini on that momentous Wednesday night when she realized that the atmosphere was tense with unpleasantness. Nini was speechless with righteous indignation and on the way into the house swept by the other girl without a word. She leaped into her bed, snapped off the reading light, turned on her face, and plunged into her pillows with the air of one determined to go instantly to sleep.

For a few seconds the shock overwhelmed Loveday like a vertigo Nini couldn't—it wasn't possible—just because she had loitered on the terrace to speak alone to Chris or rather to give him a chance to speak to her if he wanted to. . .

Realization crept over her, making her feel physically weak and shaken. Then anger rose in her too. How dared Nini assume anything so preposterous as that she was flirting—that must be the word for it in Nini's silly litte mind—with Chris! The impudence of it! What business was it of Nini's anyway?

If Nini chose to put on ridiculous righteous airs and go to sleep without speaking, that was nothing to Loveday. Loveday went through her preparations for bed silently, except for a little occasional apparently inadvertent humming. Nini lay on her face for a while, but she could not refrain forever from some sort of expression and presently she burst out:

"I hope you're proud of yourself, Loveday Gurney!"

The family was asleep, when about three o'clock in the morning they were awakened by the sound of fire. They managed to escape in night attire and could save none of the contents. The blaze started in an empty room where there was no fire and spread very rapidly. They were given shelter by neighbors who have also given them gifts to assist them for the present.

Allies Smash Across Lamone R., Set Up Bridgehead

Rome, Dec. 6 — (AP) — British and Polish troops of the British 8th Army have smashed across the Lamone river southwest of Faenza and established a bridgehead while Canadian and British units are cleaning out isolated enemy groups in captured Ravenna, with the aid of Italian patriots, Allied headquarters announced today.

Other troops of the 8th Army pushing westward from Godo are engaged in heavy fighting on the line of the Lamone river.

On the right flank of the 5th Army Indian troops have made further progress while farther left British troops of the 5th Army have captured Monte Pensola which commands the lateral road to Imola.

Headquarters said the crossing of the Lamone was made in strength and that the bridgehead was held firmly against strong German opposition.

The crossing was made upstream from the village of Quartolo, four miles southwest of Faenza, German strongpoint on the Rimini-Bologna highway. Nearby hill features were overrun quickly.

The capture Monday of Ravenna, ancient Ostrogoth capital and important communications centre, was followed by a marked 8th Army advance westward which was driving disorganized German elements back behind the lower Lomane river.

Ravenna fell Monday before twin onslaughts by the Princess Louise Dragoon Guards of Ottawa, and the British 27th Lancers.

(Last prior mention of Canadian activity in Italy was in a dispatch Nov. 10. The P.L.D.G. went to Sicily last year and fought through Italy as a reconnaissance battalion of the 1st Canadian Division.)

Reeve Wm. Linn Seasoned Veteran Of County Council

One of the seasoned veterans of the Hastings County Council is Reeve William Linn, of Marmora Village who recently received his ninth consecutive appointment as the head of the village council.

"Bill" as he is familiarly known to his county council colleagues has had seven acclamations during his tenure of reeveship. He served on the village council for a number of years prior to his elevation to the head of the council table.

He is of the lusty dynamic type. An able councillor, he will take off his argumentative coat and give battle to any who may have ideas of infringing on the village rights. At the same time the Linn weapons will be thrown in the battle for the defence of betterment of his county.

The Linn verbal shafts are not embellished with any flowery eloquence. An opponent in an argument need not think twice as to the meaning of the Linn argument. But he is not adamant to conviction. He can be convinced he is wrong—but brother, you have seen a battle before the Linn colors are lowered.

He has a rare slant on life. "They talk about higher education," he says, "What people should learn to do first, is use properly the education they've got, before absorbing any more. That is half the confusion in life."

But the amiable, popular reeve of the northern village has had his sorrows. His only son, Jim, joined the Royal Rifles of Canada early in the war and was taken prisoner at Hong-Kong. His father has not heard from him since. He had four daughters. Three of them died when quite young. One remains.

A grandson, Leading Stoker Bill Naylor of the Navy, six-foot two of Marmora manhood is now the apple of the reeve's eye. He has served for over two years, and is now taking a course at Halifax.

M. F. Hepburn May Be Named House Leader

Toronto, Dec. 6 (CP)—Liberal members of the Ontaro legislature gathered today for a caucus amid speculation that they will name Mitchell F. Hepburn, member for Elgin riding, as House leader of their 16-man group.

Harry C. Nixon, Ontario Liberal leader and present House leader, declined to comment on possible developments at the caucus, scheduled to start at Queen's Park at 2.30 p.m.

Mr. Hepburn, former Premier who resigned the leadership of the party in October, 1942, was re-elected to his Elgin riding seat in the provincial election of 1943 as an Independent Liberal. Last October he announced that he would support the Liberal party again and immediately afterwards attended a party caucus. There was no announcement at the time, but it was learned later that the members discussed the possibility of him taking over as House leader from Mr. Nixon.

Little Benny's Note Book

Ma was eating her grapefruit diet and pop was drinking his 2nd cup of coffee and reading his paper, saying, Here's a strange item it just happened to catch my eye in the middle of Hookbinders full page ad. It seems they're offering a razor that sharpens itself automatically as you shave yourself with it. By golies that sounds like the answer to a shaver's prayer, he said.

Now William you're certainly an outstanding example of a gullible sex, ma said. I wish I had a thousand dollars for every newfangled razor that you claimed was going to revolutionize your shaving life. I wish I even had a dollar for every one, I'd still be comparatively wealthy, she said, and pop said, Wel for Peet sake I'm not saying I'm going to stop in there and buy one.

You're not saying you're not, ma said, and pop said, Whoever gets up this Hookbinder page is a pretty ingenious cuss. Now here's a bran new wrinkle—Our First Big Annual Advance Clearance Sale. Can you beat it, an advance clearance sale, does that make any sense to you? he said.

Advance clearing sale of what? ma said, and pop said, Spring clothes for women. They go on to explain that most clearance sales are just a way of getting rid of shopworn leftover dresses, but this is a real innovation. They're having a clearance sale of absolutely fresh stock just to be sure that they wont have any left over at the end of the season. That takes the cake. That's rich rare and juicy, he said.

What do they have to say about prices? ma said, and pop said, Yee gods do you mean to say I fooled you that easily? Now who's gullible with a capitol gee and an exclamation mark? he said.

Dont you suppose I knew you were making it up all the time? ma said.

The result being pop claimed it was a woman's world and folded his paper and left for his office.

Britain's Falling Birthrate Causes Concern in Old Country

By JOHN DAUPHINEE
Canadian Press Staff Writer

London, Dec. 5—(CP)— A 15-member royal commission has been working a year now on a study of Britain's falling birthrate — a problem so important, Home Secretary Morrison says, that unless it is overcome Britain's population will be halved by 1999.

"The work is going well and a lot of progress has been made but the subject covers such a wide field that there is still a tremendous amount to be done," said a commission spokesman.

It is not expected that the nine men and seven women on the commission—doctors, economists and housewives under chairmanship of Lord Simon, the Lord Chancellor—will make its report before late next year.

The falling birthrate has been worrying official Britain for many years but loss of young lives during the war has made the problem more pressing.

Three Choices

The latest body to express its concern is the tory reform committee. Its booklet, "Tomorrow's Children," says there are three choices:

1. Increase the size of families from no children or one child to two, three or four;

2. Open Britain to immigration from countries with expanding populations;

3. Let the country go into the "downward spiral" of a dying nation, with always fewer people and more of them older.

Prime Minister Churchill said early this year: "the destiny of our country . . . Depends on an overflowing fountain of healthy children, born into what we trust will be a broader society and a less distracted world."

During the war the birthrate has risen, but government experts believe the increase is only a temporary phenomenon caused by a rush of early marriages and will make no marked difference to the general population problem. Already the marriage boom is over.

Marriage Peak in 1940

After reaching a peak of 471,000 in 1940, marriages fell to 368,000 in 1942 and 295,000 in 1943 — the lowest marriage rate since 1936. More important, while marriages in the four years 1939-42 totalled 225,000 more than from 1936-38, there were only 19,000 more births.

It has been stated officially that to keep the British population as its present level — around 46,000,000 — some 700,000 babies are needed annually. The figure has been attained in some war years but owing to the past decline in the birthrate the number of potential mothers now is falling.

Accordingly, it is submitted by experts that the number of children in the average family must be increased. At present rates of decline the number of potential mothers will have dropped from 11,000,000 to 8,500,000 by 1971. There would have to be, by then, an increase of 24 per cent in the number of babies per mother to maintain the population at its present level.

CORVETTE SHAWINIGAN LOST IN NORTH ATLANTIC

AMERICAN TANKS CLOSING ON SAARBRUCKEN

Full Complement 7 Officers and 83 Ratings Missing

Sub. Lt. H. Baird of City Among Those Missing

Ottawa, Ont., Dec. 7. (CP)—The Corvette Shawinigan, one of the sturdy little "work horses" of the Royal Canadian Navy, has been lost in the perilous North Atlantic and her entire complement of seven officers and 83 ratings is dead or missing, Navy Minister MacDonald announced today.

Only five bodies, those of ratings, have been recovered and identified. The remainder of the crew, including the Captain, Lieut. W. J. Jones of Brooklyn, N.Y., are listed as missing.

The announcement said merely that the Shawinigan went down "while on operational duty in the North Atlantic". It did not say whether the ship met her end through enemy action or weather conditions. Nor did it indicate when the sinking occurred.

The Shawinigan is the ninth corvette and the 19th Canadian warship announced as lost in the war. The last corvette sunk was the Alberni, which went down about three months ago with the loss of 59 of her crew.

The Shawinigan was in the navy's convoy escort and patrol fleet. Her sea miles totalled more than 150,000, and she had been one of the busiest vessels of her class afloat since she was commissioned at Levis, Que., three years ago.

Men who served aboard her have been acclaimed for fighting efficiency, for rescue work and attacks on enemy U-boats.

She escorted hundreds of thousands tons of vital war supplies and shipping to Allied ports. Few ships of her class spent more time at sea during that black period when German submarines were most active in the North Atlantic. She did not lose a single ship under her charge in the last two years.

During a recent working-up program, training officials reported that the Shawinigan showed evidence of "good organization and co-operation which reflect great credit on the men responsible for the high standard of efficiency being maintained".

The actual action organization of the ship was "most satisfactory", the report continued, adding: "The officers know their ship and competent ratings work well together".

One high-ranking officer said he considered the ship "among the most efficient and best organized of its class".

The Shawinigan was built by George T. Davie and Sons, Ltd., Levis, Que.

Sub. Lieutenant Haddow F. Baird, eldest son of Mr. and Mrs. Alfred Baird, Alexander Street, is listed among the missing members of the crew of the corvette HMCS Shawinigan, lost in the North Atlantic recently, Royal Canadian Navy officials announced today.

The entire ship's company is believed lost. Five bodies of the complement of 90 officers and ratings have been recovered, the others are listed as missing.

Sub. Lieut. Baird, who was signals officer on board the gallant Canadian warship, was born in Fredericton, New Brunswick twenty-seven years ago. He moved with his family to St. Thomas, Ont., at an early age and lived with them at Chatham before coming to Belleville.

He received his early education here graduating from Belleville Collegiate Institute. He attended the University of New Brunswick, graduating in Forestry in 1941. He became associated with the Ontario Paper Company at Heron Bay, Ont. and joined the Navy about two years ago.

Finishing his basic training, he was sent to the Royal Canadian Naval Training School for officers at Kings College, Halifax, leaving there with the rank of sub lieutenant. He was assigned to the Shawinigan, his first ship, in May of this year.

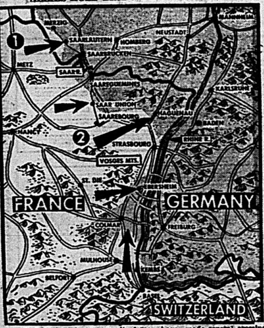
Sub. Lieut. Baird married a Fredericton girl, the former Miss Patricia Burnham. They have a three-year-old daughter Barbara. Mrs. Baird arrived with her daughter in the city this week and will remain here for an indefinite period.

The young officer has a brother, Ron, at home, and a sister Barbara, who is attending MacDonald College, Quebec.

NO NEED OF BEING STUCK

Toronto, Dec. 7 — (CP)—Highways Minister George Doucett does not want motorists to blame his department if they get stuck in snowdrifts and have to abandon their cars or get them pulled out. He said his department had a road information service which advised daily on the condition of all provincial roads but "it is not being used sufficiently."

ALLIES HOLD BRIDGEHEADS ON SAAR



The U. S. Third Army assault forces have made several crossings of the Saar river and are consolidating these bridgeheads near Saarlautern (1). Saarbrucken, greatest industrial city of Germany's Saar basin, is reported ablaze. A front 40 miles wide has been established inside Germany. Strategists call attention to the increasing danger to southwestern Germany's defences as the push from Maguenau (2) toward Karlsruhe continues. This 7th Army drive northward along the Rhine, were it to break through opposite Karlsruhe, would turn the Siegfried Line on the right bank of the Rhine from the Swiss border to Karlsruhe and might outflank the central sector as far north as Luxembourg.

RUSSIANS CLOSING IN ON BUDAPEST FROM THREE SIDES

Gravest Threat From 3rd Ukraine Army Driving Up West Bank Of Danube

London, Dec. 7 — (CP) — Red Army vanguards sweeping around the southern part of Lake Balaton were within 35 miles of the Austrian frontier today as Berlin reported a powerful Russian offensive closing in on Budapest from three sides.

The gravest threat to the beleaguered Hungarian capital came from Marshal Feodor I. Tolbukhin's 3rd Army units driving up the west bank of the Danube.

The Germans said they had abandoned Ercsi, 13 miles south of Budapest, in the face of the tide of Russian armor which the Soviet war bulletin said yesterday in gains of up to 16 miles overran 50 places, including Racalmas, 28 miles south of the Hungarian capital.

Junction Appears Imminent

Other units of Marshal Rodion Y. Malinovsky's 2nd Ukraine Army are entrenched on Csepel, the island that splits the Danube for 30 miles south of Budapest, with advance positions six miles from the city's outskirts. Racalmas is four miles from the southern tip of the island and a junction of the two Russian armies appeared imminent.

There was no confirmation, however, of German reports that Soviet troops from Csepel had established a bridgehead on the west bank of the Danube just south of Budapest.

The Russian communique made no mention of the German claims of a renewed offensive from north of Budapest, where Red troops were reported plunging ahead from captured Hatvan, or from the eastern Budapest suburbs where the Soviet army has been checked for some time.

50-Mile Front Held

Front dispatches to Moscow reported the furthermost advance toward the Austrian frontier. The communique reported the capture of Balaton-Bereny, 42 miles from the Austrian frontier, and a supplement asserted that the entire 50-mile southern shore of the lake was in Russian hands.

On a 46-mile front in the corridor between Lue-Puton and the northern Yugoslavian border Tolbukhin's forces captured 40 places, registering gains of more than 12 miles. These units struck southwest from Szigetvar, taken yesterday, and captured Darany, six miles from Barcs, a crossing on the Draja river.

Russians and units of Marshal Tito's Partisans fighting through northern Yugoslavia captured the highway and rail junction of Sid, 62 miles northwest of Belgrade, as well as 14 other places in the same area.

The Soviet communique said 2,375 prisoners were taken in yesterday's fighting along the eastern front and 2,000 Germans and Hungarians had been killed.

Sarbogard, 43 miles southwest of Budapest and the biggest town on the railroad between the capital and captured Kaposvar, also fell in Tolbukhin's offensive. Herocegefalva, another large town nine miles northeast of Sarbogard was also seized.

Dairy Board Rescinds Cheese Sale Restrictions

Ottawa, Dec. 7. (CP)—Orders restricting the manufacture and sale of Cheddar Cheese manufactured in Ontario and Quebec have been rescinded, the Dairy Products Board announced today.

The orders required all Cheddar Cheese made in these provinces to be large, white and unwaxed and to be marketed through licenced exporters for shipment to the British Ministry of Food.

The Board also rescinded its order limiting the amount of Cheddar Cheese which a factory may sell to its milk suppliers.

With Winter weather prevailing in the cheese producing areas of Ontario and Quebec, it is expected the make of cheese will drop rapidly from now on and, in order to supplement stocks for the domestic to rescind the order, the Board said.

Athens-Piraeus Area Being Gradually Cleared

By STEPHEN BARBER
(AP Staff Writer)

Athens, Greece, Dec. 7 — (AP) — British parachute troops and infantry, with the support of planes, tanks, and armored cars and artillery, blasted their way at tommy-gun point from house to house today against the principal centres of E.L.A.S. resistance around the Acropolis.

Although Maj.-Gen. R. M. Scobie announced that progress was being made in clearing the E.L.A.S., the armed auxiliary of the Leftist E.A.M. political organization, from the Athens area, the fighting spread to Thrace, where E.L.A.S. and Greek Nationalists clashed.

British Beaufighters crushed the E.L.A.S. mortar positions in a public park east of the Acropolis and across the main Athens Piraeus road where it enters the capital, and field artillery was used to blast out other positions. But snipers' bullets still zipped back and forth down the side streets of the capital in the second day of pitched battle.

Premier George Papandreou, whose government is supported by the British, told correspondents that the E.A.M. was "plunging Greece into civil war."

(In London a Greek government spokesman said the outbreaks had delayed elections by several months. He predicted that unless "this painful situation is solved immediately Greece will be years in rising out of the chaos created by German occupation.")

Gen. Scobie's communique said: "The process of clearing the

BRIDGEHEAD OVER LAMONE RIVER FIRMLY HELD

All Enemy Resistance East of River Has Been Wiped Out

Rome, Dec. 7 — (AP) — British 8th Army troops have deepened their newly-won bridgehead over the Lamone river southwest of Faenza and all enemy resistance east of the river has been wiped out, Allied headquarters announced today.

Polish troops in the bridgehead captured Brisighella, 10 miles southwest of Faenza, and the important height of Monte San Rinaldo.

Mezzano on the Rimini-Ferrara railway six miles northwest of Ravenna also was captured as victorious British and Canadian units chased scattered German forces back to the Lamone river.

Southwest of Mezzano a second attempted crossing of the Lamone by 8th Army troops was hurled back.

Compelled to Retire

In this action Allied units fought their way onto the west bank of the stream under cover of night. But when the mist cleared yesterday morning the enemy counter-attacked fiercely, infiltrating into 8th Army positions with the support of self-propelled guns. The Allies were compelled to retire to the east bank.

As 8th Army patrols, with co-operation of Italian Patriots, mopped up scattered German parties in the coastal marshes northeast and north of Ravenna, headquarters announced 300 prisoners had been taken during encirclement and occupation of the city.

The encircling move was so swift that the 8th Army intercepted a German battalion runner carrying a withdrawal order and as a result captured an entire enemy company and its commander southwest of Ravenna.

Blew Up Highway

Beyond Mezzano, the retreating enemy blew up the main highway 16 bridge over the Lamone river.

The Germans were fighting desperately to contain the bridgehead southwest of Faenza, but British and Polish troops continued their progress, which was eating deep into the vital hinge of the enemy defences.

The Allied 5th Army front showed little change, although slight gains were reported on the right flank and several strong enemy patrols were repulsed with casualties north of San Clemente.

GERMANY'S PRIZED SYNTHETIC PLANT AT MERSEBURG HIT

7,000 Tons of Bombs Are Dropped by British and Canadian Heavy Bombers

London, Dec. 7 (CP) — British and Canadian heavy bombers attacked Germany's prise synthetic oil plant at Merseburg and two railyards with 7,000 tons of bombs last night just a few hours after 1,600 American bombers and fighters raided the oil plant and another rail centre in daylight.

Another R.A.F. force bombed Berlin—the 172nd. night raid of the enemy capital since the war started.

It was the 18th. heavy bombing of the Leuna refinery which once contributed 50,000 tons of oil a month to the German war machine.

Last night's rail targets were Osnabruck—where Canadian activity was concentrated — and Giessen.

American heavies earlier had smashed rail installations at Bielefeld.

Sharp battles between the British fighter escort and German interceptors were reported, particularly around Merseburg.

Twenty-one planes, including 4 Canadian craft were lost and at least 17 enemy craft were destroyed — an Air Ministry communique said.

Luftwaffe Stays Grounded

The Luftwaffe stuck to the ground during daylight yesterday and American losses were limited to four bombers and two fighters knocked down by German anti-aircraft fire.

The heavy night assault kept Germany reverberating with bomb blasts for 72 straight hours.

Approximately 14,000 bombers and fighters have participated in co-ordinated attacks from bases in Britain, Belgium and France since Monday.

The German railroad system — increasingly responsible for supply of armies in the west since diminishing fuel supplies immobilised much German motor transport— has borne the brunt of the mighty offensive.

Allied air chieftains made no effort to conceal their purpose— to trap German military supplies between disrupted rail centres in the heart of Germany and just short of enemy troops at the front.

City Main Bastion For Hun Defence Of the Saar Area

Bridgehead Across Saar River Extends 22 Miles

By JAMES M. LONG
(A. P. Staff Writer)

Paris, Dec. 7 (AP) — American tanks drove within 3 1-2 miles of seared Saarbrucken today in a plunge to the outskirts of Forbach, French rail town and outpost of the Siegfried Line.

Artillery of the 3rd army bombarded the little Pittsburgh of the coal and iron region for the eighth consecutive day, while infantry was cleaning the Germans from the last streets of Sarreguemines, French border town southeast of the Saar capital. Street fighting continued in Saarlautern, second city of the Saar.

The Americans extended their grip on the west bank of the multiple-crossed Saar river to 22 miles.

German fighting patrols crossed the Meuse at several points along the northern part of the Allied front in apparent attempts to take prisoners, a 21st army group spokesman said, but instead lost prisoners to alert 1st Canadian army and British 2nd army troops.

There was no other major ground action on the northern front.

On the static Roer river front, the Cologne plain for the second successive night was bright with strings of German groundlights, suggesting the enemy was working intensively to prepare defences on the Erft river in anticipation of a forced withdrawal from the swift and swollen Roer.

Roer Not Crossed Yet

The Erft flows within eight miles of Cologne. It is 100 feet wide and paralleled by a canal. Along the Roer, the U.S. 1st and 9th Armies were no closer than 22 miles from the ravaged metropolis on the Rhine. Nowhere had the Roer been crossed, but infantry was up to its banks on a wide front.

In some places east of the Roer, 9th Army troops observed the Germans strengthening their positions under cover of smoke. All of Linnich west of the river was in American hands although a few snipers remained.

Action flared up again on the northern part of the 1st Army front. Lt.-Gen. Hodges' troops, who cleared Inden several days ago, struck 1 1-2 miles toward Pier, about midway between the Roer river citadels of Julich and Duren. Patrols reached Pier's outskirts and in one brief skirmish, 100 Germans were captured. Farther south, the 1st Army consolidated and expanded holdings around the captured Hurtgen Forest village of Bergstein.

The last bits of Lorraine and Alsace were slipping from German hands. Already Lt.-Gen. Patton's 3rd Army controls more of the rich Saar basin than the German retain in the Karlsruhe corner of France at the edge of the Saarland and Palatinate.

U.S. 7th Army troops captured Ostheim, five miles north of Colmar, last city in German hands in Alsace, he foe seemed to be evacuating the district. His men and trucks choked the Rhine bridge at nearby Breisbach. The Colmar Gap between the 7th and the French 1st Army narrowed to a maximum of 23 miles, but behind Allied lines many pockets of Germans were hiding in the snowy gorges and heights of the Vosges mountains.

Saarbrucken is the key to the whole defence of the Saar and a crucial arsenal for the German army. Its factories still worked as the cacophony of battle increased.

The 3rd Army was expanding its three bridgeheads over the Saar, which flows just west of the Siegfried Line defences. The 90th division which won the latest bridgehead two miles north of Saarlautern fought in the streets of Dilingen.

With virtually all Sarreguemines cleared the Germans fled northward toward the Saarland in a gauntlet of artillery fire. They blew five bridges behind them.

In the open country gap between the Eifel mountains and the Haguenau Forest opposite the Palatinate, the Germans stiffened. They held out doggedly in Hagenau to protect ammunition and fuel dumps. They tried to retain Mertzwieler, six miles northwest of Haguenau, with strong artillery defence — 600 rounds in an hour.

All along a 30-mile 3rd Army front north of Saarlautern to south of Sarreguemines, Patton's men were mopping up, consolidating and killing Germans.

Allies Control 700 Sq. Miles

Lt.-Gen. Bradley, commander of the 12 Army group of the 1st, 3rd and 9th armies, declared that nearly 700 square miles of Germany had been conquered in the current offensive which started a month ago tomorrow. Bradley's front now is 210 curving miles long inside Germany.

His army group has captured more than 400,000 prisoners since landings in Normandy six months ago, 44,500 of them in the current campaign, he said.

In the 9th Army sector north of Linnich, the Americans were building up assault forces along the west bank of the Roer under steady German artillery and mortar fire. Heavy enemy traffic was reported moving both ways on the Nazi side of the river, suggesting something more than a normal movement of supplies or withdrawal of a mauled division.

Short Hun Supply Lines, Narrower Front Make Date of Victory Uncertain

By JOHN DAUPHINEE
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

London, Dec. 7 (CP Cable) — The German armies, with shortened supply lines, a much narrower front on the borders of their homeland and the weather on their side, have managed to change the western front fighting picture until every advance for the seven Allied armies has become a matter of battling ahead mile by mile — often yard by yard.

During the first three months after D-Day on June 6 the Allies were able to establish solid footholds both in northern and southern France and push out from them, liberating virtually all of France and Belgium and part of Holland.

The second three months started slowly as the British, United States, Canadian and French armies gathered supplies for a new push. But even with the recent Winter offensive launched in mid-November Allied advances have been extremely limited.

The second three months was characterized by the sticky fighting the 1st. Canadian Army had to do in Holland, clearing out the Schelde Estuary so the great supply port of Antwerp could be used. The greatest advance anywhere on the west front was limited to about 80 miles—toward the southern end of the long curving front, from around Nancy to Strasbourg.

The second six-months of continental warfare opened yesterday with the Germans entrenched mainly in strong defence positions behind rivers which are in flood at this season. They are relatively close to their sources of supply, although the Allied air forces have been giving the German concentrations systems a heavy pounding.

On the other hand, even though Antwerp is open, the Allies still face tremendous supply problems on most of the front at a time when weather hinders mobility of transport. Except for the northern section of the front which is relatively inactive, the Allied armies are at least 200 miles from the nearest ports.

"It is winter; the Germans are not beaten," Oliver Lyttelton, Minister of Production, said in the House of Commons yesterday. "We may yet have to face battles sterner and bloodier than any yet fought and though victory is certain the time of victory is uncertain."

Stresses Need For Advertising To Create Work

"In distribution the difference between advertising and non-advertising is the difference between fishing with a net and a single hook".

This is the statement made by John C. Watson, president of the New York State Council of Retail Merchants Inc., in a letter to J. A. Krug, chairman of the War Production Board, in which he warned that "bith production and distribution will bog down" in the post-war period "if the merchandise which is manufactured is not sold". And he declared that "it will not be sold unless the merchant is provided with the opportunity to advertise".

The letter was written to the war Production Board of the United States in an appeal for the supply of newsprint to newspapers to be increased, the lack of which was declared to be creating a destructive situation for retailers. Mr. Watson stated that the relaxing of rationing for advertising space, more than any other single factor, will supply work and wages to millions and would build factories, stores and great organizations, "and stimulate the courage and will so necessary in the critical days ahead.

All highways leading in and out of Bancroft are now cleared of the abrupt way winter put in its appearance. Mr. and Mrs. Gordon W. Jones left this week on a business trip to Johnsonburg, Pa.

Mr. George Sweetman of Belleville installed an electrical refrigeration plant at the Quality Meat Market.

There was a meeting of the veterans in Bancroft at the Rink Club room Friday evening and as a result Milton Brough and Provincial Constable S. W. Palmateer are a committee to get the town rink under way for this year and the fact that winter put in its appearance much earlier than anticipated has made for an earlier sheet of ice for young and old. The men worked all day Saturday setting up the fence and preparing the grounds with a bull-dozer ready for flooding.

As the result of investigations carried out in the village by Provincial Officer S. W. Palmateer on complaints of breaking, entering and theft of money at the Bancroft Bakery and of ammunition at the homes of Messrs. Frank and Fred Plunkett also of the village, three Bancroft juveniles of the village will appear in Bancroft police court next Wednesday on twelve charges of breaking, entering and theft.

Mr. and Mrs. R. G. Kellar spent the weekend visiting Mr. and Mrs. Cecil Wiggins in Belleville.

Survey of All Hastings Townships To Put Idle Farms to Work On Production Urged in Report

Agricultural Committee of County Praises Urban Help in Harvesting

A survey of all townships in the county to ascertain what can be done to put the many now idle farms into agricultural production, was urged by Chairman Reeve John Bell, of the County Agricultural Committee in his annual report to County Council yesterday afternoon.

"Many milkstands that used to carry from 600-800 pounds of milk daily, now stand in ruin", Reeve Bell stated. "It is being and will be the ruination of the dairy and cheese making industries if something is not done about it".

The Madoc Cheese Board, he added, had been dropping off in sales because of lack of cheese production, which in turn is directly due to the non-productive farms of the district. This condition is rapidly becoming prevalent in many townships of the county.

For Returning Boys.

He asked that the county investigate the matter at once so that something attractive will await the boys when they come back from overseas.

"The farmer boy is, and has been, just as patriotic as his urban cousin, and is as deserving of as much when he comes home. But," Chairman Bell said, "If we have nothing to offer him except idle broken down farms how can we expect him to follow agriculture as his life's work. We will note changes in these boys and must be prepared to meet them".

"The biggest thing that faces the farmer today, is to get the farm boys back on the farm. If not sufficiently attractive they will go elsewhere, and who can blame them. It is up to us"

Warden Thomas Fleming in speaking to the report stated that it was regrettable that Hastings County many times production leader in cheese manufacture, had lost that proud title this year to another eastern county. He supported Reeve Bell in his request for investigation of idle farms.

Urban Help Appreciated.

The report paid tribute to the Belleville Chamber of Commerce and other urban associations for the assistance given county farmers during the harvest and other farming operations that required outside help.

"Mr. J. O. Herity," Chairman Bell stated, "did a fine job in organizing city help for the farmer, and fortunately not as much help was needed as was at first anticipated. The grant of $76 dollars given the Chamber of Commerce for advertising purposes had not been used in its entirety. This had been augmented by the sum of $25 from the Department of Agriculture, and consequently Mr. Herity returned the unused amount of $61."

Sees Value of Cheese Exhibition.

The agricultural chairman regretted the fact that the British Empire Cheese Exhibition had been cancelled this year due to lack of accommodation for exhibition purposes. "It seems a shame", he said, "that this county which cradled the birth of the cheese industry and which had been the home of the Exhibition for so many years, could not find sufficient space to warrant the annual display of cheese. Something should be done about it".

Tribute to Mr. Linn Fair, county agricultural representative was paid by Chairman Bell. "He has done a splendid job and his annual report to this committee will be placed before council at some time during this session". Grants to junior clubs, boys and girls work and the Cheese Exhibition had been paid during the year.

The report was adopted unanimously by council as a whole.

County Supports Recommendations Of Ont. Agricultural Council For Govt. Assistance in Rural Problems

Post-war agricultural reconstruction problems from the standpoint of improvement of farm conditions and creating employment opportunities for the great number of persons who will be demolized from the armed services and released from industry, now under consideration by the Executive Committee of the Ontario Agricultural Council, were aired before the Hastings County Council at the afternoon session on Wednesday.

Government assistance financially and otherwise will be asked by the Ontario body for a great many phases of agriculture, it was learned. The Ontario Agricultural Council is seeking concurrence of county councils of the province.

The majority of the clauses embodied in the lengthy document submitted by the O.A.C. met with the approval of the county fathers.

Parity of Living Standard Asked.

For instance they unanimously concurred in the proposal to raise the standard of farm living to a par with that of urban residents. They also supported a recommendation that government assistance be given in a housing scheme for farmers, whereas many farmers financially unable to live in the city at the present cost of living, will be able to build a home on the farm to live in while their sons carry on the family traditions.

Government assistance in the construction of dams, reforestation and soil conservation and the construction of municipal drains as outlined in other clauses received the nod of approval from the county fathers.

The telephone clauses embodied in the document, however, did not meet with council approval. These were to establish an equalized rate for rural telephone lines, and a proposal to place rural hydro and telephone lines underground wherever possible.

Rural Credit at Lowest Rate.

But they were unanimous in the proposal to establish rural credit at the lowest rate possible, also to the restoration of grants to rural community halls, and payment to those which have not received grants, also the adoption of payment of grants for the erection of rural fair buildings and skating rinks.

Council also supported the proposal for government inspection of rural halls for fire hazard and the application of government grants for alteration and rebuilding if necessary.

They smiled satisfactorily at the clause calling for rural road improvements and the erection of permanent hedges to be used as snow fences, and supported it.

Want Standard Time.

Requests for concurrence in a resolution asking the government to order a return to Standard Time were read from the councils of Waterloo and Lincoln Counties.

The Waterloo resolution charged that Daylight Saving Time has proved detrimental to the health of school children and had also proved a deterrent to farm labor. There was no discussion on the part of Hastings Council and it concurred with both resolutions.

Boys Overseas Send Greetings To Kinsmen Club

Christmas greetings from Belleville boys serving overseas already have been received by Chairman Buster LaBarr of the Kinsmen "Fag fund." In scores of replies received the boys on the fighting fronts wish to be remembered to all the home folk, but stress the need of Canadian cigarettes and smokes.

"The cigarettes issued to us here in England are not up to the standard of Canadian smokes, which all of the lads here term as a 'treat' whenever they can procure some," wrote Sergt. E. J. Sills of the R.C.A.F. Other letters of a similar nature stressing the need of Canadian cigarettes as a morale builder next to letters from home.

ATHENS

Athens-Piraeus area of hostile EL. AS. forces is progressing steadily. By nightfall (yesterday) large areas had been freed and were being picketed by Greek and British regular troops.

"In some cases field artillery had been used to clear E.L.A.S. strongpoints interfering with movement of our troops. Material damage to civilian property was slight.

"It has been confirmed that a German officer has been captured while commanding a detachment of E.L.A.S. troops."

The planes were sent into action after the resisting Greek forces failed to heed an ultimatum issued by Maj.-Gen. R. M. Scobie, commander of British troops in Greece. The ultimatum expired at midnight.

At 8:15 A. M. the fighter planes dipped low over a park east of Hadrian's Gate and the Temple of Zeus, where E.L.A.S. sniping had been reported strongest. Smoke and flames spurted up from a wooded hillside in the middle of the park.

But after the planes had passed, a steady popping still could be heard from the park.

Shellfire echoed through the city throughout the night as British Sherman tanks, located less than a mile from the centre of the city, fired their 75's at an E.L.A.S. stronghold in the quarter behind the modern stadium.

Papandreou in his press conference described the British role as "not only a friendly service but a duty because the present situation results from the war."

"If we had an army we should not need assistance, but the Greek Army was sacrificed on the altar of liberty," he said. "Therefore we ask in exchange that the Allies help in ensuring the Greek people of freedom.

"Greece will try to organize a regular army as soon as possible, not only to ensure the people's liberty but also to play a part in the common victory of freedom."

He reiterated promises to hold a free plebiscite on the question of Greece's form of government and constitution and free elections.

He flatly denied the Leftist charge that he was attempting to impose a dictatorship.

He said British action in Greece did not constitute intervention but was "help towards the realization of President Roosevelt's great principle of the four freedoms."

Central Makers To Compete In Western Ontario

Despite the fact there was no exhibition in Belleville this autumn, Central Ontario cheese makers are availing themselves of the opportunity to contest in the Western Ontario exhibition scheduled for London in January and have already forwarded a number of cheese in readiness for the show.

Central Ontario Cheese Makers' Association has donated $100 cash prize money for award to Central Ontario makers only, while makers from this district will also contest in several of the classes open to the Dominion.

Annually seeing many of the major prizes at the Belleville exhibition go to Western Ontario makers because of the better finish of their cheese, this year district makers will make their showing at London an educational venture. A week or ten days prior to the London show which is scheduled for January 10th and 11th, makers in that area will conduct a cheese finishing demonstration which will be attended by several Quinte district makers. It is thought about three makers will attend the demonstration, they in turn to pass information on to other local makers.

Some Serious Facts

To combat the alarming growth of venereal disease, the Department of National Health and Welfare, has instituted a campaign in an effort to "further Canada's fight" against this menace to her national health. This insidious disease that is no respecter of sex or person has taken an alarming toll of the health of Canada's young manhood and womanhood, and all clear-thinking citizens will align themselves with the national effort to bring to a minimum if not entirely eliminate this ravager of Canadian youth.

The roots of the problem of venereal disease lie buried deep in inherent defects of human behaviour, in unwholesome community conditions and in a failure to apply proper remedial conditions. Canada and Canadians are in a position today to overcome this threat, but to do so must present a concerted front in the attack upon a relentless enemy.

An end of the old policy of concealment must be made—the facts, however unpleasant, must be brought to light. Secrecy is the home in which the disease thrives, and to bring it into the open is half the battle.

It is estimated that over 300,000 Canadians have syphilis with a large number likely unreported. Seventy-five per cent of all V.D. cases are acquired by the fifteen to thirty years age group with the peak at pre-marriage age. The innocent frequently become infected, and the health of the unborn child may become impaired and sometimes ruined, unless the necessary measures are taken in time by the mother.

The Department of Health's program calls for an attack on a four-sector front—health, welfare, legal and moral. Education, medical care of pre-marital and prenatal blood testing, abolition of quackery, these are the chief objectives of the health sector.

The struggle of the community resolves itself to the solution of social problems. The legal sector has the responsibility of enforcing the laws against commercialized vice while the elimination of squalor and overcrowding is the job of the welfare sector. The home ,church and school can join the forces of the moral arm of attack.

But the co-operation of every citizen is absolutely essential if victory in this fight is to be assured. Lt.-Col. Williams, an army doctor, states, "We have at hand all the means necessary to hold at bay these master saboteurs of war effort and national health. Canada's health objective should be to reduce the realm of venereal disease to the vanishing point."

Britain's Greatest Battleship

Britain has launched her mightiest battleship and this being wartime the size, armament and the name of the great vessel are withheld for security reasons but it is said by the First Lord of the Admiralty that she is "to sail in tropical waters against an enemy we particularly want to beat," which means that her target is Japan.

It was a slender young girl of eighteen, the Princess Elizabeth, who in this launching performed the first important duty of her life. She paused half way up the ramp to the launching platform when a band played "God Save the King," and the personal standard—the Royal Arms of Britain with the heraldic label of the heiress to the throne—broke out on the flag-staff. A clergyman read the service, the Princess cut the tape to send a bottle of red wine against the bow, pressed a button to start the launching gear moving, she hesitated a moment, named the ship and added the ancient prayer, "May God bless this ship and all who sail in her."

So is sent on her career this great warship to voice with the sound of the thunder of her guns the retribution she brings to visit upon the enemy.

The building of the ship is a tribute to British shipbuilders in wartime, and to the British view of the importance and value of the battleship in modern war, despite the opinion by some a while ago that the battleship has passed its day. The great ship has a mission she will perform.

Into her making there have been built the latest experiences in war, the highest skill of shipbuilders and the national aim to hunt down the Axis defenders wherever she may find them. Into her has been brought the finest equipment so that this battleship, sent on her way by a young Princess may prove what she is, the mightiest warcraft believed afloat on the oceans of the world.

There is seen in this event the assurance that Britain is going to play her full part in the Pacific war and to bring it to a conclusion at the earliest date.

While Britain has her greatest battleship launched the upturned hulk of the German Tirpitz lies on the bottom of a Norwegian fjord, her work done, (but not nobly), for she did not seek action but was used by the enemy for molesting commerce and convoys. Germany's naval hopes have gone, her ships have largely gone down. But Britain trusts in the battleship as of great use in modern war as she has proven in the present struggle. Her strength can be used in preserving order upon the seas.

To Britain's seaspower it is a natural development, it is part of the way in which law and order are maintained, it is part of the force that is crushing Hitler as it did the former Kaiser Wilhelm back in 1918.

Road To Victory

(New York Times)

The way to victory still may be long and hard. The German Home Guard of young boys and old men, with the guns of Himmler's SS troops at its back, may prove a more formidable foe than it would appear to be in prospect. But it cannot be, with no more training that it has had, as formidable an antagonist as the remaining force of regular German divisions now fighting west of the Rhine what is perhaps the last great battle of the Western Front. Perhaps soon in the north, as it apparently has already in the south, German resistance will begin to crack.

Ordering Hens Around

(Christian Science Monitor)

Owing to the shortage of fodder in Germany, a stern Nazi decree has just been issued requiring every hen to produce at least 70 eggs per annum. The official order has caused considerable consternation in the barnyards of the Fatherland, for Section 2 unequivocally states that if the egg production falls below the necessary total of 70 the hen-owner will suffer unpleasant consequences. Our own Hentelligence Department reports that, rather than take any chances in the matter, roast chicken, fried chicken, and chicken fricasse are becoming increasingly frequent items on the German farmers' menu.

Gravity Suit Worn by Pilots

(Army and Navy Journal)

The gravity suit, a new device worn by P-51 and P-47 pilots, applies pressure to the wearer's abdomen and legs during a pull-out or turn, thus preventing the blood from pooling in the lower extremities and aiding the heart to maintain circulation to the brain. Blacking out has heretofore limited the pursuit manoeuvres which pilots could withstand. Pressure in the suit, which resembles tight, high-waisted pants with built-in suspenders and girdle, is supplied by air bladders over the abdomen, thighs and calves. The bladders are inflated by compressed air from the aircrafts's vacuum instruments.

British Women's Shoes Larger

("Britain" Magazine)

A few years ago, the average size woman's shoe in Britain was 4 or 4½. Now it is nearer 6 or 6½.

The war, responsible for so many other trials and tribulations, is at the back of this misfortune too. Women walk more, stand more, and line up more. Their feet spread.

ANOTHER CHRISTMAS

Another Christmas drawing near;
  Another Christmas spoiled with hate
And sorrow's agony and fear,
  While still for peace on earth we wait!

Another Christmas soon to be,
  And scarce one family circle whole!
Some loved one, land or sky or sea,
  Serving his country, heart and soul!

Still, for the joys he comes to bring
  Let no one Santa wait in vain,
And when the bells of midnight ring
  Once more let love and laughter reign.

For those who fight for us away
  And those who dare, for us, to die
Are trusting us this Christmas Day
  For their sake not to pass it by.

SHIRE AND COUNTY

"Shire," the name of the larger administrative districts in Great Britain, is now generally synonymous with "county."

Americans often erroneously speak of "the County of Berkshire," forgetful of the fact that "shire" and "county" mean the same thing. We should say, of course, the County of Berks, or Berkshire.

The division of England into shires was the result of the partition of the country among various local chieftains.

There are two theories as to the origin of "shire." According to one, the term is cognate with "shear," to cut off, and originally referred to the "share" or part allotted to each chieftain. The other derives it from Anglo-Saxon "scir," meaning office, charge or administration.

It is supposed that "sheriff" is derived from "shire-reeve," the sheriff originally having been the reeve of the shire or king representative in the county.

The Moslem "shereef" literally means "great one" and is not etymologically related to English "sheriff."

Under Norman rule the Anglo-French "counte" (from Latin comitatus, the domain of a count or earl) was introduced as a substitute for "shire." This became "county."

In England at the present time "shire" is not restricted to counties. It survives in "Richmondshire" and "Hallamshire" in Yorkshire, and "Norhamshire" and "Hexamshire" in Northumberland, which in early times were regarded as separate entities.

On the other hand, "shire" is not applied indiscriminately to all counties. For instance, the inhabitants of East Anglia, Kent, Sussex, Essex and Surrey do not apply either "shire" or "county" to their own counties, but they refer to the rest of England as "the Shires."

"The Shires" is also the designation of Leicester, Northhampton and Rutland as hunting country.

Many people in England restrict "Shire" to those counties having names ending in "shire," such as Berkshire, Derbyshire, etc.

When used alone "shire" is pronounced to rhyme with "sire"; when used at the end of a county name it is pronounced "shir" or "sher."

JUSTICE MINISTER LINES HIMSELF ON GOVT. SIDE

First Quebec Minister to Approve of Partial Conscription

By FRANK FLAHERTY
(Canadian Press Staff Writer.)

Ottawa, Dec. 7 (CP)—Members of the House of Commons set their eyes on a new ball today—a vote, adjournment and home.

Last week the former Defence Minister, Col. J. L. Ralston, advised them to keep their eyes on the ball of reinforcements for the army overseas. Ever since they have been talking about just that, but today their leaders had agreed to wind up debate tonight.

If the plan works out, the most unusual meeting of parliament in years will have lasted just 11 days, one of them devoted to a secret sitting.

Throughout yesterday's six hours of debate member after member addressed himself to the main question of reinforcements overseas, but the chief event was the speech from Justice Minister St. Laurent, the first Quebec cabinet minister to speak and the first Quebec member to take the government side on the question of making 16,000 home defence troops available for overseas service.

Hard One to Make.

Mr. St. Laurent said the government's decision was a hard one for him to support politically, but declared he proposed to "stand or fall" with Prime Minister Mackenzie King. He said he came to Ottawa to do a war job, referring to his acceptance of the justice portfolio following the death of the late Rt. Hon. Ernest Lapointe. He proposed to stay on the job as long as he thought he could be useful.

Up to Nov. 22 Mr. St. Laurent said he believed the voduntary system would provide the reinforcements required. n the face of the report then made to cabinet by Defence Minister McNaughton he could no longer hold that view.

In accepting the measure of overseas conscription now in effect he felt the House would not begrudge him what comfort he could take from the fact that home defence troops in substantial numbers were volunteering for overseas service and the powers of compulsion might not be used to a great extent.

Could Not Remain Out.

Canada he said, could not have remained out of the war and survived as a nation. Canada's participation so far had been important and vital and without it the war might have been lost. The war had still to go on.

"This time we must pursue our victory to such a conclusion that never again shall any German or Japanese living today or any of their children dare to threaten the peace of the world or endeavor to enslave it" he said. "I believe that this nation must continue to contribute its full share to the joint efforts of that gallant company of free nations pledged and determined to achieve and consolidate that kind of a victory."

The important fact now was that the reinforcements to be provided to the forces overseas "will be neither insufficient nor delayed."

Pouliot Critical.

One of the sharpest attacks yet made on the Prime Minister came yesterday from one of the senior Liberal members of the House, J. F. Pouliot who crossed the floor to the independent benches with the announcement of the government's measure of overseas conscription.

He accused the Prime Minister of ignoring his own party since the outbreak of war and of seeking advice from the opposition. He wound up his speech with the words:

"The Liberal party is dead. The Prime Minister has killed it. It is as dead as the Tory party."

Maurice Bourget (Ind-Levis) and Charles Parent (Ind—Quebec West and South) who crossed the floor at the same time also spoke in opposition to overseas conscription as did several Liberals who remained in the party, including Vincent Dupuis, Chambly-Rouville; J. A. Crete, St. Maurice-LaFleche and Armand Cloutier, Drummond-Athabasca.

Too Many Taken Off.

From the opposition side Rodney Adamson (PC—York West), Douglas Ross (PC—Toronto, St. Pauls) and Harry Jackman (PC-Toronto Rosedale) urged complete adoption of the compulsory system of recruiting and sending men overseas while William Bryce (CCF—Selkirk) declared himself for adequate reinforcements, but complained that too many men had been taken off the farms.

Possibly five different votes will be taken today if the House winds up its business. The main question will be voted on last. It is a motion declaring the House will support the government in maintaining a vigorous war effort.

Before the House now is a Progressive Conservative amendment declaring the government has failed to assure a continuous and adequate supply of reinforcements for the army overseas and calling for making all home defence troops liable for service in any theatre of war.

There is also a sub-amendment sponsored by dissenting Liberals expressing opposition to compulsory overseas service. In prospect after one or both of these amendments are voted down are others sponsored by the C.C.F. and "Social Credit parties.

CRANK ABOUT EXERCISE

Members of my family sometimes complain bitterly that whatever they complain of seems always to call for fresh air and exercise. Meaning they have to groan like the devil to get an okeh for any medicine from me. But then, a doctor should never attempt to treat members of his family or even more distant relatives.

I do believe a reasonable amount of exercise is good for nearly everybody. It is perfectly evident, to my mind, that a great many people suffer from lack of, neglect of or insufficient cultivation of daily exercise—physical work, playing games, athletics or just gymnastic or calisthenic exercise.

For the geek who conducts this column a fair minimum amount of exercise for a day consists of, say a dozen rolls, a dozen of each of the movements of the Last Brady Symphony as indicated and illustrated in "The 7 Keys to Vita" (for copy send 25 cts. and stamped pre-addressed envelope) half a dozen runs up and down one flight of stairs, a walk of seven blocks to the bowling green, one or two games of lawn bowls, a walk back home, three or four sprints upstairs to the studio to see that all the girls punch the time clock etc., and so another day. That is the minimum amount of physical activity for a mature adult I believe.

Now listen to this Montreal lad. He is 64 and for five years he has spent 20 to 30 minutes every morning in bending exercises, in spite of the views of some authorities about the dangers of exercise for persons past fifty or sixty. Moreover he does 1000 of the standing-and-touching-toes bends, or else 1000 lying-on-back and raising legs to vertical.

A thousand times at a seance, mark you!

The lad says he started that with the idea of correcting constipation, and he think it has helped. But now he wonders whether there is any actual danger to the heart or arteries if he continues his daily stint as described.

First, I don't believe exercise is particularly good for constipation, or rather I should say a reasonable amount of exercise daily—such as walking three to six miles—will do everything for constipation that any more strenuous exercise possibly can do.

Whether the lad should go right on doing his thousand setting-up movements daily he himself can answer far better than I can. If he feels OK immediately after the seance and one or more hours afterward, the indulgence is OK. If he doesn't feel fine and dandy right after the exercise or an hour or two afterward then he had better ease down to a reasonable number of movements at each seance—from half a dozen to twenty or thirty. If he still doesn't feel so good after the exercise, then he had better consult his physician.

Whitehall Notebook

By JOHN DAUPHINEE
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

London, Dec. 7—(CP)—The Conservative party believes "that the greatest chance for the common good arises from improving what we have rather than uprooting and beginning again," Production Minister Oliver Lyttelton said, in an address in which he outlined a 7-point program for future Conservative policy.

"The Conservative policy is a forward policy," Mr. Lyttelton told the Conservative Association in Birmingham. "We believe in action. We believe in progress within the framework of society as it is constituted."

The Production Minister's policy program contained these points:

1. Strength to defend ourselves.
2. Positive action to promote full employment with special emphasis on exports and agriculture.
3. Stability of the pound.
4. Social insurance.
5. Strengthening of the ties of Empire.
6. Private enterprise.
7. Not being regimented nor over-governed.

Amplifying this reference to Empire ties, Mr. Lyttelton said the first outlet for British capital should be in helping fellow Britons.

"Our first thought," he said, "must be to strengthen the ties that bind us by education, by trade, by political consultation, and by standing together to preserve peace."

"A new age may be dawning for our colonial empire with the growth of communications and the advance of science. Here again is one of the first outlets for British capital and with new sources of health to be developed in the colonies, new openings present themselves for our exports to our mutual advantage."

WEDDINGS

LAWES—JONES

The marriage of Miss Ruth Evelyn Jones, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Earl Jones, Thomasburg, to Mr. Allan Leslie Lawes, Frankford, son of the late Mr. and Mrs. Albert Lawes, of Frankford, took place at the home of the bride's parents, on Saturday evening, Dec. 2, at seven o'clock. The ceremony was performed by Rev. B. Haywood, of Thomasburg.

Given in marriage by her father, the bride was becomingly attired in a floor length white chiffon gown, fashioned with a sweetheart neckline and shirred waist. Her fingertip veil fell from a Mary Stuart headdress, and she carried a shower bouquet of red roses.

Miss Marion Jones, sister of the bride, as bridesmaid, wore a floor length pink chiffon gown. She wore a cape length veil which was caught to her hair with pink and blue flowers. She carried a Colonial nosegay.

The bride's cousin, Miss Noreen Jones, was flower girl and wore a pale blue taffeta dress and carried a bouquet of red carnations.

During the signing of the register, Mrs. Haywood sang "I Love You Truly". Miss Elizabeth Gordon played the wedding music.

Mrs. Jones, mother of the bride, received wearing turquoise crepe with corsage of red carnations, assisted by Mrs. Chas. Harvey, of Frankford, aunt of the groom, wearing orchid crepe with a corsage of red carnations.

Following the ceremony, guests numbering thirty-one were served dinner by a number of the bride's friends.

For travelling, the bride wore a gold crepe dress, spruce green coat, with a cross-fox collar, and carried brown accessories. Following a trip to Montreal the couple will reside in Frankford.

PECOSKI—GOOD

Frankford.— St. Francis' Church, decorated with pastel yellow mums, was the lovely setting for the marriage on November 28th., at ten o'clock in the morning, of Kathleen Good, Trenton, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Anthony Good, of Frankford, to Adolphe Leonard Pecoskie, Toronto, son of Mr. Vincent Pecoskie and the late Mrs. Pecoskie. The Rev. L. Lesage was the officiating clergyman.

The wedding music was played by Miss Helen Armstrong. Miss Madeline Shea, of Stirling, delightfully rendered, 'Ave Maria' and Miss Vera Lyons sang: 'On This Day O Beautiful Mother'.

Given in marriage by her father, the bride was charming in her floor length gown of white satin and lace, fashioned on princess lines, with skirt of lace, yoked bodice and full length sleeves. The skirt was appliqued with a large beautiful satin flower in the front. Her floor length veil of bridal tulle illusion was caught to her hair with a sweetheart headdress. She carried an arm bouquet of pink roses.

Miss Mary Good, twin sister of the bride, as her only attendant, wore turquoise silk jersey with matching chapeau of turquoise flowers from which fell a cape length veil. She carried a bouquet of red roses and fern.

Anthony V. Shulist, of Craigmont, was groomsman, and the usher was Francis Murphy, Frankford.

A reception was held at Firhurst Manor, Trenton, following the ceremony. The bride's mother received the guests wearing a King's blue crepe gown, matching blue hat and accessories and corsage of white flowers.

The groom's gift to the bride was a gold bracelet. The bride's gift to the bridesmaid was a gold identification bracelet; to the pianist, a gold compact, and to the soloists, gold earrings and silver dollars. The groom's gift to the best man was a pen and pencil set, and to the usher a wallet.

On the wedding trip to Ottawa and Craigmont, the bride donned a crepe ensemble in gold shade, chocolate brown accessories, and top coat of green with tuxedo front of Mouton fur.

Out-of-town guests were present from Trenton, Batawa and Craigmont. Mr. and Mrs. Pecoskie will take up residence in Toronto.

Two Brides-Elect Feted by Friends

Trenton.—Miss Alma Goodsell, Queen Street, was hostess on Tuesday evening to about twenty young ladies in honor of Miss June Bonisteel and Miss Evelyn Sweetman. Miss Sweetman is to be married on Saturday next in Deer Park United Church, Toronto, while Miss Bonisteel is to be married early in the New Year.

Pink and white streamers and silver bells decorated the dining table which seated the guests of honor, along with Miss Bonisteel's mother, Mrs. D. T. Bonisteel, and Miss Sweetman's sister, Mrs. J. VanAlstine. Smaller tables nearby were gaily decorated for the other members of the party.

On behalf of the gathering, Miss Goodsell presented Miss Sweetman with a beautiful table lamp, while an identical gift was presented to Miss Bonisteel by Miss Virginia Black.

An inspiring and enlightening address by Miss Marguerite Jackson followed which gave the girls plenty of advice for their future needs.

"Such a time as this comes in the lives of most young ladies", said Miss Jackson. "We all hope that you both may sail merrily on the high sea of matrimony for which no compass has yet been invented". She continued with several tips, which all agreed would be well to remember.

Though completely surprised, both Miss Bonisteel and Miss Sweetman very suitably and capably thanked their many friends for their kindness.

Cards and other games filled the balance of the evening, after which dainty refreshments were served by the hostess.

Fashion Flashes

NICE GOING in platform soles, and nice going on the part of the manufacturers to get them back to us so quickly. A dumbell ornament in black faille matches the faille-edged sole of a black suede open-back sandal-strap shoe for afternoon wear.

No end to the use of scarves as an accessory aid. A big square pailletted scarf in a Paisley design makes over a simple frock when tucked in the neckline and gathered into the belt to flow into a point on the skirt. Two scarves can work up a nice jumper effect.

Most becoming is the verdict of almost every woman who tries on a hat of winter-white felt or hatter's plush. A charming tricorne in winter-white hatter's plush has coq feather trimming in brown shaded to bronze and a cobwebby brown lace veil.

Just made to go with casual, afternoon or evening things is the fur jacket with convertible sleeves, which, when unhooked, give a perfect cape effect. This design is seen in every type of fur ranging from sable-dyed squirrel to broadtail.

A survey of new southern fashions gives a good idea of the many novelties awaiting us next summer. A symmetric draping, with one bare shoulder, is a feature of a charming beach dress done in Guatemalan cotton—red, blue and gold stripes on black. Rippled bustle bow in back.

INDIA MAKING ALL-OUT EFFORT IN ALLIED CAUSE

Problems of India Subject of Address Before Women's Canadian Club

"India is making an all-out total war effort in support of this conflict", said Mr. George P. Bryce, M.A., B.D., B.Paed., in his very fine address on the subject of "India Today and Tomorrow" to the members of the Women's Canadian Club in Bridge Street Sunday School rooms on Wednesday night. Mr. Bryce was educated at Toronto and Columbia Universities. He went to India first as a Y.M.C.A. supervisor, but for the greater part of his life there, he has been a teacher in a vocational school. Now on a lecture tour, Mr. Bryce will soon be returning to India to continue his work.

Mr. Bryce in his very vivid oration discussed the political problem of India. He wanted to emphasize the fact that India is a country at war. First, because of its strategic position, and secondly because of its great army two million strong, and thirdly, because of its great production line supplying materials for war. At the same time however, he said that the largest of the political parties are not supporting the war effort. The greatest of these political parties is the India National Congress. Why is this political party not supporting the war effort? Mr. Gandhi once said, "Non-violence has been our creed for twenty years". Gandhi.

Speaking about Mr Gandhi for a few moments, Mr. Bryce stated that he is one of the most notable men in Asia today, that he has done certain things which are important, and that he has stood for different things which are significant. He is a man who cares nothing for material comforts. He has had influence on the minds of the people of India, and he has brought a political consciousness to them. He is unique in his policies, and he is entitled to a considerable measure of respect because he has stuck to his high moral idea, that of non-violence and non-co-operation. He is applying this ancient principle to politics. Congress has supported him, and so therefore will not favor the war effort.

Government.

"There is in India", continued Mr. Bryce, "the demand for self-government". By means of a chart, he showed the changes in the forms of government for India from the year 1861 to the present time. There is self-government in the provinces just as in the province of Ontario, but India is desirous of self-government at the centre.

And in order to have self-government at the centre, several different groups will have to agree. Forty percent of the area and 25 percent of the population of India is not British-ruled but under the control of the Princes of India. These Princes at the Round Table Conference in 1942 agreed to consider coming into the confederation uniting all India. What does Confederation involve? Separate political units, through the medium of their representatives, will sit down and write out a constitution for new things. In order to have this constitution, some of these units will have to give up certain privileges and rights to which they have been accustomed. This new "super government" will have the right to do certain things. These Princes would have to give up certain rights which they now enjoy in order to set up a new constitution.

Indian Princes.

Mr. Bryce spoke at length of the states over which these Princes rule. These particular states have certain rights and privileges given to them by the treaty. Some people believe that these states should be done away with. The question that confronts us today is how we are going to bring these Princes around.

Problem in India.

Another question that presents a difficult problem in India today is that of the Mohammedans and the Hindus. The Hindus number 300,000,000 and the Mohammedans are in the minority numbering 90,000,000. The Mohammedans say that they are not prepared to come into a confederation because the Hindus who are in the majority will override them. They say, "Let us have our own provinces". The Hindus, on the other hand say, "Could you consider the sacred dissection of Mother India?" The conflict in India is not between India and Great Britain, but it is between the different groups which have not been able to come together and agree on a stable government.

"We, as Canadians, should have a different attitude towards the India question", said Mr. Bryce. "I think that they should have the right to rule their own country. Nationalism has brought about this great demand on their part for self government.

It gets its drive from heated feelings, emotions, and these people who are experiencing these emotions disregard the "lions in the path". After victory has been won for the Allies I look for the time, stated Mr. Bryce, when India attains complete self-government. The students from India, after returning from British colleges, naturally wish for democracy in their own country. India has the right to choose her own form of government and to determine her own status". If the atmosphere in India today continues, on the day that Britain would grant self-government there would be a state of mental strife, according to his view.

There are, however, three elements of hopefulness in this situation. The National Congress has points of hopefulness in it. The existence of the Christian church and the Christian community can act as a mediator between the Mohammedans and the Hindus. The appointment of Lord Wavell as the Viceroy of India is another favoring element. He is a man of initiative, of executive ability. He possesses a keen mind, and has the power to project his own personality. He has the imagination which will help him to appeal to the people of India.

Club appreciation was expressed by Mrs. H. O. Trusdale.

Unveil Honor Roll At Crofton

Burrs—Crofton church held a beautiful and interesting service recently when an Honor Roll was unveiled in commemoration of thirteen young men and women of the neighborhood who are serving in the armed forces.

The pulpit and altar rail were decorated with flags. A flag covered table, holding the framed Honor Roll, with the following names, Betty Bongard, Lillian Caughey, Earl Cook, George Parsons, Herb Parsons, Gordon Caughey, Robert Weatherhead, Will Soble, Robert Werden, Harry Oram, Albert Kley, Lorne Young, Vernon Harry, was flanked on each side with a basket of beautiful mums. It also held photos of the uniformed young people. Vases of mums decorated the side tables. While the congregation stood at attention, Mr. Joe Cook unveiled the Honor Roll, while Mrs. H. Parsons, who has a husband and son in the services read the names. Following this, Rev. Lorne Burr dedicated the Honor Roll to the church and offered prayer. Appropriate hymns were sung with the choir singing an anthem and Mrs. Lorne Burr contributing a solo. Rev. Mr. Burr took for his subject "How to be a good soldier." Lyttelton Warns Nations Must Not Relax Tension

London, Dec. 7 (CP)—Breaking into the House of Commons debate on export trade after several members had voiced concern that the United States was getting the jump on Britain, Production Minister Oliver Lyttelton today warned that with perhaps the bloodiest battles of the war yet to be fought, the government post-war trade policy could not be formed, much less expressed.

"We may yet have to face battles sterner and bloodier than we have yet fought and although victory is certain, the time of victory is uncertain," he declared.

Impressions that Britain could start now to improve exports substantially were "false," he added, and "would mean delay in victory and with it the loss of tens of thousands of men who are the flower of the country and to them we look to be the fathers of our future."

He promised some change-overs from war production and release of some war workers to civilian jobs next year but warned "we must not relax the tension—every hour lost now may mean another hour of war."

Cheese Makers Given Progress Report on Efforts to Improve Quality and Production of Cheese

The Central Ontario Cheese Makers' Association wound up its two-day convention here on Wednesday afternoon with ranking dairy officials relating strides which had been made in the clarification of milk for cheese factory purposes and giving 1945 production and grading figures for cheese manufactured in Canada during the first ten months of the year.

Removal of Sediment.

E. G. Hood, Chief, Dairy Branch Science Service, Experimental Farm, Ottawa, told his listeners that recent developments in machinery for the clarification of milk had done much to take out sediment, with cheese milk so processed resulting in a better quality of cheese being produced and at the same time giving increased yield. The clarification had no detrimental effect on the cheese, it was stated.

The report was given to makers only as an indication of what might be attempted in Canada duuring the post-war period when it was trusted that experimentation along this line would be done. Clarification equipment described by the speaker was claimed to be expensive, but on the other hand, the improved quality and increased yield of cheese would soon pay for the equipment.

Need Smaller Packaging.

Mr. Hood also referred to the need for smaller packaging of cheddar cheese in a size to meet more with the needs of domestic demand. He stated that in the United States considerable experimentation had been done in search of a suitable wrapper which would allow the cheese to be seen and at the same time preserve quality and prevent formation of a rind. Adoption of packaging of cheddar cheese in Canada would result in increased profits to the cheese making industry, it was stated.

1944 Production Increased.

In giving the report of the 1944 cheese grading Douglas M. Beattie, Associate Chief, Grading and Inspection Services, Department of Agriculture, Ottawa, showed where cheese production for the first ten months of the year showed an increase of 141,270 boxes over the corresponding period last year. Production in Canada this year had been 1,547,624 boxes. Percentage of both first grade cheese and of high scoring first grade cheese had shown a decrease.

Referring to Ontario production records, Mr. Beattie stated 60 per cent of all cheese made in the province had been manufactured in the Eastern Ontario district; slightly more than 22 per cent had come from Central Ontario; 17 per cent from Western Ontario and one per cent from Northern Ontario. Approximately 58.8 per cent of all cheese manufactured in Canada had been made in Ontario, it was stated. The quality of cheese, as indicated by the percentage found to be first grade, was better in Ontario than that produced in any other province.

Ontario Cheese Grade High.

Of Ontario cheese graded, 96.37 per cent was placed in first grade with the percentage of first grade cheese made in other provinces given as follows: Quebec, 91.52; Manitoba, 90.96; British Columbia, 87.81; New Brunswick, 85.99; Saskatchewan, 78.95; Alberta, 77.96, and for all Canada, 93.32 per cent.

The need for continued high quality of cheese was stressed by the speaker, he indicating that all other things being equal, cheese of the highest quality will have the chance of receiving the highest price on the export market.

In closing the convention President Harold Henderson expressed his regret that the annual cheese exhibition ordinarily featuring the meeting in Belleville was unable to be held this year. He promised, however, that another year would see resumption of the British Empire Cheese Exhibition in Belleville.

People Have Lost Govt. Confidence Says John Bracken

Ottawa, Dec. 7 (CP) — John Bracken, National Progressive Conservative leader, said in a radio address last night that the Liberal Government has lost the confidence of the people and a general election might become unavoidable in the near future.

He said his party had not sought an election but "we have come to a pass in this country where it may become unavoidable. Certainly it must not be postponed beyond the life of this parliament."

(Life of the present parliament expires April 17, 1945.)

Mr. Bracken said the government would have the support in the confidence motion now before the Commons of those in other groups who wished to avoid a general election.

General application of the National Resources Mobilization Act, making all home defence personnel available for overseas service, was the only method that now could be adopted which would give reasonable satisfaction to those in the armed forces.

The government was divided within itself and was responsible for an unequal burden of human sacrifice, the placing of a stigma on French-Canadians and a "lamentable state of disunity."

Must be Appeal

"Confidence in government policy will never be restored until there is placed in office a government that is united in policy and purpose, a government that is determined that this nation will not waste its manpower for political ends or call upon its sons unequally for party gain," he said.

"Such a government, it is now clear, will not be obtained until there is an appeal to the people."

Mr. King held office because of his "political manipulation of the racial problem," which had brought the country to the verge of national disaster.

The Progressive Conservative party stood for Canadian unity but Confederation could not last on a basis of inequity.

"It believes there can be lasting union only when there is an approach to the equal sharing of burdens, and this can only come when every section of the nation accepts as the basic condition of nationhood equal responsibilities for all and equal sacrifices for all in time of war as well as in time of peace", he said.

Chinese Admit Loss of Tushan

Chungking, Dec. 7 (AP) — The Chinese high command today admitted loss of Tushan, 75 miles southeast of the Burma Road citadel of Kweiyang, amid indications a Japanese offensive was in full swing toward Kunming.

Fall of Kunming would virtually hamstring the prospective new India-China supply route and deal the U.S. 14th. Air Force a crippling blow.

In a special communique the Chinese said Tushan fell the morning of December 5. The Japanese had claimed the town was captured December 2.

Its capture set up the possibility of a two-fold enemy drive northward on Kweiyang and westward to Kunming, 300 miles distant.

Meanwhile it appeared another Japanese column was moving toward Kunming up the Yu River from captured Manning, former advance base for American fighter planes, which fell to the enemy last week.

The enemy drive up the Yu Valley has not yet been mentioned by the Chinese high command. The Chungking newspaper Ta Kung Pao openly accused Chinese military leaders of giving an inaccurate picture of developments.

Senate Declines To Act at Once On Appointments

Washington, Dec. 7 (AP) — In a startling upset, the United States Senate declined to act immediately yesterday on President Roosevelt's nominations of four high state department appointees. They were returned to the Foreign Relations Committee for further study.

The Foreign Relations Committee Tom Connally (Dem.-Tex.) pleaded in vain for prompt approval of the nomination of Joseph C. Grew as Undersecretary of States, and of three assistant secretaries—W. L. Clayton, Nelson A. Rockefeller and Archibald MacLeish.

The committee approved the appointments only Tuesday without formal hearings and this fact, together with arguments that little was known to the Senate about the political ideals of some of the appointees, bolstered the move for recommittal.

GIANT TOMCAT RULES FOREST KINGDOM

Powell Ranger Station, Mont., Dec. 7 (AP)—Old Solitude, a giant tomcat has resumed his annual winter-long rule over a forest kingdom of 500,000 acres in Western Montana since a forest service crew left the scene. Each year the crew leaves the cat behind at the Ranger station. When they return in the spring Old Solitude, fat on mice and gophers romps out to meet them.

M. F. HEPBURN HOUSE LEADER IN LEGISLATURE

Former Premier of Ontario Accepts Invitation of Caucus to Take Charge

Toronto, Dec. 7 (CP)—Mitchell F. Hepburn today prepared to resume an active role in Ontario political life as House leader of the 16-man Liberal group in the 90-seat Ontario legislature. The one-time stormy petrel of provincial politics accepted an invitation yesterday from a caucus of Liberal members to become their leader in the legislature once more.

The invitation was voiced by Harry C. Nixon, Ontario leader of the party, who tendered his resignation and moved that Mr. Hepburn be his successor.

The provincial leadership remains unchanged for the time being, Mr. Nixon emphasizing in a brief oral statement after the caucus that it was a matter for a provincial convention to settle adding: "We'll take one step at a time and keep it legal."

Another Liberal source said it was to be expected that a convention will be called early next year, possibly before the end of January, to discuss the provincial leadership. It was reported that Mr. Hepburn would be a candidate for party leadership but neither he nor other Liberal members would comment.

Enthusiastic About Future.

The Liberal members were enthusiastic about their future under the leadership of Mr. Hepburn who led the party to victory twice in provincial elections—in 1934 and again in 1937. Three cheers and a tiger were heard from the caucus room as the meeting ended and one member kept repeating as he came out: "We're on the road to victory."

Aside from confirming his acceptance of the House leadership, Mr. Hepburn himself had no comment.

However Mr. Nixon said he will serve under his old leader "most enthusiastically." After Mr. Hepburn recovered his health it was the unanimous feeling of all the members, "including myself" that he should lead the party in the House.

The return to the House leadership of the 49-year-old member for Elgin marks another phase in his active political career which began in 1926 when he was elected member of the House of Comons for Elgin at the age of 30. He became Ontario Liberal leader in 1930 and entered the legislature in 1934 as Premier. He resigned the premiership in 1942 and early in 1943 resigned his portfolio as Provincial Treasurer. In the provincial election of 1943 he campaigned as an Independent Liberal.

A Caustic Critic.

Through most of his eight years as premier he was a caustic critic of Prime Minister Mackenzie King and there has been speculation in political circles as to whether the breach between them has been healed. However, it was learned that this did not enter into the caucus discussion at any phase.

Actually, the decision to name Mr. Hepburn House leader was reached at a caucus Oct. 10, a few days after he issued a statement indicating his willingness to return to the Liberal fold but it was learned that some members felt the move would be premature then and the final step was delayed until today.

One member described Mr. Nixon's address of resignation to the caucus yesterday as "so manly" that for a while "wondered whether we should change."

Now 53, Mr. Nixon is dean of the Ontario legislature by virtue of his more than 25 years as member for Brant Riding. He served as Provincial Secretary in E. C. Drury's U.F.O. government from 1919 to 1923 and held the same portfolio in Mr. Hepburn's government from 1934 to 1942, resigning one day after his chief in protest against the manner in which Gordon C. Conant succeeded to the premiership. He was named Ontario leader by a Provincial Liberal convention in 1943.

Kiwanis Club Members Enjoy Christmas Party

The Kiwanis Christmas Party staged at the Kiwanis Centre on Wednesday night under the auspices of the bottom half of the roster under the chairmanship of Mark Vanner and Mrs. Russell Smith, was one of the finest functions staged by the club since the social evenings were inaugurated. It seems each group tried to outdo the other with the result that Mark Vanner and his committee went all out in an effort to please and entertain.

The hall was most tastefully decorated in the Christmas spirit, the work being done by Bert Reid and Bill Hopson and many congratulatory remarks were heard during the evening. It was a thing of beauty and it is to be hoped that the decorations will remain for some time. The program was under the direction of Ted Schwab with his helpers Bill Steer and Harold Carruthers with Bill Navin at the piano. The program to say the least was excellent with the feature attraction of the evening being the fashion show, the models being members of the club. Opening the program was the Barber Shop Quartet of Gordon Barclay, Vic White, Ted Schwab and Harold Carruthers, and besides being good they were ridiculously funny. Bill Wonnacott and Eddie Shapiro each gave clarinet solos, sometimes slightly off key, and Mr. and Mrs. Dick Kuntze gave a duet. Lorne McDougall, the president-elect, gave one of his famous recitations, while Mr. and Mrs. Taylor Franklin helped along with a piano duet. Dorland Houston sang "White Christmas" and Ted Schwab conducted an I.Q. which had the listeners bewildered as to which was right or wrong. Bill Navin delighted with a piano monologue.

Great Fashion Show.

The piece-de-resistance of the evening, however, was the fashion show, winter sports wear being exhibited by Eddie Shapiro; sweater girl, Charlie Richardson; foundation garments, Albert Jones; hats, Bill Wonnacott; furs, Al Reynolds; bathing beauty, Jack White; the ultra mode, Vic White; and Art Wesley, night wear. Gordon Barclay for one night became the blushing bride with his bridesmaid Russel Smith. Soon there was a loud explosion and Bill Pomfret as the groom came rushing in followed by Harold Seldon with the shotgun. Gales of laughter greeted each entry and to say that the program was enjoyed would be putting it mildly. The costumes had to be seen to be appreciated. Delicious refreshments were served by the women's committee, after which Santa Claus distributed favors, which created more than considerable noise. Mrs. Norman Edwards was the winner in the bridge, with Ollie Duff winning the men's prize. Mr. and Mrs. George Wallbridge were given the consolation. Community singing was enjoyed throughout the program and the delightful evening was closed with the singing of Auld Lang Syne.

Flier's Wild Flight Ends In Death Crash

Vancouver, Dec. 7 — (CP) — An RCAF student pilot in a twin-engine bomber here for four and a half hours yesterday endangered the lives of civilians and servicemen as he dived and performed seemingly impossible manoeuvres before finally plunging to his death.

An attempt was made to drive him down to an airdrome by using fighter planes but pilots were instructed not to fire on him. He paid no attention to their efforts and continued his wild acrobatics. Time after time he put his big craft into dives.

The plane missed persons, buildings and parked aircraft by inches.

Finally, from a height of about 1,000 feet he went into a roll and dived straight into the ground at Tilsbury Island, six miles south of Vancouver. He was instantly killed and the aircraft wrecked.

Next-of-kin have been notified and the name of the airman will be released shortly.

More Red Cross Workers Needed

Trenton, Dec. 7 — Red Cross workers are not turning out at the workrooms in the numbers which might be desired but it is sincerely hoped this condition will improve as the Christmas rush is over and that the New Year may see the old crowd of one hundred or more workers in their place each Tuesday afternoon. The work rooms will be open next Tuesday Dec. 12th. but will then close to reopen on January 9th.

It has been decided that the election of workroom officers will take place at the January 9th meeting.

A splendid donation of knitted articles for small children was received on Tuesday from Mrs. J. North, Front St., also a donation of $4 cash from Miss May's class at Dufferin School.

A report of the recent Russian Linen Shower was read which showed Trenton had made a comparatively fine donation to that worthy cause. One point had been given for each towel and pillow slip, three for a sheet and five for a blanket, and Trenton's total points were 334. In addition some cash had been sent in.

It is hoped workers will make a date to meet at the Red Cross work rooms in the Shurie building, on January 9th at 2 p. m. and spend one half day per week there for the duration.

Swedish Ships and Seamen Aid Allies

(By G. Howard Smith, In American Swedish Monthly)

In Lloyd's List and Shipping Gazette the following report recently appeared:

"A motorship belonging to the Swedish Lloyd Line, Gothenburg, recently completed its 50th crossing of the Atlantic during the war. The present captain has been in command of the vessel on 37 of these voyages. This is only one example of the valuable services Swedish shipowners and seamen have rendered the Allies during this war."

When the Germans invaded Denmark and Norway in 1940 and established a blockade of the western sea approaches to Sweden through the Skagerack, some 800,000 gross tons of Swedish merchant shipping remained outside the blockade, beyond any possibility of German control. This was almost half the total Swedish tonnage, and moreover consisted for the most part of modern motor-driven vessels of the large and speedy type.

The question immediately arose as to how this shipping was to be employed with the British Government by which approximately 600,000 tons of it was time-chartered to the British Ministry of Shipping.

The remainder was engaged in the most varying routes, taking whatever cargoes were offered. It was profitable but often risky work, and as it helped to relieve the shipping situation generally, this activity was in fact also of direct assistance to the Allies.

It may be mentioned here that at one period only Swedish vessels were engaged in the transport of iron ore to England from Spain; no others would undertake it.

* * *

Much of the Swedish shipping outside the Skagerack blockade was engaged in the dangerous North Atlantic convoy service to England. By the middle of 1943 less than one third of the tonnage chartered to the British remained; the rest had been sunk.

Occasional items in the press gave some inkling of the role being played by Swedish shipping in the life - and - death struggle raging around the world; a report of a ship sunk here, a ship sunk there; and it was still more vividly brought home to one by the stories of bravery and seamanship displayed by Swedish captains and their crews in going to the rescue of others whose ships had been sunk or were in danger. Here are some of the stories from the record:

In July 1941 Captain Botvin Rydberg of the Rydboholm, belonging to the Swedish America Mexico Line, was decorated with the Order of Orange and Nassau by Queen Wilhelmina of Holland personally, for his efforts in rescuing the crew of the Dutch steamer Soemba, which had been sunk in the North Atlantic the previous November. The Rydboholm itself had been torpedoed the following March, but the crew had been saved.

Captain John M. Dodge of the American tanker Malay, in an interview at Norfolk with a correspondent of the Chicago Sun, praised the courage of the captain and crew of the Scania (Swedish Lloyd Line) in coming to the rescue when his vessel was torpedoed and fired on off Norfolk on January 19, 1942, by a German U-boat.

The Scania approached to within 100 yards of the Malay while the U-boat was still firing, and put out a lifeboat which approached still closer. At the same time the Scania radioed that she was prepared to render any assistance that might be necessary.

The U-boat did not succeed, however, in sinking the American vessel, so the Scania finally sailed away — after announcing that she was carrying dynamite amongst her cargo. Neither the Scania nor the Malay was armed.

On May 27, 1942, the m/s Sagoland, of the Swedish Orient Line, assisted in the rescue of the crew of the British steamer Margot, which had been torpedoed. The Sagoland went to the Englishmen's rescue, despite the evident danger of herself being attacked by U-boats in doing so.

* * *

Swedish seamen have carried on, sailing their own ships in Allied service, or, when there have not been enough Swedish ships to sail, signing on with vessels of other nations. It is reported that at first there was a certain amount of skepticism shown about employing Swedish seamen, probably owing to lack of knowledge of Sweden's real attitude in this war, but this soon changed.

Five thousand Swedish seamen have been sailing outside the Skagerack blockade, in spite of the manifest dangers and the long separation from home.

Some idea of what even those who have been fortunate enough to get home since the war began have had to go through however, may be seen from the story of the Columbia. The Columbia, belonging to the Johnson Line, was one of the ships which had been cut off from the home country when the Germans invaded Denmark and Norway, on April 9, 1940.

When she was finally able to return to Sweden at the end of June, 1943, under the "safe conduct" arrangement, she had been at sea for three and a half years, during which time she had covered 174,000 nautical miles.

On December 10, 1941, she lay in Manila harbor, and about that time was able to rescue the crew of a torpedoed Norwegian vessel. She took back with her to Sweden ten members of a torpedoed Swedish merchantman, the Brageland.

War To Improve Weather Forecasts

(Peter Whitney writes for the Chicago Sun from London.)

After the war it will be possible to predict the weather with fair accuracy a season ahead by the same methods the Allies used in the selection of D-Day and that guide the 8th US. Air Force and the Royal Air Force in their great raids on Germany.

So declared a meteorological expert, who is a United States to Russia in Mosquito 'planes obspondents what is probably the world's most elaborate weather service. The service was initiated by the R.A.F. and is now jointly operated from both shores of the Atlantic.

With him were five of the airmen who regularly fly all the way, as Jan Struthers popular pin-up girl, tained from Britain under reverse Lend-Lease and halfway across the Atlantic in Fortresses and Liberators to record cloud formations, barometric pressures and wind velocities.

The week before the invasion was one of intense activity in long and short range weather forecasting, with special committees of experts from all services of both nations participating.

The staff expert said the D-Day selection was "rugged" because the forecasts showed the wind speed would be impossible for landing craft to function properly.

"Even the experts didn't agree, and there was some controversy", he said. "But with all those ships milling around in the Channel, we postponed the invasion one day and found a two-day spell of good weather.

"From captured reports we know how the German forecasters missed the course the weather would take. They didn't expect us".

Some of the weather service pilots function as advance agents for bombers in plotting the weather over Germany. A distance of 5,000 feet between the upper and lower cloud layers is needed for fighter manoeuvres in the protection of bombers. The pathfinders in two-man Mosquitos, report on the altitudes at which bombers must fly to sandwich themselves between cloud layers. If their reports are unfavorable, the missions are "scrubbed".

Most of these missions involve night takeoffs and landings, often in weather which the bombers themselves could not use. The unarmed Mosquitos are sometimes attacked by jet-propelled fighters.

It is the Atlantic flights of converted heavy bombers which provide the data for long-range weather forecasts, since weather "fronts" invade Europe from the west.

"Without these forecasts, you might lose a whole air force in a day if fog moved in on English airfields after the takeoffs", the officer said. "That has been our nightmare all along".

During a typical European Winter, it is possible to expect 12 bombing days monthly, with visual bombing on only three. But so far, the November weather has been the worst in many years.

One of the new techniques of forecasting is to collect all available data of the given day and then select from an elaborately catalogued file an exactly similar day in European weather records of the last fifty years. The forecast is then based on the doctrine that if human history never repeats itself, at least natural history will.

FRENCH GUNNERS IN ACTION ON THE RIVER RHINE

In what is believed to be one of the first pictures of Allied action at the Rhine river, French 1st Army machine-gunners and riflemen under enemy fire, hug the ground while they send replying fire at enemy positions on the French side of the river as Germans frantically try to flee Allied Alsatian trap and cross into Germany. Directly across the river is Switzerland, marked by Swiss flags and just beyond is Germany.

PICTON

Town Will Not Exercise Option On Owens' Estate

Picton, Dec. 7—The town of Picton will not exercise its option on the Owens' estate, Town Council decided last night.

A letter from a firm of Toronto lawyers read stated that the motion to construe the will of the late Mrs. Anne B. Owens with reference to the option of the town to purchase her residential property had been heard by Chief Justice Rose at weekly court there.

After lengthy argument, the judgment was delivered as follows:

That the executors must not use the insurance money for the purpose of restoring and rebuilding the residence.

That the insurance moneys do not become the property of the town of Picton if it exercises its option, the said insurance moneys are part of the residuary estate.

The executors have no power to extend the time for the town to accept the option provided by clause 4 of the Will.

"The costs of all parties are to be paid out of the estate forthwith after taxation of the same."

companion, Mrs. Green, Insurance she gave the town the first opportunity to purchase the property for the sum of $5000. However, fire damaged the house and claimed the lives of Mrs. Owens and also of her companion, Mrs. Green. nsurance of $4000 was paid the estate for damage to the property. The town contended this money should be received by them if they exercised the option, further claiming that Mrs. Owens intended the property to be sold for $5000 in the condition it was before the fire. Town council expressed the opinion that the court's ruling made the cost prohibitive in view of the damaged condition of the buildings.

The lot is centrally located, with a palatial brick house and has been suggested as a community centre. The option expires on Saturday.

The estate was granted a permit by council to proceed with repairs, not to exceed $1000.

Rotary Club

The importance of blood plasma was stressed at the Rotary Club by J. P. Williams, Frank Creeggan and Mayor N. McKibbon. It was reported that it is likely a travelling clinic will visit here, saving trips to Belleville. Transportation is one of the difficulties to overcome. It was also stated that Prince Edward County's donors were still large and had not fallen off as greatly as some sections. Picton now has 487 donors and all parts of the county are well represented at each clinic. The club pledged its support to the drive to secure new donors.

Rev. H. Swayne reported on juvenile hockey and the club will set up and supervise a hockey cushion at the collegiate campus.

President S. M. Sinton reported on the jamborie being held next week. L. B. Calnan read letters of thanks from soldiers overseas for cigarettes received. Plans for distribution of Christmas cheer baskets were discussed. Choristers under Dr. C. Brownson, will sing carols during Christmas week.

SIX NOW ARRESTED

Hamilton, Dec. 7 (CP)—Dominic Legato of Hamilton, was arrested yesterday on a charge of having an unregistered revolver in his possession. The arrest brought to six the men taken into custody in connection with the gunshot wounding last Saturday of Arthur Sunderland, of Hamilton, in an altercation at a nearby Stoney Creek Tourist Camp.

PIGEON RETURNS

Vancouver, Dec. 7 — (CP) — A carrier pigeon from a Canso flying boat missing four days from Patricia Bay R.C.A.F. base on Vancouver Island, last night returned to base minus its message container and aroused hope that nine crewmen aboard the missing plane might still be alive.

HUSBAND FORGIVEN

Glamorgan, Wales, Dec. 7—(CP-Reuter)—William Gordon Francis Jones, 35, bank clerk, who used coal oil to set his wife's nightdress on fire while she was asleep, was sentenced here yesterday to three years' penal servitude after she told the court "I am still anxious to live with him and I forgive him for what he did that night."

Mess Room Chatter Of Canada's Airmen

With the R.C.A.F. Overseas, Dec. 7—(CP)— Dive-bombing Canadian Spitfires operating in Holland under joint command of Group Capt. G. R. McGregor and Wing Cmdr. Dal Russell, both of Montreal, in four morning sorties cut three rail lines within Holland and blew up a road.

On their way back from these missions, three squadrons shared destruction of a locomotive, three enemy transport vehicles, and damaged five more with cannon and machine-gun fire.

The most productive squadron on these operations was one led by Flt.-Lt. Stan McLarty of Winnipeg.

A Spitfire squadron commanded by Sqdn.-Ldr. Bill Olmstead of Hamilton, Ont., topped a week's outstanding work by dropping all its bombs in the predetermined target area near the town of Rhede in Holland and twice cutting an important rail line as well as severing a key road in two places.

Olmsted's aircraft was hit by flak and he wasn't able to bomb.

"But the squadron carried on and did a bang-on job," he said. All told 11,000 pounds of high explosive were dropped.

An operation tour packed with action and danger has ended safely for three Thunderbird Squadron members: PO. Lloyd Mann, D.F.C., of Portage la Prarie, Man.; PO. M. R. (Burny) Burnett, D.F.C., of Chelsea, Que.; and PO. Doug Harkness, D.F.M., of (400 Woodfield Rd.) Toronto.

They got through such hazards as a mid-air collision with another bomber, a partial bail-out when some of the crew took to their chutes, fighter attacks, and some bounding around from German flak.

During the mid-air collision, Mann's bomber plunged in a 5,000-foot dive and was brought back to base minus a propellor, another badly bent and scars dug deep into fuselage, bomb bays, fins and wings.

German soldiers turn up so frequently in odd parts of France, often many miles from the battlefronts, that even the air force has to round them up sometimes.

For instance, Flt.-Lt. R. G. Clark of London, England, airfield navigation officer for the R.C.A.F. Nighthawk squadron, was called out by villagers near the airfield to take care of a pair of young Germans found hiding in some woods.

PO. Al Mercer of (34 Strathcona Ave.) Toronto, formerly a member of the Toronto Globe and Mail staff and now an R.C.A.F. bomb aimer, thinks this one a bit too close for comfort.

It was on a raid against Duisburg and a motor of the Iroquois squadron Halifax stopped about an hour before reaching the target. The pilot, FO. R. F. (Knute) Williamson of Belleville, Ont., kept on going although the aircraft lost height steadily.

"Our low altitude over the target was an advantage," Mercer said. "The flak barrage burst thousands of feet over our heads. It must of been terrible up there."

But the low altitude almost brought disaster. Mercer was intent on his bombsight, nearing the aiming point, when for some reason he looked up quickly. And there, just outside the nose window, two huge bombs whizzed by.

World of Silence Worse Than One of Darkness

(By W. H. Colclough, Vancouver in Stratford Beacon-Herald.)

"Losing your hearing is a greater tragedy than losing your sight", observed the sweet-faced matron of a deaf school, looking with sympathy and pride over her group of children in the well-kept building. "Of course, either one inflicts a handicap on anybody so unfortunate, but you never saw a happier number of young folk than a group of blind children. They do get a lot of fun out of life. On the other hand being totally deaf in some cases makes for discouragement and moroseness".

General enquiry indicates that the average man would prefer to be deaf, rather than to be blind, if he were given the privilege of choice. What a cross it is to live in a world of darkness! The glory of the sunset; the virgin beauty of the first snow; the majesty of the crested mountains; the gorgeous coloring of the flower garden and the tender sweetness written in the face of a loved one would be very hard to lose. Yet this gracious teacher claims that a world of silence is much more difficult to bear. Here you are denied the soft cadence in the voice of your best friend, the symphony of music from the orchestra, the laughter and even the tender cry of a little child, the soul expression from the lips of your loved one and the sweet melody of the first Spring song from our returning birds pouring forth their mating harmonies. It would seem that deafness is the greater tragedy.

"See that little lad there", continued the teacher. "He is the son of a prominent business man and is only six years old. Two years ago an attack of scarlet fever destroyed every vestige of hearing, and for a year afterward we were afraid that his spirit had been crushd, but here he is almost the life of the party. Go over and talk with him".

Bright eyes searched our face. "How are you?" we asked.

"Fine", he shot back, with a grin.

"Do you play ball?"

"You bet, and I can tell you who won the World Series".

The manner in which this boy could read what you said by watching your lips was beyond our understanding. He was digging himself out of his silent prison and, even though he will never again hear the soft voice of his mother or listen to a hockey broadcast over the radio, he is out to make life well worth while.

Scarlet Fever seems to be a major factor in bringing deafness to our children and it attacks the mansion, as well as the cabin.

"And what happened this laddie?" we asked, looking at a 12-year-old boy with hideous scars where his eyes used to be and who was minus three fingrs from his right hand.

"A carless contractor up in the interior left some fuses lying around; the boy found them and this is the result", explained the teacher. "If I had my way I'd make such neglect on the part of any person handling dynamite a prison offence".

A careless contractor, section foreman or stumper hides a few percussion caps under a rock, or behind a log, forgets all about them, and sends some unfortunate child through life frightfully crippled. From coast to coast the record is there and, as the teacher observes, it ought to be an indictable offence.

Deafness from scarlet fever in some cases might be unavoidable but there is no defence in allowing explosives within the reach of an energetic child. It is almost impossible to teach a boy to leave such discoveries alone. In many cases he never saw such a cap before and his ardent curiosity, the rightful heritage of every boy, leads to his destruction.

What Do People Know About the King?

By "An Average Man" in The Navy (London).

Take King George VI, take his career, his achievements, his greater and smaller triumphs. What do most of his people know about them? They know the circumstances in which he ascended the Throne and they watched the manner in which he did it. They will not forget the sympathy and admiration which they felt for him. They know that ever since he has done his job well and truly and simply without any "circusing about". They know that he has an athletic figure, that he always looks the part, and that he has won one of the great triumphs that a man of indomitable resolution can win by overcoming a stammer and turning himself, when occasion serves, into a broadcaster of genuine worth.

But do they remember that the King, when he was quite a young man, served as a very humble and self-denying junior officer in the Fleet, and that he went through the Battle of Jutland (the greatest sea battle in history) as a lieutenant at action station in one of the gun turrets of a battleship that was closely engaged? There has perhaps been no King of this country since Henry V who took so active a part in battle or shared so entirely the discomforts and the perils of his forces.

Do you remember that as a young man King George VI played at Wimbledon in the doubles lawn tennis championships and came near enough to victory? This, of course, is a trivial event, but it becomes remarkable when the player is the King. That he is almost as good a game shot as his father and used to ride well to hounds is less remarkable and not so near to the general life of all his subjects. That he is, without being able to take any trouble about it, a good golfer is perhaps more in general sympathy and in line with the common life which, like the bombs that fell on them both, covers Buckingham Palace, and the homes, larger or smaller, in which we all live.

Hence, then, are some ordinary reflections on a King who is also a man, and a man who happens, by accident, to be a King. Heaven forbid that any King of Britain should be smirched by the popular acclaim that greets a film star, a winning jockey or a champion heavyweight! But reticence may surely be carried too far.

Husky—Friend and Worker

(Ed. Note: Following is an interesting letter on "Husky Dogs" by Cpl. Bilton which appeared recently in the Ottawa Journal. Cpl. Bilton spent many years in service in the Arctic).

Sir—The article "History of Dogs, etc." published in The Journal was most enjoyable and pleasant to read and has prompted me to pen the following in tribute to the "Husky", man's best friend in the Arctic, white and native alike. I feel that a word ought to be said about the "Husky" whose great value I think some men who travel the Arctic wastes are too prone to overlook and disregard.

Of the dog family the Huskies are truly the beast of burden. In proportion to size his hauling ability is really remarkable, for it is pound for pound under favorable travelling conditions. They work in harness, pulling all day sometimes for weeks on end without shelter from the windy blasts in unbelievable temperatures which you will agree is something to be admired in these patient creatures.

They are magnificent animals. Other dogs may work as well or travel as fast and far when fully fed, I believe there is no dog in the world that can work so long in the lowest of temperatures on practically nothing to eat. The male dogs average in weight from 65 to 85 lbs. The females somewhat smaller.

* * *

Their special characteristics are pointed muzzle, great breadth between the eyes, sharp-pointed ears, very heavy coat underlaid with thick soft fur, powerful heavy muscled legs and wide shoulders, bushy tails with brush similar to that of a fox. There is only one breed of husky dog, but they are variously marked and of different colors — black, white, gray, yellow and mottled. There is no doubt as Mr. Wentworth states they are descendants from the wolf. Nevertheless they can be affectionate and obedient, much the same as the domestic type of dog we see here and around, on the other hand they can show terrible ferociousness on occasion. A trait we can presume derived by their ancestry.

Figuratively speaking, there are three styles of hitching namely, tandem, double Alaskan, and fan. The fan style is used exclusively in the Arctic. Each dog pulls over his back, on a single trace (heavy seal skin). This trace is attached with all the rest to a bridle at the head of the sled which gives the team a fan-shaped formation when travelling and makes it impossible for any dog to play the "Old Soldier" without being seen by the driver sitting on the sled from where he directs the dogs by command and who as a rule is fortified with and wields a whip, sometimes 30 to 40 feet in length, with accuracy. Should a dog not be working, the driver on the sled can grasp the dog's single trace thus hauling the offender within reach so that he may be appropriately dealt with. Believe me, laziness is not tolerated. Such teams may be made up of 10 dogs although 16 to 25 are sometimes hitched.

One dog always asserts himself the "boss" and is generally given a longer trace than the others. It does not necessarily follow that the boss dog is a good leader. When this boss dog or leader complies willingly to commands of the driver, it has a good influence over the others and tends to make them pull evenly.

The best age to commence breaking pups to harness is around eight months. This, of course, is a matter of opinion. I believe the process should be gradual for it is of the greatest importance that work dogs take kindly to their duties. One or two of them for a start are usually harnessed with a team of older dogs, with whom they are already acquainted. Patience by the driver at this stage is imperative in the future well-being of these pups.

* * *

To procure sufficient feed for these dogs entails considerable hardship and its selection is of vital importance. It is generally agreed that walrus meat, in the Eastern Arctic, is possibly the best dog food obtainable, with seal a close second. The meat of walrus is most nutritious, promoting growth and development of body. In the Western Arctic, fish, caribou and seal meat are the principal foods; on the Mackenzie river fish and cooked foods make up the diet, the latter being resorted to only in the Summer months.

These creatures love a chase and a man may consider himself fortunate to possess a team of experienced bear-hunting dogs. As soon as the dogs get on a fresh scent of a polar bear or come upon his tracks, the experienced dogs are turned loose to keep him from making for open water where he will soon swim out of range, or the glaciers which he is expert in climbing. As soon as the dogs catch up, he attempts to kill them and often succeeds in wounding them badly. By this time the team or teams coming up are close and the remaining dogs are rapidly cut loose, the men run to the scene with rifles. If the bear is not damaging the dogs by clawing and biting them, the Eskimos always delay the kill by rifle to allow the young dogs to gain experience and especially to learn the method of holding a polar bear at bay. The bear is too fully occupied with the circle of dogs barking and snapping at him to pay any attention to the men. As a rule a shot behind the shoulders will kill him, and it is the native custom to give the young pups a taste of the warm blood to encourage them on future hunts.

These dogs are not housed at any season of the year, but Summer and Winter they are tied somewhere near the tent or igloo. They are never allowed to roam at large lest they be lost. Sometimes a special pet, or a female with young puppies, will be taken into the igloo for a time. Pups only a month old are so hardy that they can stand severe Winter weather.

It is absolutely impossible to figure on the Eskimo dog's uncertain tenure of life. These dogs will endure the severest hardships, they will travel and draw heavy loads on practically nothing to eat, they will live for days exposed to the wildest Arctic blizzard, and suffer agonies with cut and sore feet, and yet sometimes in good weather, after an ordinary meal of apparently the best food, they will lie down and die.

J. H. BILTON,
Ottawa.

W. Pacific Plans Poses Big Problem

MacArthur's Headquarters, the Philippines, Dec. 6 (AP)—Gen. Sir Thomas A. Blamey, Commander-in-Chief of Allied ground forces in the southwest Pacific, after conferring with Gen. MacArthur for the first time in the Philippines, told the press today that Australian forces will be used in current campaigns in the west Pacific.

Gen. Blamey said that campaign plans involving the use of Australians posed an immense shipping problem which would have to be solved in proper relation to the needs of the European theatre.

Gen. Blamey said it was incorrect to speak of "mopping-up" the thousands of Japanese who have been bypassed in the Allies' northward advance. He said that these Japanese are well contained and are not in a position to influence the progress of the war but that it was a problem for the future.

Canadian Soldiers Going to Britain For Next Leave

By DOUGLAS AMARON
(CP War Correspondent)

With the 1st Canadian Army in Holland, Dec. 6 —(CP Cable)—Canadian soldiers, who count the United Kingdom a second home, will return there on leave when the new year begins.

An announcement from headquarters of the 1st Army Group, under which the 1st Canadian Army fights, said that nine-day home leave for British soldiers in Western Europe would begin Jan. 1st and that this applies also to Canadian troops.

Full details of the Canadian leave plans are not yet available but it was expected they would be similar to those for British troops.

The Canadian quota in the first few weeks is not expected to be large but the numbers leaving daily will be considerable once the program is in full swing.

This leave in Britain supplements the 30-day leave in Canada which began this month for 200 Western Front soldiers with the equivalent of five years' overseas service.

REGULATE WAGES

London, Dec. 7. (CP-Reuter) — Machinery to regulate the wages of every worker in Britain is provided for in a new bill presented to the House of Commons yesterday by Labor Minister Bevin. Known as the "wages councils bill" it provides for the setting up of wages councils to fix legal minimum wages, guaranteed weekly wages and such matters as holidays with pay.

Home Made Rat Poison

Because it has the advantage over rat poisons in that it is relatively harmless to human beings and domestic animals, finely ground red squill is one of the most satisfactory materials to use in home-made poisoned baits for rats. Chopped fresh fish, canned fish, freshly ground meat, and cereals, such as corn meal or bran, are recommended as baits. In preparing the fish or meal baits, mix one and one-half ounces of powdered red squill with enough water to make a thin paste without lumps and add it to one pound of fish or meat and mix thoroughly. In making a cereal bait, mix one and one-half ounces of dry red squill with one pound of cereal and then add one pint of sweet milk or water, stirring thoroughly to a mushy consistency.

Second in value only to red squill, is barium carbonate. Although less poisonous than arsenic, it should be handled with care as it is fatal to chickens, dogs, cats and larger animals if eaten in sufficient quantity. It is inexpensive, odorless, and tasteless. Baits may be prepared by mixing one part of the poison to five parts of food, such as meal or flour, adding sufficient water to form a dough.

Arsenic is used in many rat poisons. It is more deadly than barium carbonate. A good bait is prepared by mixing thoroughly one tablespoonful of finely powdered white arsenic with one pound of oatmeal and one pound of coarse brown sugar. Another formula is arsenic, two ounces, canned salmon, one pound, cornmeal, one pound. Another method reported successful is to dissolve one-quarter of an ounce of white arsenic in five ounces of hot glycerine, and to spread this solution thinly on slices of bread. When preparing and distributing these baits, every precaution must be taken to avoid exposing them where they may cause accidental poisoning to human beings, pets, or live stock.

Phosphorus is a common ingredient in rat poisons, but it is too dangerous to use in home-made poisons owing to its inflammability. Strychnine, a virulent poison, and widely used against rats, has been found unsatisfactory in home-made poisons. Thallium is reported to be very effective but is too dangerous to be recommended for home-made mixtures. Further information will be found in the special pamphlet No 33 "Control of Rats and Mice" which may be obtained free by writing to the Publicity and Extension Division, Dominion Department of Agriculture.

Villians Still in Pursuit As Curtain Falls on Seaon's Wrestling, Heroes Win Again

Team of Dunlop and Monahan Disqualified, So Watson and Collins Are Winners

BEDLAM ENSUES

And the villains still pursued. As a matter of fact the ring ruffians were still in an oldtime melodramatic act when Referee Bert Maxwell rung down the curtain on wrestling at the Hume Arena last night. However, no doubt the muscle benders will be back with new-fangled ring repertoires again in 1945.

However, let it be said they climaxed the 1944 season in a blaze of glory and had the wrestling patrons in general bedlam bordering to mayhem to swarm the ringside as the heroes of the night were again returned.

It all came about when Al Dunlop and "Irish Jerry" Monahan teamed together in a perfect villain duo to battle "Whipper Billie" Watson and Tom Collins, who had previously established themselves as the fair-haired boys and the heroes of team rasslin' in Belleville.

This tag team wrestling is productive of as much unadulterated fun as an oldtime Mack Sennett slap-stick comedy, but better. Frankly last night it was Referee Bert Maxwell, whose lot as the third man in the ring was far from envious, who assumed the bulk of the physical punishment of the night, so-much-so Arbiter Maxwell appeared in the ring sans shirt, but with little avail.

Rules Abandoned

Forgetting any particular rules or regulations (as if there is any such thing in the rasslin' game) the contestants started from scratch to give Referee Maxwell the business, as the bout developed into a free-for-all and ended in general bedlam. Following several consultations between Dunlop and Monahan the former proved his pugnaciousness by cracking Collins with a series of back-breakers that left Watson's partner an easy victim for a press and a team loss. Never too easy to anger Watson moved into the picture in protest to Referee Maxwell and finished by physically manhandling the night's arbiter as Monahan stood aside chuckling like nobody's business.

Apparently Monahan wasn't in any too much favor of team wrestling as he practically deserted Dunlop in the second round to rest on his partner's initial victory. That was the heroes' cue, as Collins softened Dunlop and Watson tossed him for a full loss with his famed "avalanche" hold and all was even. That irked Dunlop to the quick and he openly accused Monahan of taking a powder and leaving him as Rasputin had the week previous.

All-Out Effort

It was an all-out effort in the final stanza with separate fights breaking out all over the ring. For no particular reason Referee Maxwell seemed to be the personal target of attack from Monahan and Watson until "Irish Jerry" finally floored the arbiter and was disqualified. That was the tip off the fans had waited for as they swarmed the ring with glee to fire verbal attacks at the losing villains.

Jim Burke and Jack Sidthorpe made a lot of faces interspersed with some speedy, scientific wrestling to open the show in a draw battle, while Abe Zvonkin, former Hamilton Tiger football star, and Bill Stack were slugging at each other outside the ring as Referee Cliff Fox tolled the fatal ten over them for a quick count that put the Chicago count to shame. At that Zvonkin would have been much more at home on a gridiron, where his flying tackles might have went for a ten yard gain at times.

Thus the curtain was rung down on wrestling at the Hume Arena for 1945, but Promoter Tunney's circus will return in full force and virtue next spring. In the meantime it's hockey at the Market St. sports palace for the next few months.

What's Doing in Sport

By The Canadian Press

At the minor baseball leagues' convention at Buffalo yesterday the International League adopted a resolution of protest against the encroachment of the pro football season on the baseball playing year, with President Frank J. Shaughnessy urging action by other leagues to protect the property of baseball clubs from the unfair competition of the gridders.

Rogers Hornsby, veteran of the diamond sport, was reported yesterday to be negotiating for the purchase of the Minneapolis Millers of the American Association from Mike Kelly. The latter had offered the club to Philadelphia Athletics last fall but the deal did not materialize.

A gain of 13.8 per cent in average attendance was registered in the 333 games played by 67 college football teams during the past season in the United States, according to the annual Associated Press survey announced yesterday in New York. Total patronage was 5,554,999, compared with 4,010,722 for 273 games by 57 colleges in the previous year.

The American Baseball Association yesterday renewed the appointment of George W. Trautman as president of the minor league under a new contract for three years.

Winnipeg, Dec. 7 — (CP)—LAC. Pete Langelle, former Toronto Maple Leaf and star centreman for Winnipeg R.C.A.F. Bombers, is leading marksman in the Winnipeg inter-services hockey league. He has four goals and six assists for 10 points. LAC. Roy McBride, also of the Bombers follows with six goals and three assists for nine points.

Toronto, Dec. 7 — (CP) — An inter-services hockey league, including squads from Toronto Army, Newmarket Army, H.M.C.S. York and Toronto R.C.A.F. has been organized here, it was announced last night.

Welland, Dec. 7 — (CP)—Brooklyn Dodgers of the National League will conduct a three-day baseball school here next summer, officials of Atlas Steels senior baseball team announced today. George Sisler, former great St. Louis Browns first baseman, will direct the school, open to boys from 16 to 18.

Hamilton, Dec. 7 — (CP) —Possibility of a modern arena being erected in Hamilton by private interests appeared yesterday with a suggestion by J. P. Bell that such a project be undertaken and the disclosure by W. H. Yates, president of the firm owning the arena on Barton Street here, that plans for construction of modern building had been discussed.

London, Dec. 7. (CP)—The Cairo radio said last night that the first "Free Austrian Brigade" had been formed in Yugoslavia and that it was fighting under Marshal Tito's command to join the liberation of Austria.

CASUAL COMMENT
by K.J.C.

The manager of a business firm who was a widower had noticed that his son seemed rather interested in his pretty secretary.

The young man had only recently entered the firm, and the boy's father did not care for the prospect of an early engagement. He determined to speak to the young girl, who entered his office and announced that the son had proposed and that she had accepted him.

"Well I think you might have seen me first," said the parent, rather tersely.

"I did," she replied, "but I preferred your son."

Reminiscing.

The other evening while fanning with the boys at the police station in walked two R.C.A.F. service police corporals, who were introduced as Cpls. Lee and Lamb, which at the time didn't reveal anything too much along any lines. However, later we learned Cpl. Bill Lee was none other than the son of George "Knotty" Lee, well known baseball manager and coach of another generation. Bill Lee is stationed with the R.C.A.F. service police at Trenton and is a fine stalwart young man. His dad is operating a hotel at Smiths Falls.

Whenever the name of Knotty Lee is mentioned one can commence relating stories of his baseball career that mount to the legions. Knotty Lee was brought in to coach the old Belleville Nationals in the early 20's after the "Trunks" had won the C.O.B.L. He also coached C.O.B.L. clubs at Kingston and was a couple of seasons at the helm of the Peterboro seniors. Knotty Lee had a rapier-like tongue and he could verbally cut a player to ribbons when his players booted one in the clutch. He was a great admirer of Bill Calladine and labored long hours endeavoring to make Willie a top ranking hurler for the Petes. He was also a pastmaster at "jockeying" the opposition and was always bane to umpires.

Has Red Face.

We recall one summer's day in Oshawa about 20 years ago when Knotty was managing the Petes against Walter Schultz's Oshawa nine in a senior C.O.B.L. game. Midway through the game Abbie Rose picked up a bat and strutted to the plate. However, it wasn't Abbie's turn at bat and the Oshawa team kept a closed mouth. Lee turned to Red Legon, then breaking in with the Petes, and asked if Rose was up. "Yes," replied Legon. Of course when Rose hit the Oshawa team protested and Abbie was called out for batting out of turn.

Turning to Legon Knotty screamed—"The next time I ask you a question DON'T ANSWER."

We recall another day in Peterboro when this department was umpiring in Peterboro and the Petes were getting a swell lacing at the hands of Joe Daly's Kingston Ponies. Knotty Lee was a battler, as well as a leader, and in an effort to rouse the fighting spirit of his players Knotty would try any means to attain victory on the diamond. That day he was repeatedly riding the umpires with the final result we chased the fiery Knotty from Riverdale Park. After giving us a swell verbal lashing regarding "blind Toms and guessers," Knotty strutted out of the Peterboro park. However, it was only a matter of minutes when we heard Knotty's voice bellowing again. Looking around we were unable to locate him on or near the Peterboro bench, but the verbal attacks continued with unabated fury.

Later we spotted Knotty. He had left the park and climbed a telephone pole just outside the main entrance from where he was directing play and giving we umpires "the business."

"I'm out of the park and you can't stop me from calling you just what you are—blind men," screamed Knotty, who knew his baseball and diamond rights. t's too bad the game didn't possess more men with the color and fight of Knotty Lee.

Coming Here.

The guest speaker at next Tuesday's Kiwanis Club meeting will be Wm. "Bill" Rogell, former star shortstop with the Detroit Tigers of the American League when "Black Mike" Cochrane piloted the Bengals to a world series crown back in 1935. The Rogell-Gehringer combination around the Tigers' keystone sack was a combination that helped the Tigers with their great work completing double plays. Hank Greenberg was bashing 'em for the Tigers and "Schoolboy" Rowe was the year's pitching sensation. Rogell is now an alderman in Tigerville.

Remember When.

Rocky Kansas, hard-hitting Buffalo lightweight boxer, punched out a 15-round decision over Jimmy Goodrich at Buffalo 19 years ago tonight to capture the world's lightweight boxing title. Kansas held the crown until 1926 when Sammy Mandell came along to wrest the title from the Buffalo lightweight.

New York, Dec. 7 — (AP) — Our special agents at the Buffalo Minor League baseball convention report that St. Louis Browns actually had made a deal with the Los Angeles coast league club in 1942 but Phil Wrigley refused to sell when he learned that it would ruin the other coast clubs . . . That, according to president Pants Rowland, is why the league is so hot for an amendment that will protect their territory . . . There's no immediate danger, he says, but that incident proves how easily a major league might move in and pay the circuit only $5,000. . Pants admits that the proposal for a third major league is slightly premature but that he really is serious about the proposal . . .

Duplicates

When West High School of Nashville, Tenn., opens its basketball season next week, Alfred and Albert Skinner — twins of course — may confuse the customers a trifle . . . but that won't be anything new to Al and Al . . . They started to school the same day, always dress alike, both play the piano and organ, they got their pre-induction notices the same day, took their physicals the same day, were put in the signal corps, first at Fort McPherson then at Camp Crowder; both took sick the same day, were sent to an army hospital the same day and x-rays disclosed they both had stomach ulcers in exactly the same spot so they were released from the army the same day . . . P. S.: Don't bet on who'll be the high scorer in basketball.

More Buffalo Breezes:

The rumor dept. has the Reds willing to trade Frank Kelleher if anybody's interested . . . also Bill Meyer returning from Newark to manage Kansas City. The Yanks have no comment . . . Another says Al Vincent, former Buffalo manager and Detroit coach, will boss the Elmira eastern leaguers this year.

Toronto, Dec. 7 — (CP)—Bigger and better stakes for horsemen entering steeds for the King's Plate running are in prospect as a result of changes in rules governing nominations for the events. In previous years, nominations didn't close until March, just a few weeks before the historic event was run off in Toronto's Woodbine Park, but that's all changed now.

Nominations for next year's race closed last Nov. 14, while on that same day final entries for the 1945 running also were taken. A total of 109 yearlings, some only a few months old, unnamed and untested, were entered for the long term stakes in a precedent-shattering move.

Advantage of the system, as explained by secretary Palmer Wright of the Ontario Jockey Club, is that the stakes will be built up to a new high by the increased fees which will be paid in by the owners. A fee is paid with the first entry, another is due next Nov. 15, a further fee May 1, 1946, while a final race fee must be paid before the horse can go to the post.

In addition, the O.J.C. will add "not less than $10,000," and possibly more, so the horses will be running for stakes of $17,000 or more in 1946. That compares with $12,000 in purses last spring.

That's going to prove an added incentive to the owners, and create greater interest than ever before among members of the racing fraternity.

Here and There:

Capt. Jim Sutherland of Kingston, Ont., is dickering with Detroit Red Wings to play an exhibition game in the hall of fame city. There are plenty of good hockey players in the vicinity to round up a strong team to play wings, with Syl Apps of Toronto Leaf fame, Desse Smith of Boston Bruins, Edgar Laprade of the lakehead family, among others . . . Elmer (Montreal Herald) Ferguson is provoked at Habitant fans for heckling goalie Bill Durnan after New York Rangers slapped seven pucks by him last week. Blaming a loss on a goalie is a New York complex, says Fergie, and isn't worthy of Montrealers. We wonder what the reaction of Long Island and Greenpoint will be to that . . . Eddie Upthegrove of Toronto has piled up a record of 30 years as a hockey penalty timekeeper in Maple Leaf Gardens and in the old Mutual Street Arena in bygone days.

Guelph, Dec. 7. (CP)—City Council last night named representatives to meet with County Council to discuss plans for the continuation here of the Provincial Winter Fair. The Fair was discontinued more than four years ago when the grounds were taken over by the defence department, and there have been recent proposals that it be relocated at Waterloo.

Assume you are the declarer in the south at a contract of four hearts. Opponents could take two spade tricks in a hurry. But what if west starts with an opening lead of a diamond?

Your eight trumps and two side aces will take the ten needed tricks for your contract. But what are the chances of taking the rest of the tricks, too?

With seven diamonds in your two hands, opponents have six. If their six are split three and three, your last three diamonds will be good. On them, you could sluff losers.

Of course, all that is of no help to you unless you can enter dummy hand often enough. So, you must hope for an even break in the diamonds and enough dummy entries.

Two out of three times, six outstanding cards will divide four and two. Once in three times they will break three and three. Like in this deal. And dummy has three rare trump entries.

So, win the first trick with diamond ace and lead eightspot of trump. Win with dummy nine, return a diamond. Trump it in south and overtake south trump six with dummy seven.

Return another dummy diamond and trump in south. Now lead the south trump deuce and win with dummy trey. On the remaining three dummy diamonds, sluff south small club and the two spades.

Thus, a run of lucky breaks lets you make a grand slam in a less-than-slam deal. It could happen again. But don't bank on it.

CANADIENS, LEAFS OF NATIONAL LOOP LEADING PARADE

Quite Awhile Since Two Canadian Teams Have Led the League

By BOB NIELSEN
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Hockey fans across Canada are noting with satisfaction these days the continued grip of Montreal Canadiens and Toronto Maple Leafs on the 1-2 positions in the National League. It's quite a while since they've both been up there at once for any length of time.

There's been a lot of private grumbling by Dominion citizens in the past few years over the fact that pro hockey franchises in Canada were either breaking up or moving south, and also because too many springs saw the Stanley cup travelling in the same direction.

Considering Canada is the birthplace and breeding ground of the game, the patriots were consoled by the thought that Canadians comprised almost the entire personnel of big-time teams, and were charitable enough not to blame the boys for going where the crowds and money were. But they wanted more of the laurels.

The nation's hockey appetite was partially gratified in the past two seasons, with Leafs ending a seven-year United States reign by taking Stanley Cup honors in 1942-43 and Canadiens making it a one-man show throughout last season. Satiation should be achieved if the two clubs are cup finalists next spring.

The Canadian clubs have a corner on the individual records to date. They boast six of the first 10 in the scoring, with Toe Blake of the Frenchmen at the top. Third and fourth places are held by linemates Elmer Lach and Maurice Richard and Leafs' front linesmen Gus Bodnar, Sweeney Schriner and Lorne Carr claim fifth and share ninth in that order.

Bill Durnan of Canadiens heads the Vezina Trophy race for goal-tending proficiency, 38 goals to 41 for Connie Dion of Detroit, who has played three less games.

The outcome of tonight's game between Red Wings and Rangers at New York will have no effect on the standings. Victory would move the Red Wings to within two points of Toronto. Rangers will be out to widen their margin of a single game over Chicago.

CAPITALS HOLD LEADERSHIP OF WEST DIVISION

Team Defeats Hershey Bears and Holds 2-Point Lead Over Pittsburgh

By The Canadian Press

Indianapolis Capitals held their leadership of the American Hockey League's western division by a 3-2 victory last night over Hershey Bears. Caps hold a two-point lead over Pittsburgh Hornets, who defeated St. Louis Flyers 3-1.

Caps' triumph last night at Hershey was their fourth in a row. Bears, who have suffered a series of injuries since the beginning of the season, took their third straight defeat.

A fourth-minute goal by Tony Bukovich started Indianapolis on their way. Bears evened the score toward the close of the first period on a breakaway by Jack Riley for a close-up shot.

Scores by Bill Thomson and Pete Leswick in the second period put Capitals ahead to stay, though Bears made a come-back bid half-way through the final session when a scrimmage play just off the Caps' net gave Lloyd Mohns a chance to score.

At Pittsburgh, Howard Mackie opened the scoring for Hornets in the tenth minute of the game. Bob Gracie scored unassisted in the 2nd period. Art Giroux made Flyers' only tally in the final period and with less than two minutes to go Bob Walton broke through the Flyer defence for Hornets' third score.

A. E. HOUGHTON NAMED PRES.

Buffalo, N. Y., Dec. 7 — (AP) — Albert E. Houghton was named president of the "suspended" Canadian American League yesterday, replacing the Rev. Harold J. Martin who was unable to attend "because of parish duties." The league voted not to operate in 1945.

The two Canadian members, Three Rivers and Quebec, were granted permission "for the duration" to place teams in a proposed Canadian league which is in the process of organization and plans to operate next year.

Proposed members of the new league would be, in addition to the two cities named, Sherbrooke, Granby, Hull, all in Quebec and Ottawa, Kingston and Cornwall, all in Ontario. The circuit plans an organization meeting early in the year according to J. Emile Dion of the Quebec club.

President Houghton also will act as secretary.

AT THE CAPITOL—"Lay off—she's dynamite!" signals Victor McLaglen as Edward G. Robinson shows more than a passing interest in Lynn Bari, the girl he rescued at sea, in "Tampico," now at the Capitol Theatre. The added action hit, "Wyoming Hurricane," stars Russell Hayden.

MINOR BASEBALL OUTLOOK FOR '45 MUCH BRIGHTER

Four Additional Leagues Loom as Possible Starters Next Year

Buffalo, N. Y., Dec. 7 — (AP) — For the first time since the start of the Second Great War, minor league baseball today appeared to be more expansion-conscious than survival-minded.

As the minors went into their 43rd annual convention, four additional leagues loomed as possible starters next year.

After yesterday's brief opening conclave, when routine committees were appointed, most of the leagues held individual meetings. It developed that the North Carolina State and the Carolina loop will operate, and Canadian and Indiana State circuits may be formed.

Three Rivers and Quebec, granted permission to withdraw for the duration from the Canadian-American league, may form the nucleus of a new circuit. Albert E. Houghton was named president of the suspended Can-Am League, succeeding Rev. Harold J. Martin.

The South Atlantic and Texas loops joined the Can-Am in deciding to remain idle during '45.

The Mexican National League, a six-club circuit, made formal application to Judge William G. Bramham for entrance into the National Association.

The naming of Burleigh Grimes as manager of Rochester's International League club by president Sam Breadon of the parent St. Louis Cardinals, was the most important announcement of the day. Grimes piloted Toronto in the same loop last year.

Other managerial announcements were Ival Goodman, Portsmouth, Va., succeeding Jimmy Foxx, pending his release from the Chicago Cubs via waivers, and Bill Harris, Erie, Pa. Foxx may act as a roaming coach for the Cubs among the Chicago farm clubs. Al Vincent was named Detroit Tiger scout.

Negotiations were still brewing for the purchase of the Minneapolis club of the American Association of Rogers Hornsby, former National League batting champion.

President Charles Hurth announced his New Orleans club had ended its working agreement with Brooklyn Dodgers and would become an independent club with Presco Thompson continuing as manager.

Thirteen amendments were to be considered in today's most important association meeting.

ROBBERIES NET $70,000

Montreal, Dec. 7 (CP)—Eleven men pleaded guilty yesterday to charges of committing a series of robberies that netted $70,000 in loot from more than a score of Quebec municipalities. Sentence was deferred to Dec. 28.

BYRON NELSON HELD FAVORITE

Oakland, Calif., Dec. 7 —(AP)— Byron Nelson, top money winner of the year, was favored over the field of 132 pros and amateurs today as the 72-hole Oakland Open Golf Tournament got away with $7,500 in war bonds waiting winners in Sunday's finale.

The Toledo, Ohio, links expert came out of a slump to finish well up in the Portland Open two weeks ago and captured the San Francisco Open last week-end for the second year in succession.

Sgt. Jim Ferrier from Camp Roberts, who finished the San Francisco Open only a stroke behind Nelson will be watched closely.

Other sharp contenders should include such notables as Slammin' Sam Snead of Hot Springs, W. Va., winner of the Portland Open; Willie Goggin of White Plains, N.Y., and George Fazio of Pine Valley, N.J., and the U. S. open champion, Craig Wood, who is rounding into top form.

The tourney is over the par 35-35-70 Sequoyah course, 5,912 yards long and slightly hilly.

Greens Will Give Sharp-Shooters A Real Hazard

Miami, Fla., Dec. 7 (AP)—Tiny, slightly-elevated greens gave the dead-eye chippers an edge today as a big field started out for the first round of the $10,000 Miami open golf tournament.

The Miami Springs course where the event was being played for the 21st time is short—6,310 yards—and relatively free of traps, but the greens are a hazard in themselves.

Considerably smaller than average, they are built a foot or two higher than the fairway—presenting an uncertain target for professionals and amateurs, who have no difficulty driving within short-iron range on most holes.

Henry Picard or Johnny Revolta, both artists in their handling of approach clubs, were considered most likely to be hitting the ball straight for the pins.

The two veterans were quoted at 4 1-2-1 in the clubhouse.

The 12-1 odds listed for Steve Warga attracted support for the Miami Airlines radio operator who fired an even-par 280 for 72 holes to win the first money last year.

Johnny Bulla, airline pilot from Atlanta, was a 6-1 third choice. The odds-makers fixed 8-1 as the price against Tony Penna and Dutch Harrison.

Sky Facts: Eclipsing Stars

(Contributed by Ottawa Centre, Royal Astronomical Society of Canada.)

From the study of the eclipses of the sun and moon the first value of the relative sizes of the earth and moon was determined. The investigations of Jupiter and the eclipses of its inner satellites furnished a means of determining the speed of light, and lastly the transits of Venus across the sun gave a method for the determination of the distance of the sun from the earth. These lines of investigations, developed down through the centuries, not only increased our knowledge of many phases of the natural phenomena of the heavens, but immeasurably our knowledge of the dimensions of the solar system, and the relative sizes of the planets themselves.

The thousands of stars in the heavens are like the people on the earth, no two are exactly the same. They differ as to distance, size, color, constitution, and brightness. There are many double stars; the naked eye doubles, the double stars visible only with the aid of a telescope, spectroscopic binaries revealed as double only by the study of their motions with the spectroscope, and the group that is referred to as Algol or eclipsing variable stars. This last group is found to be double by the study of the variation in their brightness, and the same principles can be applied in their study as were applied in the case of the eclipses of the sun and moon.

In the constellation Perseus, the star Beta was the first star known to go through changes in brightness. It is visible to the naked eye and probably this peculiarity was noticed by the people in ancient times as it was given the name Algol, meaning Demon. The name is of Arabic origin.

In 1670 Montarii noticed that Algol was fainter at times than usual, but it was Goodericke in 1782 who found that these variation were periodic and occurred at regular intervals of two days, twenty hours and forty-nine minutes. He found that the star remains at constant brightness for two days, eleven hours, and during the next five hours it loses 66 per cent of its total light, and five hours later returns to normal light.

About a century later Professor Pickering of Harvard explained with definite proof that the variation was caused by the rotation of two stars about a common centre of gravity in a plane coincident with the plane of the earth, so that to the observer on the earth the darker star passed in front of the brighter one and caused it to be eclipsed at every revolution. In some cases there are two eclipses in a revolution, the primary when the darker body is in front and the secondary when the brighter body is in front.

Since that time more than three hundred of these systems have been discovered. They have been carefully observed over long periods to define the complete nature of the light changes during a revolution. It is found that eclipses are partial, total, or annular. There is abundance of variation among these stars, as the periods of revolution or light change range from 8 hours to as much as 360 days. Also the changes in brightness vary greatly among stars.

Some stars lose as much as 95 per cent of their total light in three hours, while others will take perhaps half a day or more to lose only 15 per cent or even less of their light. In the case of total eclipses, the period of constant light during totality varies among stars from 30 minutes or less to as much as 10 hours or more.

It was Hipparchus who in 160 B.C. from his observation of a total eclipse of the moon determined the relative sizes of the earth and moon and their distance apart. The same principle is applied to our eclipsing stars from the data we are able to collect. These results combined with those determined by use of the spectroscope have enabled astronomers to determine for at least fifty of these stars, their masses, dimensions of the stars and also of their orbits, and their densities with respect to our sun.—(Ottawa Citizen.)

Little Benny's Note Book

Pop was reading his paper and ma was reading hers, saying, P. Willis Hinkle has a very interesting article in his collum today, William. He points out that all the wonderful marvellous new achievements of science and medecine that were developed to help the war effort will be turned in full force tords the general good of mankind as soon as peace comes, she said.

That's right, was reading about one really stupendous invention that's going to make life easier for millions of men all over the world, pop said, and ma said, Only for men?

Well, mainly, because it's the men who pay the bills, pop said. It's a new plastic material that can be used for women's suits and dresses. I believe it's called Neverdie because of its ever-lasting wearing qualities. It seems you wont need any thread or pins because this material can be heated and draped right on a woman's figure into any desired pattern, and that's the shape it stays after it cools, and what's more it'll never get shiny or threadbare, so there's a dress that'll really last you till the cows come home, pop said, and ma said, But what woman wants a dress to last that long for land sakes?

Dont worry, that's all taken care of, pop said. When you want a new dress, you simply soak your old one in a special solution and in a few minutes you have your original piece of Neverdije back again without a crease in it and with its original color as bright as the day you bought it, he said, and ma said, What a gastly thought, to confront your friends in the same piece of material for years and years, I couldn't imagine anything ghastlier.

Well, in that case perhaps it's a lucky thing I just made up the whole idea, pop said.

The result being ma made him take her to a movie, claiming it was the only thing would take the bad taste out of her mouth.

CHAPTER 8

"I don't see any reason why I shouldn't be proud of myself," Loveday answered with dignity after a pause. But she was trembling.

Nini was lying on her back now; she gave the other girl a blighting glance.

"If you think I haven't been noticing you and Chris! While his wife is away, and after how kind Mother and Dad have been to you!"

"I don't know what you're talking about," Loveday said at white heat, "and I don't think you do!"

"I've noticed it since Sunday," Nini continued implacably, "but yesterday and today it's been simply disgusting! The way he looked at you at lunch and the way everything has to be arranged for Loveday! If Loveday wants to see Disney studios Chris can fix it, 'oh, easily!' But you know darn well," Nini rushed on, warming, "that Marie has never seen them! Everyone so nice to Chris. 'Where have you been keeping this stunning cousin of yours?' Cousin! He's no more your cousin than I am! And if you're trying to get him away from Marie I can tell you right now that you might as well give up, because Mother and Dad and I and everyone wouldn't ever speak to you again!"

Loveday had faced about on the dressing-table bench; she was looking straight at Nini with eyes that blazed fire.

"I advise you to be pretty careful what you're saying, Nini," she said quietly. But inside she was cold and shaking. "If you—you haven't any loyalty to me," she went on, "you might have a little to Chris! He isn't capable of doing—doing anything like that," Loveday finished somewhat unconvincingly. For Nini had made no specific accusations against Chris.

Whether her manner somewhat scared Nini, or whether the younger girl felt that she had said enough, the conversation ended there. Nini turned on her face again with a great flouncing of the light silk bedcovers, and Loveday went on with her preparations for the night, apparently unmoved.

But in her heart she was frightened and sick. Her idyllic dream had been vague and deep; everything that any future could hold of beauty and love and felicity had been enclosed in it. And the awakening was correspondingly acute.

What had she done? What had she lost? What would happen now? Nini had turned against her! and presently all the St. Georges would be turned against her! Waves of shame and fear swept over her. She lay wide awake in the dark, writhing in body and mind and spirit as the significance of Nini's words washed over her, and she felt herself swept down, down, down into the very depth of the waters of humiliation.

Dawn was clear and pale in the room when she heard Rodney's alarm clock tingling at five. She was weary, unrefreshed, her head ached her soul was sick with fear.

"I'll take first bath," she said when they were called. Nini was awake, staring into space. She did not answer; neither spoke again.

Rodney came for their bags; he looked tired, too, and Loveday knew that Nini had talked to him, had perhaps gone in to sit on his bed while she bathed and whisper that Chris and Loveday were getting a terrific crush on each other, that Mother would be perfectly crazy, and that it did seem pretty mean to Marie!

"It's too bad—it's all been perfect—you've been the nicest guests anyone ever had! Chris said later. His voice pierced her to the very heart; she could not raise her eyes to look at him. Their coats were piled on the back seat; the baggage compartment was closed with a bang. Loveday went about busily, not meeting anyone's look. Presently Chris caught her aside for a moment, said a brief good-bye, and put something into her hand.

"I got that for you. I'm going to see you soon," he said.

Loveday managed one frightened glance at him, pressed the little package back into his palm, got into the back of the car. Nini seated herself beside Rodney, who was at the wheel.

"Thanks awfully, Chris; it's been loads of fun!" Rodney said.

"It's been perfect!" Nini added.

Chris turned and went into the house when the car's engine began to hum. Rodney drove rapidly past walled gardens deep in bloom, up a long hill, down the road on the other side between rows of smaller homes, stopped for gas.

They went on for some fifty miles almost in silence.

"We can have breakfast any time now; places are opening up."

"Santa Barbara?" Nini suggested. "And we can swim!"

But the mood of a few days earlier was not to be so easily recaptured.

"We're not going to Santa Barbara; we're passing through San Fernando," Rod informed her; "that is," he continued, "if Loveday insists on going to Bakersfield."

Loveday had not thought of Larry and Bakersfield since she had left them on Saturday. Or if she had thought of them it had only been momentarily, a recollection quickly dismissed, quickly lost in the flood of pleasure and glory in which Chris had immersed them.

"Oh yes, I have to stop there. I promised."

"We'll be there in a couple of hours. You want to stay how long?"

"I don't know—I think I'd better—You and Nini go on. I'm—I'm staying there."

The resolution came even while she spoke. She had not considered it before. But now it seemed escape. She need not face the St. Georges; she need not endure the insufferable humiliation and awkwardness of this trip. She could write in a few days that she was coming home by train, "if they wanted her." Or she could simply wire, "Arriving tonight," and if, when she arrived, she could see that Nini had made mischief, she could simply go—where? Well, somewhere. The main thing was to get away today, now, from the situation that had enveloped her like a sickening fever.

Nini spoke to her politely enough at breakfast. Evidently, with the parting so near, Chris's little sister preferred not to have bad blood between them.

"I just feel sunk after all that fun!" she observed.

"I must say we gave them a pretty good looking over," Rodney contributed.

"I keep thinking of things we did," Loveday said mildly.

Then down to a valley again, and along a very racetrack of level road to the thickening farms outside Bakersfield, and the first signs of scattered streets and schools, and so to the city itself.

"Drop me at the Hotel," Loveday said. Despair had possession of her; it was ending; they were going away. Splendid Rod and little Nini, who was so sure of herself, and all they stood for of luxury and love and the life she had known for a few brief months; she had sacrificed them all; she couldn't hold them!

"Oh, no, you have your bags now," Rodney objected. "What's the number of the street?"

She told him, uncaring.

Nini and Rodney looked at the Ingersoll house, they made no comment. Marge came running out to welcome her; Rodney carried in the bags.

"Mama's lying down, but she wants you all to stay for lunch," Marge said unconvincingly. Loveday's heart stood still with horror for fear Nini in her youthful inexperience would accept the invitation, but Rodney spoke up definitely, Miss Ingersoll was very kind, but he and his sister had a long way to go. They had a late breakfast, might not lunch until they got to Gilroy.

"Good-bye, Loveday," Nini, not having moved from the front seat, called airily. Rodney loitered, his eyes troubled.

"Take good care of Miss Gurney," he said to Marge.

"Oh, we'll take good care of her now!" Marge answered with a little stressing of the last word that made it definitely proprietary.

"Good luck! You'll let Mother know when you're coming back?" Rodney said, holding Loveday's hand a moment. And in his look she read the change in feeling that had come between them.

So then it was the Ingersoll house and making the best of it. The place was hot as only a small dwelling baked by the suns of many days can be hot. Everything smelled — upholstery, bathroom, kitchen, woodwork, clothes in the clothes closets, and food in the pantry. The house was one dry, composite smell.

"Mama simply collapsed after the wedding; she was worn out," said Marge; "we had fifty-four people jammed in here, and the day was simply broiling! Larry, of course, never should have gotten up, but he would do it, and that night he fainted. I don't know when he will get up now."

The gallant whitewashed shed with its college pennants somehow looked more pathetic than ever in the hot noon; there was the same sickroom odors, of cigarettes orange juice, wet towels, and the flabby toast of a breakfast tray. Larry smiled at her and held out his hand, and she took her old seat beside him. But this time the hand felt hot, and when he smiled she noticed how dry his lips were.

"Yes, he has a little fever; he got too tired Monday," Marge said in answer to her inquiring look.

"You idiot," Loveday said. Again the cracked smile.

"You're a good sport to come back," Larry whispered.

"But you knew I would." He was sicker, she thought, than he had been. She sat beside him for a while, and he closed his eyes and dozed restlessly.

When Loveday went into the house she said that she thought a doctor ought to see Larry. Larry's mother, tired and colorless in a thin cotton kimono, came heavily out to the table and agreed with her.

"The doctor saw him yesterday—no, Tuesday, Mama," Marge supplied, "and said all he needed was rest."

Stomach Upset; Had Pain In Back—Poor Appetite

Tried Many Different Things. Got No Relief. "Feel More Like Myself Since Taking Syntona," He Says.

Nearly every day you can read in the paper of some one who has obtained good results by taking Syntona Herbal Compound. This medicine has brought relief to many hundreds of local men and women who formerly suffered from disorders of stomach, kidneys, liver and bowels, nervous irritability, rundown feeling or rheumatic aches and pains.

Mr. George Smith, 266 Fennell Avenue, Hamilton, Ontario, has good reason to be pleased about his recent experience with Syntona.

"For more than a year I suffered with stomach troubles," said Mr. Smith. "Gas, indigestion and acid risings followed even the lightest meal. I often got dizzy feelings and spots before my eyes. I work nights and usually when I got up from my sleep I didn't feel like doing anything, because my stomach felt so sore and my back was lame and sore. I had a poor appetite and my nerves seemed all on edge.

"I tried a good many different things without getting any relief, but since I have taken Syntona I feel more like myself. I eat better now and my food doesn't cause all the gas and acidity like it did before. My sleep is more restful and when I awake I don't have that soreness in my stomach or back. I wish to thank you for the good results Syntona has given me."

County Officials Request Tires As Well As Gas

Of the opinion that municipal government officials and county councillors are doing an important job for agriculture, in fact as much as farmers who are raising special crops, the Hastings County Council today concurred in a resolution of Kent County Council requesting the Dominion Government to amend regulations so that they can procure additional gasoline and tires for their proven needs.

A similar resolution, asking for extra gasoline coupons for county councillors, forwarded by the Prince Edward county body, also met with the support of council here.

The Kent resolution stated that its sponsoring body felt the present qualifications for gasoline rations had an effect of discrimination between certain types of farmers and other work of equal value to agriculture.

While the council concurred in the resolution, it was learned from the floor of the Council Chamber that several reeves had had no difficulty in securing extra gasoline upon application to the Oil Controller.

It was felt, however, that there are a number of farmers engaged in specialized agriculture for the national war effort, and these should receive the same privileges as municipal officials and members of county councils. Up to this point, it was stated, regulations had approved of extra fuel for travelling councillors, but nothing had been done regarding the replacement of tires.

The Prince Edward County Council felt that if the municipal officers are willing to supply automobiles, the least the government could do, is to supply the coupons necessary for extra gasoline.

FINED FOR RECKLESS DRIVING

Port Hope, Dec. 7. (CP)— Walter Taylor, of Toronto, whose truck overturned in a ditch near Roseberrey Hill last October, fatally injuring Margaret Cairns, his fiancee, was fined $50 and costs in police court here today for reckless driving.

Believe Japan In Area Of Violent 'Quake

West Bromwich, England, Dec. 7 (CP)—A violent earthquake, believed centring about 5,580 miles from Britain, which shook the earth for six hours, was reported early today by J. J. Shaw, veteran seismologist, who described it as "one of the greatest I have ever recorded."

Six hours after the first tremors Shaw said, the "whole earth was still vibrating." The shocks were so violent, he said some of his recording equipment was thrown out of gear. He said the earthquake was "probably north in which case the possible areas are the Aleutians, the Kuriles or Japan."

A short time later the Swiss radio said both Zurich and Nurnburg observations had recorded an "extremely violent earthquake in the direction of Japan."

"In case the quake took place in populated regions the consequences are bound to be catastrophic," the Swiss announcement reported.

New York, (AP)—Two "extremely violent" earthquakes possibly in the southern part of Japan were recorded on the Fordham University seismograph early today, Rev. Joseph J. Lynch reported.

Must Maintain Cheese Quality If Export Markets Retained State Convention Speakers

Producers' President Urges Twice-a-Month Testing of Milk at Factories

The importance of maintenance of quality if export markets for Canadian cheese are to be retained in the post-war period was stressed by the various speakers heard at the 17th annual convention of the Central Ontario Cheese Makers' Association held here o Tuesday and Wedesday of this week.

Emphasis of practically every speaker was centered on quality production of cheese, it being held that quality must be emphasized if Canada was to compete in the export cheese market with other countries following the war when competition would be keen.

Attendance at the first day of the convention was representative of all parts of the province with sixty five signing the register. Makers were present both from the eastern and western part of the province, while outstanding dairy officials were present to express their views of the cheese making industry.

Twice-A-Month Testing Urged

Speaking at the Wednesday morning session of the convention, Mr. W. H. Montgomery, president, Ontario Cheese Producers' Association, urged the adoption of twice-a-month testing of milk samples at cheese factories. Testing only once per month was not sufficient to maintain an accurate record considering the variation of milk possible within that period. Mr. Montgomery stressed the importance of quality if Canada were to compete on the post-war export cheese market. Adoption of the 48-hour week by cheese makers had been found impossible under present circumstances, while the speaker felt if farmers were to adopt such a policy vastly increased prices of farm produce would have to come.

C. E. Lackner, Director of Dairying for Ontario suggested that the increased number of cheese makers with insufficient practical experience possibly was in some measure responsible for the slightly lower grade of cheese during the past season. Importance of sanitary conditions in factories was also stressed.

Presenting a paper on the "effect of cooking temperatures on the quality of Canadian Cheddar Cheese," Prof. W. H. Sproule, Ontario Agricultural College, Guelph, indicated that the one problem confronting officers of the marketing services was that of maintaining uniformity in the product offered for sale on the overseas market. Adding to the difficulty is the fact that Canadian cheese is manufactured in hundreds of factories by hundreds of cheese makers working in all seasons of the year and with variations in composition of milk.

Controlled by Two Factors

He claimed the chief factor in the picture to be the body and texture of the product, both of which were determined to some extent by the cooking temperature of curds. The body of cheese is largely controlled by two factors, the relative proportion of calcium retained in the curd, and the relationship between the water and fat content on the one hand and the remaining solids on the other.

"Since the fact-casein ratio in the cheese is fixed by the amount of these constituents in the original milk, it follows that the cheese-maker must use his ingenuity to adjust the moisture content in order to compensate for variations in fat content. Should the fat content of milk suddenly increas. the maker would be required to sharply reduce the water content of his curds if he desired to maintain a uniform body in his cheese. A situation of this kind would probably be met by appropriate changes in manufacturing technique, chief of which would be an increase in cooking temperature employed.

Unnecessarily Delayed

The normal range in cooking temperature for cheddar cheese was claimed to be between 98-102 degrees F. If temperatures in excess are likely to be checked severely of this are used the start bacteria with the result, that the cheddaring process is unnecessarily delayed.

Fineness of cutting and the proper method of applying heat to curds were held to be two of the most important factors in successful cheese-making. Moisture is removed more readily when wire curd knives with smaller spacing were substituted and also results in more satisfactory cheese and in lower cooking temperatures. Slow application of heat during the early stages results in plump, firm curds and more rapid development of acidity, while applying heat earlier an rapidly appears to cause a greater shrinkage of curds without a corresponding increase in firmness.

Labor Serious Factor

J. M. Bain, chief dairy instructor for Western and Central Ontario district, felt that the labor situation would be the most serious factor in the cheese making industry during the 1945 season. There had been a natural disappearance of older makers with very few stepping into replace them. He claimed the department would have to step in to rectify the matter. He cited incomplete production figures for the district showing a considerable decrease in the amount of cheese manufactured during the past season as compared with 1943.

T. J. Hicks, speaking to makers following the cheese judging competition, stressed the importance of proper boxing and end finish, which, he said, might easily mean the difference of a full point in grade. Considerable open cheese had been noticed during the season and it was pointed out by the speaker that such cheese could not be scored over 92.

Proper marking of invoices, the turning of cheese regularly in the curing room, and careful branding were points to be considered. Temperature of curing rooms was also an important factor, it being claimed that the conventional 58-62 degrees maintained in summer was too cold in the winter months.

COMMONS UPHOLDS CHURCHILL GOVERNMENT
KING GOVT. WINS VOTE OF CONFIDENCE 143-70

Vote of Confidence Given After Prime Minister States Reasons for Intervention

Acted in Greece to Keep Gangsters Out of Power

London, Dec. 8 —(CP)— In fighting mood today, Prime Minister Churchill defended Britain's intervention in Greece and Italy—and won a resounding 279-30 vote of confidence from the House of Commons.

The 70-year-old leader received his ninth vote of confidence after declaring that Britain had acted in Greece only to avert gangster rule. He stood by the British government's opposition to Count Carlo Sforza, whom the United States has supported in the Italian government crisis.

Ire Aroused

His ire aroused by bitter, left-wing denunciations of his stand, Mr. Churchill himself demanded the vote of confidence as justification for continuance of his policy.

The House gave him that support. He said such action would mean that Britain "will persist in this policy of clearing Athens and the Athens regions of all those who are rebels to the constituted authority in Greece."

But he made it abundantly clear that the policy was not designed for Greece alone; that Britain stood committed to the right of a people to choose their government in free election, but that it would not tolerate a "gang of men from the mountains" overthrowing constitutional authority by violence.

Simultaneously with the vote of confidence, the Earl of Halifax, British Ambassador to the United States, announced in Washington that the British and United States governments had achieved an understanding on the Greek and Italian issues — without defining the "understanding" further.

Fighting between left-wing forces and British troops was continuing in Athens even as Mr. Churchill spoke.

Use Ballot Box, Not Bomb

Before the debate ended, Foreign Secretary Eden reiterated it was the government's purpose "to enable the Greek people to express their wish and decisions," but he asserted "we must insist that that expression shall be through the ballot box and not by the bomb."

Even before the vote, Mr. Churchill appeared sure of a decisive majority. Arthur Greenwood, leader of the labor opposition, announced he would not vote against the government.

Mr. Greenwood objected, however, to what he termed Mr. Churchill's attempt "by implication to give the impression that those for whom I speak regard armed insurrection as an instrument of policy" and maintained that "every armed element in Greece to whatever section of the Greek nation they belong should be disarmed.

Mr. Churchill, flinging back on his challengers a demand for a vote of confidence, told the House that Britain had acted in Greece to keep gangsters out of power and had intervened in Italy because she did not trust Count Carlo Sforza.

Denies Broken Agreements

In a heated debate, Mr. Churchill denied that his government had broken any joint agreements with the United States on Italy.

Mr. Churchill bluntly declared Britain would not stand for a "gang of men from the mountains" overthrowing constitutional authority by violence in Greece.

Asserting British troops had to fight left-wingers there, he challenged.

"If I am to blame for this action I will gladly accept dismissal of the House, but if I am not dismissed, make no mistake about it, we shall persist in this policy of clearing Athens and the Athens regions of all those who are rebels to the constituted authority of Greece."

Predicting Mr. Churchill would not be dismissed "by this largely servile house," Tom Driberg, Independent, declared: "He says that we know where we are going. I think he is going against world opinion." Mr. Driberg, who spoke after the Prime Minister finished, charged the Prime Minister with "an unworthy piece of blackmail in throwing out this sort of challenge."

Stands Pat on Belgian Situation

The Prime Minister stood pat on British troops' intervention in Belgium, also. He said the troops under orders of Gen. Eisenhower patrolled the streets of Brussels and prevented a November Putsch to destroy the Pierlot government and "Gen. Eisenhower's decisions were absolutely right."

Mr. Churchill spoke after Seymour Cocks, Labor, opened an attack on the government's foreign policy with a demand for assurance that British troops both in Greece and other liberated countries would not be used to "disarm friends of democracy."

The Labor member moved an amendment to the address in reply to the Speech from the Throne "that this House regrets that the King's speech contained no assurance that British troops would not be used to disarm the friends of democracy in Greece and other parts of Europe or to suppress popular movements which had valorously assisted in the defeat of the enemy, and upon whose success we must rely for future, friendly co-operation in Europe."

British and U.S. Govts. Achieve "Understanding"

Washington, Dec. 8 — (AP) —The Earl of Halifax, British Ambassador to the United States said today that the United States and British governments had achieved "understanding" on the Greek and Italian political issues.

He spoke to reporters after a conference with State Secretary Stettinius at the United States department.

He did not define "understanding" or say whether there now is agreement between Washington and London on future handling of political issues in Italy and Greece.

Meeting reporters outside Mr. Stettinius' office, Lord Halifax said he believed the result of the current clash of views would be to strengthen the unity of Britain and the United States by making both sides be more careful hereafter to consult on every issue of common interest.

Ledo Route to China Will Be Cleared In 10 Days Due to Jap Withdrawal

New Delhi, India, Dec. 8—(AP)—Japanese withdrawals in Burma are on such a large scale that it appeared today the Ledo route to China would be cleared possibly within a week or 10 days, but it was increasingly likely that it would be too late.

Already the Japanese in China are in positions to threaten Kunming, which is a huge airline hub and the only really effective terminus for the Burma Road.

Kunming, in the line of Japanese advances in Kweichow and Kwangsi provinces, is more important militarily even than the Chinese provisional capital, Chungking.

The Japanese retreat in Burma, coupled with the advances in China, pointed to the reframing of the entire Japanese plan of defence.

A summary of the best information available here indicates:

1. A fighting Japanese withdrawal from northern Burma with a clean-up possible before the next Monsoon in April.
2. If Burma is cleared, the Japanese probably will withdraw from Thailand (Siam) because it then would be difficult to defend.
3. They would continue to defend Indo-China, Malaya, Singapore and Sumatra.
4. They probably will attempt to take Kunming with the aim of locking the back door to their continental defence position.

The whole thing fits in with what observers here believe is the new Japanese defensive strategy that would indicate eventual abandonment of all their southwest Pacific conquests that do not contribute to continental defence.

PATTON HAMMERS HOME ATTACK ON SIEGFRIED LINE

Saarbrucken Ripped To Pieces by Long Toms, Howitzers Of 3rd U.S. Army

Paris, Dec. 8. (AP)—Lt.-Gen. Patton hammered home his attack today 1 1-2 miles into the Siegfried line and eight miles deep in Germany's Saar Valley while his 3rd Army long Toms and Howitzers ripped to pieces its capital of Saarbrucken from three miles away.

The campaign was a month old today and already had invalidated the rich coal region which supplies the German army with 18 per cent of its iron and steel.

The British—Canadian front in Holland was quiet. Floods from breached dikes covered 30 square miles and the northern half of the "island" between the Neder Rhine and Waal.

Infantry broadened their foothold across the Saar, merging three original crossings into two strong bridgeheads at Saarlautern and Dillingen along a stretch where the whole east bank is built solidly with one little war industry steel town after another. A cavalry squadron extended its lines inside Forbach, French rail town 3 1-2 miles southwest of Saarbrucken.

Back in the heavily-wooded hills behind the factory towns which the American assault has turned into battlegrounds are the great collieries and coke ovens whose 16,500,000 tons annual output have been forging the metal for much of Hitler's fighting machine.

Americans penetrated into the Pachtener Buchwald, woods northwest of Saarlautern, after cutting the railroad to Merzig in a penetration of the stout Siegfried line. The drive appeared to be gaining momentum.

Suffer Fate of Aachen

Saarbrucken, Saar capital of 135,000, was suffering the fate of the ghost city of Aachen. For the ninth consecutive day, 3rd Army 105's and 155's deluged its forests of factory chimneys with high explosives.

Infantry penetrated the Siegfried Line three miles north of Saarlautern. The defence zone, however, is thick.

Already the great blast furnaces of Dillingen, Volkingen, Neunkirchen and Saarbrucken, now are as good as useless to Germany. They drew their iron ore almost entirely from French Lorraine, which now is virtually completely in Allied hands.

The two greatest steel plants in the whole Saar Valley are located in the eastern Saarbrucken suburb of Brebach and the western suburb of Burbach.

While the Germans sacrificed their rich little arsenal valley of 1,000,000 population, hundreds of thousands of whom are skilled ironmongers and coal miners, there were continued evidences of German withdrawal on both vital flanks, along the Upper Rhine and the Middle Roar opposite Cologne.

Germans and Bulgarians Put in Greece To Cause Trouble Says Wilson

Rome, Dec. 8. (AP) —Gen. Sir Henry Maitland Wilson declared today that the fighting in Greece was caused by "irresponsible Extremists", among whom British authorities had found deserters from the German and Bulgarian armies.

"I can see little difference between the actions of these Extremists and the actions of the ex-Gestapo", the retiring Supreme Allied commander in the Mediterranean declared at a farewell party for the Press.

Gen. Wilson expressed belief that some of the Germans and Bulgarians rounded up during the past few days in Greece possibly were "planted there for the purpose of causing trouble".

"We've run into that before", he said.

British forces in Greece are disarming "all irregulars" without regard to what army they belong to", the General added. He described the turmoil as "a disease grown up from the war which I think we will find in the other countries too".

"Until irresponsible people are eliminated, the Greek people cannot have freedom from want or political freedom", he said.

"We are still at war with Germans in Greece.

"A lot of people have forgotten that there are Germans within 100 miles of Athens, on Crete and in the Aegean Islands. We are using the air and naval bases of Greece to carry on a war".

Gen. Wilson is the new chief of the British joint staff mission in Washington.

13-SHIP ENEMY CONVOY BOUND FOR ORMOC WIPED OUT

Troops Put Ashore Behind 25,000 Trapped Japs Advance Steadily

General MacArthur's Headquarters, Philippines, Dec. 8 —(AP) —Veteran U. S. 77th Division troops from Guam, daringly put ashore by the navy in the rear of more than 25,000 trapped Japanese rolled rapidly north today toward the enemy's west Leyte reinforcement port of Ormoc, less than three miles away.

The surprise landing Thursday in Ormoc harbor, under the guns of 7th Fleet destroyers and swarms of fighter planes, cut in half the heavily-defended Yamashita defence line.

This bold penetration of the Philippines inland seas to west Leyte, caught enemy strategists unaware. At the hour of landing a 13-ship enemy reinforcement convoy bound for Ormoc was spotted and it was wiped out, together with the 4,000 troops and equipment aboard, during the day by fighter planes.

The Leyte campaign, stalemated for more than a month by storms and Japanese reinforcements after swift conquest of its eastern side, roared into high gear on the third anniversary of the Japanese attack on Pearl Harbor.

19 Enemy Ships Sunk

In all, 19 enemy ships, including seven destroyers, were sunk Thursday off Leyte in troop-carrying operations while planes elsewhere in the Philippines areas blasted nine cargo vessels.

Sixty-two enemy planes were shot down over and around Leyte at a cost of five U. S. planes whose pilots were rescued.

The bulk of 200 parachute troops, dropped Wednesday night behind American lines on east Leyte to sabotage air bases near San Pablo, 19 miles southwest of Tacloban, were killed in a daylight hunt.

Covered by naval guns, the 77th landed with "practically no ground losses," today's communique reported. They thus sprang two traps on the reinforcements Lt.-Gen. Tomoyuki Yamashita has been pouring on Leyte under orders to hold or die while at grips with five other U. S. divisions converging from north, south and east.

Contented Tenant Offers to Pay Fuel Expenses

Toronto, Dec. 8 — (CP)—Among 3,000 rental inquiries handled by the Toronto Prices Board office in November was this amazing letter from a tenant: "I have had a swell flat for the past four years with a wonderful landlord. The rent is far below its value the way coal, repairs and such have increased. The law forbids me paying more, but I have decided to help these good people pay their coal bill. I trust I am not getting them or myself into trouble, as every rent day I feel like a chisler."

WARSHIPS JOIN SUPERFORTRESSES IN IWO JIMA RAID

Saipan-Based Planes Take On Bonin Islands in Bombing Schedule

Washington, Dec. 8 (AP) — A sizeable task force of B-29's dropped a "record load of bombs" on Iwo Jima, in the Japanese Bonin-Volcano islands yesterday.

The strike was in co-ordination with attacks by navy surface ships and other aircraft in an obvious effort to neutralize the airfields in the volcano islands from which the Japanese have launched raids on Saipan.

The Japanese base is 750 miles north of the superfortress base at Saipan.

Informally, the 20th. Air Force announcement explained that the "record load of bombs" meant that it was the biggest tonnage per plane dropped so far by any B29 on any raid.

Bombing was done through heavy clouds without interference from either Japanese fighters or anti-aircraft, it was announced.

Saipan, Marianas Islands, Dec. 8 (AP) — Saipan-based superfortresses put Japan's Bonin islands on their bombing schedule today with a raid on Iwo Jima, likely take-off point for ten enemy bombers which hit the B29 base here yesterday.

The B-29s flew 750 miles to raid Iwo Jima, a frequent target for blows by U.S. Liberators. Use of the bigger craft indicated a stepped-up offensive to knock out threats to Saipan and clear the bombing route to Tokyo.

First announcement of the raid came from Washington.

One Superfort Lost

One superfortress was destroyed and two others damaged in the Wednesday raid by twin-engined Mitsubishis which dropped a few bombs on Saipan and then swept low in strafing runs.

Some superfortress airmen back from the fifth and sixth raids on the Japanese capital Thursday night and early Friday morning told of finding Tokyo so brilliantly lighted "it was just like flying over New York."

(China-based superforts of the 20th. Air Force fighting their way into Manchuria yesterday, bombed an aircraft plant at Mukden as well as other targets and shot down a record bag of 63 enemy interceptors. Manchuria has many important steel works, shipyards and other war industries.)

The superforts flew one by one over the enemy capital in what the 31st. U.S. bomber command termed "weather strikes."

(Tokyo radio said "three or four B29's dropped incendiaries on the city in a "war of nerves" mission but that the small fires which resulted were quickly extinguished.)

8 HELD ON CHARGES THIRD DEGREE ARSON

New City, N. Y., Dec. 8—(AP)—Eight thrill-seeking members of volunteer fire departments in and around Clarkstown, Nanuet and Spring Valley, some of them high school students, have been arrested charged with third-degree arson. They, and others still to be questioned, are accused of having set some 60 woodland fires and 20 fires in buildings. Prosecutor George V. Dorsey said all those arrested had admitted participation in one or more fires.

RUSSIANS WITHIN FIFTEEN MILES OF BUDAPEST

3rd Ukraine Army Pounding Big Wedge In Enemy's Flank West of Danube R.

Moscow, Dec. 8 (AP)—The heavily-armored right wing of the Russian 3rd Ukraine army was reported little more than 15 miles from Budapest today in the fiercely sustained drive to cut off the Hungarian capital from Austrian communications.

Field dispatches said the forces of Marshal Feodor I. Tolbukhin was pounding a big wedge in the enemy's flank west of the Danube, but resistance by the enemy, reinforced by troops rushed from Vienna increased as the battle surged toward Budapest.

Szekesfehervar, junction of six rail lines 36 miles southwest of Budapest, was temporarily bypassed by the Russians in their accelerated drive up the Danube's bank.

The Soviet supreme command was still silent on what operations Marshal Rodion Y. Malinovsky's 2nd Ukraine army may be undertaking to seal off Budapest from the northeast, but he and Tolbukhin appeared certain to co-ordinate closely their assaults to complete investment of Hungary's greatest city.

Taking prisoners at the rate of 2,000 a day Tolbukhin also widened his grip along the Drava river within 70 miles of the Croatian capital of Zagreb, through which German divisions in the Balkans hope to escape into Austria.

Guerilla Warfare Increased.

Croatia's Partisans were also reported to have stepped up guerilla warfare in expectation of early relief by the Red army and Marshal Tito's regular formations of the Yugoslav National Liberation army.

Three new German divisions were identified as facing Tolbukhin—the 44th and 71st infantry from Italy and the 271st infantry from the western front. Dispatches said these had been shifted hurriedly when the danger of the Russian Danube bridgehead was realized. Already they have been badly mauled by the Russians

JILL FURSE, ACTRESS DIES. DESCENDANT SARAH SIDDONS

A descendant of the actress Sarah Siddons, she was the daughter of Sir Ralph and Lady Furse and the wife of Capt. Laurence Whistler.

War Situation 'More Serious Than Could Be Imagined'—King

Ottawa, Dec. 8 — (CP) — Prime Minister Mackenzie King said early today in the Commons that the war situation was "more serious than could be imagined."

Concluding the debate on the government's confidence motion, later carried by a substantial majority, Mr. King said that anyone who had his knowledge "about the seriousness of the situation at this moment, a seriousness that can scarcely be imagined, I would, if he were in a similar position, want the support of the House in continuing the government's war effort.

"I doubt very much if honorable members of this House can begin to imagine what this war is like at the moment, what it may lead to and what the position of our country may be in the future years, years not too far distant, if we show much of division in this House of Commons on any matter that relates to sustaining the war effort of Canada.

"It is for that reason, and for that alone, that I ask that the motion as amended should be carried."

"Germany wishes for nothing more than evidence that in any part of the British Commonwealth of Nations there was beginning to be a break-up in the determination of the people to keep up their war effort.

"No succor could come to the enemy equal to that he will receive from anything that goes to show, that a parliament in any part of the British Commonwealth of Nations is not united in support of its fighting men and in its determination to do the utmost that can be done in helping to make that great war effort a complete success," said Mr. King.

Canadians standing by comrades and seeing them fall would look tomorrow with anxious eyes to see what the House had done, and would scan the figures showing what had been the division in the House.

They would be uplifted in spirit by a strong vote in the House or they would be weakened in their power by finding that "we cannot be equally united here in supporting the war."

Members should think of the men overseas as fighting for Canada and its future and should ask themselves if they were to encourage them by giving all the aid it was possible for Parliament to give.

The electors would be the first to recognize that their members in the House stood up and supported the men fighting to defend them and their homes.

"Will they say that he is not doing the noblest thing for his country and for his own constituents that could possibly be done?" Mr. King asked.

The five years of war had brought into being possibilities of destruction beyond the imagination of any of us here in this parliament."

House of Commons Votes to Support 'The War Effort'

2 Amendments Voted Down, Two Declared Out of Order

By JAMES McCOOK
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Ottawa, Dec. 8 (CP)—Prime Minister Mackenzie King's Federal administration today had the assurance of a Commons majority that it would support the maintenance of a "vigorous war effort," including the Order-in-Council authorizing Defence Minister McNaughton to send 16,000 home defence army men overseas.

The government received a vote of confidence early this morning as the final event of a 13-day special House sitting which began Nov. 22. The vote was 143 for the motion moved by the Prime Minister and 70 against.

The motion declared the House would support the government in maintaining a vigorous war effort.

During its brisk session yesterday, the House also voted down two amendments, and upheld speaker J. A. Glen in declaring two other amendments, and upheld speaker, C.C.F. amendment was accepted by the House.

Appeal Made by King.

The debate concluded with an impassioned appeal by Mr. King for support of the forces overseas and unity in the Dominion.

During the last five years no nation had a finer war effort than Canada and it was desired to maintain that effort, said Mr. King. Only to that effort did the resolution before the House relate. He was not asking for any vote of confidence on the government's policies generally.

The vigorous war policy could not be maintained without House support. Anyone that shared his knowledge of the seriousness of the situation at the moment—"a seriousness that can scarcely be imagined"—would want the House support in continuing the war effort.

Believed Keeping Faith.

Pledges of no conscription for overseas he had made with other leaders at the start of the war were addressed to all the country and not to one province. In 1942 he had pledged, after the government had been released from past pledges, to take any course necessary in support of the cause for which Canadians were fighting.

Canada was fortunate the need had not arisen earlier, but now, to ensure against any possible lack of reinforcements, he felt that he was keeping faith with the House of Commons, the people of Canada and the fighting men in the army overseas.

Play-By-Play Account of Votes Taken in House

(By The Canadian Press).

Here is a play-by-play account, in chronological order, of what happened in the Commons yesterday and early today:

By a 168 to 43 vote the Commons defeated an anti-conscription amendment submitted by Joseph Jean (L-Montreal Mercier) to the government's confidence motion.

A Progressive Conservative all-out conscription amendment was defeated 170 to 44.

Speaker Glen ruled out of order a C.C.F. amendment. On an appeal his ruling was upheld 176 to 30.

A Social Credit amendment was ruled out of order and the Speaker's ruling supported 165 to 32.

An amendment proposed by Philippe Picard (L-Bellechasse) was ruled out of order.

Prime Minister Mackenzie King accepted a C.C.F. amendment striking out reference to government policy from the main motion.

Gordon Graydon, Progressive Conservative House Leader, said the C.C.F. amendment indicated a close relationship between the Liberal and C.C.F. parties.

Stanley Knowles (C.C.F.-Winnipeg North Centre) denied the suggestion of a coalition.

The House supported the C.C.F. amendment 141 to 70.

Mr. King, closing the debate, spoke of serious possibilities as an outcome of the war and criticized the stand taken by the Progressive Conservative members in the debate.

The amended government motion was carried 143 to 70.

The Commons adjourned to Jan. 31, 1945.

Judge Dismisses Charges Against Dorseys and Smiley

By FRANK FRAWLEY
(Associated Press Staff Writer)

Los Angeles, Dec. 8 —(AP)—Judge Arthur Crum Thursday dismissed the assault charges against Tommy Dorsey, his wife, Pat Dane and their neighbor Allen Smiley growing out of an attack on Jon Hall.

The court said it had been reluctant to take the case from the consideration of the jury but felt that under the state of the record it would be an abuse of its judicial discretion not to do so.

Judge Crum referred to one of the state's principal witnesses, Antonio Icaza, Panamanian actor, as a "fabulous, masterful fabricator of falsehoods, a perjurer pure and simple, demonstrated innumerable times out of his own mouth."

Icaza escaped last night from protective custody, the sheriff's office said, but was rearrested early Friday and committed to the county jail. He had been kept in custody in a hotel since his return from Panama.

ANGLICAN YOUNG PEOPLE ENJOY SPECIAL MEETINGS

The Anglican Young People's Association of Christ Church has been extremely fortunate in having two fine speakers in the past fortnight. A week ago, Mr. Alec Gordon addressed the group on his trip to the West Indies, illustrating his talk with moving pictures; and last Wednesday, Flight-Lieut. Morrison, D.F.C., D.F.M., held an open question-and-answer session that provided much interesting information about life with the air force overseas, and German prison camps. Flight-Lieut. Morrison was recently repatriated from Germany, suffering from severe wounds.

On each occasion refreshments were served. At the latter meeting, a social half-hour was enjoyed, with Miss E. Simpson and Ed. Waterhouse winning the game "Famous Faces in Hidden Places." It was decided to hold no meetings until after the Christmas-New Year season.

Warden and Mrs. T. Fleming Presented With Gifts As Token Of Service to Hastings County

Austere Shire Hall, home of Hastings County Councils for the past century slipped away from its usual dignity yesterday afternoon as county councillors forgot temporarily, the war, taxes and municipal government to pay tangible tribute to a popular warden, Reeve Thomas Fleming, Huntingdon Township.

To the accompaniment of cheers and "For He's a Jolly Good Fellow," the county body presented the Warden with a handsome engraved gold Bulova watch and Mrs. Fleming with a beautiful cut glass relish tray, as a token of appreciation of his year's tenure as head of the county municipal government.

The presentation was made by Ex-warden John L. Churcher assisted by Reeve George West, Madoc. Present were H. D. Arnott, M.P.P.; Mayor Harry Rollins of the city and a number of ex-county councillors.

Taken by Surprise.

Warden Fleming, who announced his retirement from municipal life after his office as warden expires this session, was taken completely by surprise. The function had been carefully planned, and took place abruptly during the actual session of council.

Reeve Churcher in his presentation address paid eloquent tribute to the personal and public qualities of the retiring warden. "You, sir," he said, "possess all those fine qualities that helped materially for the betterment of the county and this city. Your patience, ability and sense of responsibility have been the background of a fine job done for this county and we, your council colleagues, are proud of you.

"You have left in our hearts a mark of sincere friendship which all of us will carry for years to come. Your sons are proudly wearing the King's uniform with honor and distinction and we of this council are as proud of them as you and your good lady.

Services Appreciated.

"We therefore present you with this token of our esteem and appreciation for the grand effort you have made to this county of Hastings during the past year and many years previous and in the years that lie ahead, you will know how much we of this council have appreciated what you have done."

The Warden, completely surprised and visibly moved, voiced his appreciation. "For once I am at a loss to say anything. All I can think of is a simple and sincere 'thank you'." He reminisced of his early years in the council and spoke words of appreciation for the co-operation given him by his councillors.

Reeve West, at this point presented Mrs. Fleming, through the Warden, with her gift. "The women of Hastings County," he said, "working quietly in the background, have been of inestimable value to those of their husbands who have the responsibility of county government. In this case Mrs. Fleming has sacrificed much of her time and her effort, and her husband to us, and we sincerely appreciate what she has done."

Brief addresses were made by Mr. Arnott and Mayor Rollins, also Mr. C. L. Jewell, Canadian Bank of Commerce manager here.

The chamber rang to the rollicking melody of "For He's a Jolly Good Fellow" sung in lusty council voices and later echoed to the cheers of the assembled council and guests.

VOTE OF

Plot Carefully Planned

"If what is called in this amendment the action of the friends of democracy," said Mr. Churchill scornfully, "is to be interpreted as a carefully planned coup d'etat by murder and by the iron rule of ruffians seeking to climb into the seats of power without a vote ever having been cast in their favor—if that is to masquerade as democracy, I think the House will be united in condemning it as a mockery."

Spokesman for a Left Wing labor faction — in one of the bitterest of wartime attacks on the government —declared Britain stood in danger of losing the friendship of the Greeks just as England lost the American colonies in the Revolutionary War.

Mr. Cocks demanded assurance that British troops both in Greece and other liberated countries would not be used to "disarm friends of democracy." He assailed the British Ambassador in Greece, Reginald Leeper, as "the evil genius of modern Greece" — a remark he later withdrew — and called King George of Greece a dictator and a "Hohenzollern Prince."

Action Predicted

Mr. Churchill said that as long ago as the Quebec Conference he had told President Roosevelt that the "E.A.M. and Communist Extremists would attempt to seize the city of Athens and crush all forces but their own" after the Germans were expelled from Greece.

The E.L.A.S., he said, were "mutineers to the orders of the supreme commander of the Mediterranean under whom all guerillas have undertaken to serve."

One labor member charged that Mr. Churchill once supported Mussolini, and others bringing in the name of Spain's Gen. Franco.

Swinging at the mention of Mussolini, the Prime Minister replied tartly:

"In 1926 I certainly did support him in the sense of making speeches to say that it was a very good thing that Italy was not plunged into Bolshevism."

Calmly Confident

Appearing calmly confident in the outcome, the stocky Prime Minister stood before a cheering but obviously divided House and flung back at his hecklers an assertion that they would have "much the worse of the division" when the vote was taken.

Sir Richard Acland, leader of the Commonwealth Party, and Seymour Cocks, Labor, led the attack on the government's policy and charged that Britain was supporting monarchy and Right-Wing factions against the Left.

Standing pat on his policy of intervention in the strife of Europe's restive liberated lands, Mr. Churchill declared that "we stand upon the foundation of a fair, free election based upon universal suffrage."

Then in an indirect reference to criticism of that policy at home and abroad, he said:

"We are marching along our onerous and painful task alone. Perhaps I ought to say 'poor old Britain.' We have to assume the burden and the most thankless tasks, scoffed at, abused, and criticised from every quarter."

Ninth Test

Mr. Churchill's demand for a vote of confidence or overthrow was the ninth such test of his government. The last confidence vote was held last March 30. In all previous contests of strength, he has won handily.

The Prime Minister dealt directly and early with his opposition to inclusion of Count Carlo Sforza in the Italian government cabinet as foreign minister—an issue which touched off current criticism of British foreign policy and which led subsequently to a United States State Department statement of its hands-off policy.

Mr. Churchill asserted that it was "not only a great mistake but quite untrue to say that we had vetoed" Sforza's appointment.

"That right belonged alone to the Italians," he said, and added:

"All we have to say is that we do not trust the man nor would we put the slightest confidence in any government of which he is a dominant member."

Rising before the House of Commons after the spokesman of a Labor faction completed a blistering attack on Britain's actions in Greece, Mr. Churchill asserted:

"Here is a pretty direct issue upon which the House will have to pronounce before we separate this evening."

Mr. Churchill declared he would deal with "the whole of this question of our intervention in Europe where we have to intervene by dealing with other countries besides Greece."

He was answering labor remands that he give assurances British troops would not be used to disarm "friends of democracy."

He asserted:

"The government would be unworthy of confidence if His Majesty's forces were being used to disarm the friends of democracy in Greece and other parts of Europe.

"The question arises, who are the friends of democracy?"

Interpretation of Democracy.

Cheers—and some counter-cheers —greeted Mr. Churchill's first retort to Seymour Cocks, Labor, who denounced the government for intervening in Greece to keep George Papandreou as Prime Minister against opposition of Left-Wing E.A.M. forces there.

"How is the word democracy to be interpreted?" asked Mr. Churchill, and added that his own idea of democracy was that of the ordinary man fighting for his country and then casting his vote.

If that was democracy, Mr. Churchill said, he saluted it.

Emanuel Shinwell, Labor, interrupted to ask "in Spain?"

The Prime Minister retorted:

"This is one of those gross misrepresentations that a certain class of people indulge in—that I have spoken praising words about Franco. All I said was that Spanish politics did not merely consist of writing rude words on a wall."

Greeted by Cheers.

Then he looked directly at the Labor member and said:

"It is really no use for Mr. Shinwell to screw up his face as if he were taking a nasty dose of medicine."

Mr. Shinwell shot back, "that is precisely what I am doing and many of the people in the country as well."

Mr. Churchill was greeted by wild cheering from the Conservatives when he declared "democracy is no harlot to be picked up in the street by a man with a tommy-gun."

"We stand upon the foundation of a fair and free election based upon universal suffrage," said the Prime Minister. "I feel quite different about a swindle-democracy. It takes all sorts to make a democracy, not only a Left Wing or even Communist.

"I do not accept a party as necessarily representing democracy because it becomes more violent as it becomes less numerous..don't let us treat democracy as if it were merely grabbing power and shooting those who did not agree with you. That is the antithesis of democracy."

Mr. Churchill stated that "the last thing that represents democracy is mob law, with bands of gangs armed with deadly weapons forcing their way into great cities, seizing police stations and key points of government endeavoring to introduce a totalitarian regime and clamoring to shoot everyone who is politically inconvenient, as part of a purge of those who are said to have collaborated with the Germans during the occupation."

"When countries are liberated," he said, "it does not follow that those who receive our weapons should use them to engross to themselves by murder and bloodshed powers and traditions many countries had slowly developed and to which the great majority of their people were firmly attached."

Mr. Churchill said he trusted "the mass of the people in almost every crisis," but that he wanted first "to make sure that it is the people, not a gang of men from the mountains or countryside who think by violence they can overturn constituted authority, in some cases ancient parliaments, governments and states."

There were frequent interruptions but Mr. Churchill displayed good humor and remarked "I have plenty of time for any outcries that are wrung from members opposite."

Then the Prime Minister declared:

"We British who are now suggested to be poor friends of democracy lost 35,000 to 40,000 men in opening up the port of Antwerp."

He gave a new pledge that all liberated countries upon the return of "normal tranquility shall have a free universal vote to decide the government of their country except a Fascist regime, whether that government shall be to the left or right."

Mr. Churchill then began to take up country by country—Greece, Belgium, Italy—his government's foreign policy.

Of Greece, he said, because the government "did not allow the gangsters heavily armed to descend from the mountains and instal themselves with all their bloody terror and vigor in power, the government was accused of not being friends of democracy".

"I repulse that claim", said Mr. Churchill, amid cheers.

In Belgium, he said there was to be a coup in November to overthrow the Pierlot government which he described as "the only constitutional link with the past". British troops patrolled the streets under orders of Gen. Eisenhower, Mr. Churchill said, and added:

"I consider that Gen. Eisenhower's decisions were absolutely right".

Shouts of "De Gaulle" came from the Labor benches

"I certainly never felt about De Gaulle the sentiments which experience has engendered in me about Count Sforza", retorted Mr. Churchill. "De Gaulle is a man of honor and has never broken his words. These things have come out.

"We are not avid to become deeply involved in the politics of the liberated countries. All we desire from them is governments which will guarantee us the necessary security for our lines of communication".

No Broken Agreement.

Mr. Churchill said he would be sorry if it were proved his government had broken a joint arrangement with the United States on Italy.

"But we have not done so" he said.

"The British Minister did say to an Italian inquirer that we did not think Count Sforza would be a particularly good choice and he had a perfect right to say that" maintained Mr. Churchill.

Mr. Churchill revealing for the first time Britain's specific objections to Sforza said that when the Count was allowed to return to Italy he pledged support of Marshal Badoglio as long as he was engaged in expelling the Germans and agreed that internal politics should be adjourned for the duration of the struggle.

"He was no sooner back in Italy", asserted Mr. Churchill, "than he began that long series of intrigues which ended in the expulsion of Marshal Badoglio from office".

Mr. Churchill said that without the "solemn promises" given by Count Sforza "we would have been able to convince our American friends that it would not have been a good thing for him to go back to Italy".

Praises Greek Premier

Mr. Churchill spoke warmly of Greek Prime Minister George Papandreou, describing him as "a man . . . who lived all the time in Greece without being subservient to the enemy or losing his reputation."

"When he came out he restored order to the Greek government which is the constitutional government of Greece and which can only be replaced by a free vote of the people," he asserted.

While declaring it would be unfair to "stigmatize" all the E.L.A.S. —army of the left-wing E.A.M. party—as self-seeking, Mr. Churchill said they "did not on occasions hesitate to help the Germans catch and kill representatives of the E.D.E.S.", army of the conservatives.

The House gave Mr. Churchill one of its loudest cheers when he asserted the British army invaded Greece "at the invitation and with the consent of all parties, bearing us with gifts and the assurance of the absolute right to determine their own future."

"We do not feel it compatible with our honor or the obligations into which we have entered," he said, "to wash our hands of the whole business, make our way to the sea as we easily could and leave Athens to anarchy and misery followed by murder."

Would Accept Dismissal

In the tense atmosphere of the historic chamber, Mr. Churchill mixed his solemn declarations with an occasional touch of humor, heckled his hecklers, and, at one point, answered cries of "speak up" by picking up a glass of water with the remark that he would have a "little lubricant."

Sipping briefly, he turned then to Lady Astor—one of Britain's foremost prohibitionists—and observed: "I know it will please the honorable lady to see me drinking water."

Hammering home the need for the use of British troops in Greece, he solemnly told Commons:

"If I am to blame for this action I will gladly accept dismissal of the House, but if I am not dismissed, make no mistake about it, we shall persist in this policy of clearing Athens and the Athens regions of all those who are rebels to the constituted authority of Greece."

Cheers greeted his words.

A few minutes later, amid an uproar, he added:

"They are mutineers to the orders of the supreme commander of the Mediterranean under whom all guerillas have undertaken to serve."

Defends Policy

In a broadside defence of his policy, as he concluded his 80-minute address, Mr. Churchill declared:

"I have no fear at all that the most searching inquiry into the policy which we have pursued in Belgium, Holland, Italy and Greece, will entitle any man in whose breast fairness and fair play reside to accuse me of pursuing reactionary policies or hampering the free expression of the national will."

Seymour Cocks, Labor, bringing into the open the dissatisfaction that has gripped Liberal and Left-wing factions on Britain's policy toward liberated lands, said he did so "with feelings of responsibility, anxiety and grief."

"Today on the sacred soil of Athens in the shadow of Acropolis British soldiers and Greek patriots lie dead side by side each with an Allied bullet in his heart," asserted Mr. Cocks. "I ask the government to immediately put an end to this fratricidal strife."

Mr. Cocks asserted that as victory approached "British policy has been inclined to support many of the old, worn-out regimes in Europe against the new popular emerging forces."

"Instances of this," he said, "have been reported recently in Belgium and Italy."

Attacking King George of Greece, Mr. Cocks declared he "tore up the Greek constitution he had sworn to preserve, and set up a dictatorship under the late Gen. Metaxas."

Even as the House opened its historic debate Labor organizations throughout the country were adopting resolutions protesting against British troops firing upon Greek guerillas.

A delegate meeting of the Birmingham Borough Labor party, claiming to speak for 300,000 workers, demanded in a resolution that "in the future neither British arms nor the distribution of food relief should be used to thwart popular will in liberated countries."

The London District Committee, Electrical Trades Union, called upon the British government "to give every support to the Belgium liberation forces," and described the Pierlot government as "reactionary."

Mr. Cocks contended that the leftwing Greek organization E.A.M. which is challenging the government of Prime Minister George Papandreou, was not a Communist party.

But the House laughed when he added "it has a firm Communist core like the United Nations themselves."

Cries of "no, no" met his suggestion that the E.A.M. in its republican ideas was supported by 90 per cent of the Greeks.

Water Tractors Used to Outflank Japanese Forces

Gen. MacArthur's Headquarters, Philippines, Dec. 8 (AP)—American cavalrymen, in an amphibious flanking manoeuvre, surprised Japanese forces 10 miles south of the vital enemy-held port of Ormoc on Leyte's west coast as other American forces were breaching the enemy's Palanas line, two miles farther south, it was disclosed today.

Al Dopking, Associated Press War Correspondent, in a delayed dispatch written Dec. 5 (Manila Time) said, the cavalrymen, riding heavily armed amphibious tractors, came around the northern horn of Leyte on a more than 125-mile three-day trip, the longest ever made by amtracs under their own power. They knifed into Japanese positions at Tabgas and adjoining Balogo village.

Meanwhile Tokyo radio claimed Japanese paratroopers had landed at four points behind the American lines on Leyte to destroy airfields. The broadcast was unconfirmed by Allied sources.

Nearing Supply Port.

Gen. MacArthur's communique today noted success on land, sea and in the air. In ground fighting the 24th army corps penetrated the enemy's Palanas river line at a point about 12 miles southeast of Ormoc, Japanese supply port.

Two U.S. columns, shoving northward, reached points south of Balogo on the west coast, and Kang Dagit village father inland as they breached the enemy line south of Ormoc.

At sea the Japanese line of reinforcement by water through Ormoc Bay has been cut by naval and air forces, the communique announced.

The air arm dealt blows from the Philippines to Timor.

Three 1,000-ton Japanese freighters were sunk, one off Bondoc peninsula in southern Luzon one off Bohol island in the Philippine Archipelago, and a third off the north coast of Flores, between Timor and Java in the Netherlands East Indies.

3rd Sidney

3rd Sidney — The heavy snowstorm late Thursday afternoon and Friday of last week caused a complete tie-up in traffic on the country roads until Saturday when the plows could get through. The showing of lantern slides at Aiken's Church scheduled for Thursday evening had to be cancelled, and the Sunday School service on Sunday morning was withdrawn.

Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Saylor spent Saturday evening with Mr. and Mrs. Fred Westover.

Master Gerald Grills, who has been in the Belleville General Hospital with a fractured arm, returned to his home on Sunday.

Christmas Buying

Christmas is approaching at a rate at which time is accustomed to fly at this season. A little more than two weeks will bring the festive season and in the brief interim much preparation has to be made for the great winter festival.

Now is the time for those who have not bought their gifts to make their purchases and so make certain that they will secure what they desire, will have time to make choices that will please the recipients and ease or relieve the work of the business rush which is such a bugbear to clerks in the shops in the last few days.

The merchants have done well in securing so large stocks though they will all have to point out the difficulty owing to shortages which are natural in a time when restrictions are necessary.

What the people are able to secure will go far to create the Christmas atmosphere and so all people out of the reaction of their hearts at this season will be able to make Christmas again a time of cheer. If there is one time to remember Christmas it is today. The men overseas do not allow Christmas to pass whatever adverse circumstances due to the urgencies of war may overhang the situation and they desire most of all that their friends at home celebrate Christmas as they would celebrate it were they home—that is, in the good old style to which they have been accustomed. Much of the atmosphere can be found in the setting, the gifts that are given, the toys that children play with. On this standpoint the coming festival will be in the tradition of old-time Christmases.

Britain's Home Guard

While the Hitlerites and Himmlerites have been forced to call up a German domestic army, Britain's Home Guard has been given the highest praise for its service and readiness. That praise and commendation came from His Majesty the King.

This situation symbolizes the successful progress of the war towards Allied victory and peace. Now the German domestic army is called upon in an hour when Germany is under invasion and is on the way to inevitable defeat.

The Home Guard in Britain and North Ireland well deserve the highest praise that can be given them for they were the stout hearts of oak that in the darkest hour in history when the lights seemed to be going out across Europe before the German blast stood ready to rush to any post to ward off any attempt to invade Britain. As His Majesty said, Britons responded to the call as "free men will always answer when freedom is in danger." These men would have fought the foe anywhere. Theirs was the state of readiness. They possessed a spirit of determination which possibly the world has never seen exceeded and as a result of that they helped to maintain the land of Britain inviolate from the Huns for their courage must have gone a long way to deter the marauders. The enemy must have known what to expect from such men.

The days that gave birth to the Home Guard were the days when British courage and stoutness of heart, chivalry and honor caused it to be said that it would be spoken of as "their finest hour." The whole nation in the days of 1940 rose to the challenge of the advance of Hitler along the French coast of the Channel. At the head of Parliament stood the dauntless, heroic Winston Churchill, symbol of all that is greatest in the British people and in British spirit. On the seas were the sea heroes of Britain, also ready.

History will honor Britain's civilian army and Britons will ever remember this organization.

Three Years After

Three years ago Thursday Japan on a course initiated by the vilest treachery started out to conquer the Pacific world. She made great gains in the early days. Now she is on her way back in retreat to the ultimate defeat which is to come.

Japan was naturally associated with the wolfish Hitler for Germany and Japan are examples of the law-breaker among peoples.

Today long range U. S. Superfortresses journey to stab the war industries right in the capital of Japan. Many of the islands she was able to seize have been wrenched from her and the battle of the Philippines is proceeding according to United States strategy.

Something of the pattern of the war that is to wind up this terroristic threat of the Axis against modern civilization and culture is evident as the tide moves against Japan and as Germany shrinks in size as the Allies tear holes in the sides of the Reich. Treachery by Hitler and the Nipponese have done their worst—the world of free men is already on the march to elimination of the threat of the Nazi and the Jap.

Malta a Name of Honor

Again attention has been drawn to that intrepid isle in the Mediterranean, the anchor of British power in the middle stage of the war. The Germans and Italians tried with no result but failure and defeat to take this natural fortress guarded by the unyielding garrison and people of Malta.

Today the war has long since moved past the island and the final stage of the conflict is being reached in Germany and its environs but the memory of appreciation for the people of Malta will linger. There were 2,315 alerts, 1,569 civilian deaths by enemy action. Every one of its 91 square miles received ninety-nine tons of bombs and yet the fortress stood and the people remained unconquered.

Malta stands as a symbol. It saw the ultimate triumph of Allied power in North Africa and it held in its day the key of the coming successes which have taken place in Italy and in France, Belgium and Holland and had no small part in helping the eastern Allies, the Russians to surge westward against the Hitlerites in the push that has been continuous to this time.

The British Government has just published a little booklet of the siege of Malta and its triumph.

Helping the Little Chap

(Boston Globe)

A navy officer learned that in Rome it is best to do as the Romans do—and that is to keep hands off somebody else's fights. He came out of a store in Rome and found two Italians fighting at the curb. One was big; the other was small.

The officer went to the rescue of the small chap and sent the big one on his way. The small fellow shouted his thanks and ran down the street.

The officer smiled with the happiness of a man who has done a good deed. Then an Italian bystander stepped up to him and explained.

The big fellow had been beating up the small one because the small one was stealing articles from the navy officer's jeep.

Britain Alone

(New York Times)

The British were fighting Hitler, part of the time almost alone, for two years before the Japanese bombed us into the war. If we are tired of practice blackouts, food restrictions, casualty lists and high taxes, what of them? The British people have stood up magnificently against every weapon Hitler could throw against them. On that tight little island, that "fortress built by Nature for herself," our British cousins have fought the good fight, held the line, contributed their full share to victory. The statictics of this White Paper prove that.

Breath-Taking

(London Daily Mail)

Pleading for a place at the Peace Conference for "neutral countries" (meaning Spain) General Franco has spoken of "their serene and disinterested understanding of what is just." The impertinence of this suggestion is breath-taking. The British people do not forget the substantial help given by Franco's Spain to Germany.

HUSBAND'S PLEA

With all my worldly goods, I vowed
That you, for life, would be endowed
And that, my dear, as well you know,
Was almost forty years ago;
Nor once have I that promise made
For any selfish whim betrayed,
But now, I beg next time to use
My ration ticket good for shoes.

Since first this fearful war began
I've been a patient, gentle man.
I've let you girls my coupon use
For every type of lady's shoes;
For sandals flat, for open-toes,
For slippers golden, purple, rose,
And all that line the merchant's shelf;
But now, I need a pair myself.

I know you've nothing fit to fear,
But I've gone through my only pair!
I know your shoes must match your gown,
But, darling, I am on the town!
I know, my dear, how folks would talk
Should you in evening footwear walk,
But I've no stock from which to choose.
This time, I've gotta get some shoes!

At the annual meeting of Oxford Lodge No. 17 Sons of England the following officers were elected for the ensuing year: President, S. Lennox; Vice President, T. V. Dack; Secretary-Treasurer, John Fenn; Chaplain, Rev. A. L. Geen; Assistant Secretary, W. E. Armitage; Committee in order given, E. J. Follwell, L. Renouf, F. Follwell, F. Fleming; Inside Guard, C. Waldron; Outside Guard, W. J. Bennett; Delegate to Grand Lodge, E. J. Follwell.

About $675.00 were subscribed to the Crippled Children's Fund of the Belleville Rotary Club at an entertainment sponsored by the Club at the Belle Theatre, Sunday evening. The theatre was filled to capacity and many persons could not gain admittance. Mr. C. M. Reid acted as chairman in a pleasing manner and the program of music was in keeping with the day. The community singing of favorite hymns was inspiring.

Mr. and Mrs. J. G. Latta of Latta, Ontario, celebrated the golden anniversary of their marriage on Nov. 26th., and many relatives and friends gathered to extend congratulations and express good wishes.

The basement of the city hall building is to be provided with a cement floor.

The city authorities have under consideration the installing of a fire alarm system to be provided by the Bell Telephone Company.

The City Engineer has been authorized by the city council to attend the road building congress to be held in Chicago shortly.

Mr. H. Knott, who is connected with the horse shoe department at the Rolling Mills, was presented with a handsome clock by his fellow employees last evening in recognition of his recent marriage.

Mrs. P. Temple, of Montreal, is the guest of Mr. and Mrs. Walter Alford, Victoria Avenue. Mr. and Mrs. Temple and family were highly esteemed residents of this city twenty years ago.

The local lodge of the Canadian Order of Oddfellows gave an at home in the lodge rooms last evening which was largely attended and most enjoyable. Grand Master Lapp of Brighton, was present and occupied the chair. He gave an address as did also the Rev. W. D. P. Wilson, of Cannifton, the Grand Chaplain of the Order. A program of vocal and instrumental music was given followed by refreshments. Later dancing was enjoyed, the music being furnished by Chaulaupka's orchestra. Mr. R. H. Ketcheson was Master of Ceremonies.

Skating on the bay and river was excellent today.

The County of Hastings is still without a sheriff to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Dr. Hope.

The Belleville Amateur Minstrels had an excellent practice last evening. Persons who have been rehearsing state that the performance will be the best ever seen here.

Mr. George Smeaton, an old Belleville boy, has returned to town and will take a position with Mr. J. S. McKeown, druggist.

The roads were so slippery today that many farmers who started for town had to give up and return home. All the blacksmiths in town have more work than they can attend to.

When Robert Wilson and Charles Addison of Brown's foundry were making some repairs at the gas works today, the latter was overcome with gas and would probably have lost his life had not Mr. Wilson gone to his assistance.

SAVIOUR AND SAVIOR

Which is correct, "saviour" or "savior"?

This word is derived through Old French from Latin "salvator," meaning one who saves, preserves, rescues or delivers from destruction, danger or peril.

When used as a title of God, and especially Jesus as the Redeemer of mankind, it is always capitalized and spelled "Saviour," with the "u."

In American usage, when used in the ordinary sense of one who saves it is not capitalized and is spelled without the "u"—"savior."

In British usage, however, the word is always spelled "Saviour," whether applied to the Deity or used in the ordinary sense.

"Of agent nouns," says H. W. Fowler in "Modern English Usage," "'saviour (with its echo paviour) is perhaps the only one that now retains—our 'governor' being the latest thing to shed its 'u.'"

In the Old Testament "saviour" is generally applied only to the Deity, but occasionally it is used in the ordinary sense of deliverer from worldly trouble.

In Nehemiah 9:27 the Levites, standing on the stairs before the whole congregation, are reported as saying: "Therefore thou deliveredst them into the hand of their enemies, who vexed them: and in the time of their trouble, thou heardest them from heaven; and according to thy manifold mercies thou gavest them saviours, who saved them out of the hand of their enemies."

In the New Testament the term invariably refers to God or to Jesus.

Spelling certain words with "or" instead of "our" is one of the chief differences between American and British spelling.

This difference dates back to the time of Noah Webster and his early dictionaries and spelling books.

In the United States the "our" form has been completely dropped from all such words as "honour," "favour," "clamour," humour," "rigour" and the like.

The retention of the "u" in many such words is a sort of hallmark of British orthodox spelling.

But the British themselves have dropped the "u" from many such words. For instance, they spell, as Americans do, "horror," "tremor" and "pallor."

HOUSE

Opposing the government on the final division on the confidence motion were the Progressive Party; the Quebec Bloc Populaire Group; Quebec Independents; 25 Quebec Liberals; one Independent, A. W. Neill of Comox-Alberni, British Columbia; Harry Leader, a Liberal-Conservative of Portage la Prairie, Man., and E. O. Bertrand of Prescott, Ont.

Opposed by Conservatives.

The Opposition vote thus included Progressive Conservatives who supported total conscription and other members opposed to the limited conscription imposed by the government.

Mr. King had a majority within his own party in the final vote, which came at 1 a.m. He had said previously that he would not seek to carry on unless he had adequate support from his own followers in the House.

Members of the Senate, who also assembled in Ottawa on Nov. 22, completed their sitting on Wednesday. The House resumes on Jan. 31, 1945.

The government's strength was indicated in House divisions yesterday afternoon. Votes indicated sufficient government members backed it to exceed any combined opposition.

The tensity which has marked the "crisis session" continued in evidence, however. Members displayed little of the good spirits often in evidence when a vote is about to be taken and they usually sing while waiting for the division bells to stop ringing. Today they waited silently, but after the final vote early this morning government supporters cheered wildly.

Amendment Defeated

An amendment moved by Joseph Jean (L-Montreal Mercier) brought out the anti-conscription votes as it suggested the government continue the voluntary method of obtaining men for overseas. Liberal members voting in support of this amendment numbered 40, 38 being from Quebec.

Others were E. O. Leger, member for the New Brunswick constituency of Kent and E. O. Bertrand, member for the Ontario Prescott riding. The amendment was defeated by 168 votes to 43.

Four Quebec cabinet ministers voted with the government — Justice Minister St. Laurent, Fisheries Minister Bertrand, War Services Minister LaFleche and Welfare Minister Claxton. Dr. R. Leduc of Wright, a French-speaking member, and two English-speaking members from Quebec, Douglas Abbott of St. Antoine-Westmount and F. P. Whitman of Montreal Mount Royal, also supported the government.

Works Minister Fournier, member for Hull, Que., was not in the House during the Jean amendment vote but was there to vote against the Progressive Conservative "total conscription" amendment, which was defeated 170 to 44.

Four Liberals Vote

Four Liberals voted in support of the Progressive Conservative amendment which would make all 68,000 home defence troops available for service anywhere. The Liberals supporting this amendment were Flt. Lt. James Sinclair (Vancouver North), Robert Gladstone (Wellington South), George Cruickshank (Fraser Valley) and Harry Leader (Portage La Prairie).

The C.C.F. group supported the Progressive Conservative amendment, but the Social Credit group was divided.

The Social Crediters voted with the C.C.F. members when the latter appealed a ruling by Speaker J. A. Glen declaring out of order an amendment calling for the mobilization of wealth and resources as well as manpower and the elimination of distinctions between draftees and general service men. The speaker was upheld by 176 votes to 20. It was the second C.C.F. amendment ruled out during the session.

Appealed For Ruling.

Later the Social Credit party appealed a ruling by Speaker J. A. Glen ruling out of order an amendment which asked that the House declare it would support the immediate sending of adequate reinforcements overseas and would support the government in a vigorous war effort against the totalitarian powers consistent with Canada's ability and place in the world. The speaker's ruling was upheld by a vote of 165 to 33. Progressive Conservative and C.C.F. members voted with the Social Crediters. This also was the second Social Credit amendment ruled out of order.

Philippe Picard (L—Bellechasse) moved an amendment, supported by Walter Tucker (L—Rosthern) asking that the House declare it would aid the government in a policy of maintaining an efficient war effort, but did not approve of compulsory service overseas. It was ruled out of order. A similar amendment by Mr. Picard was ruled out previously.

Accepted Amendment.

Shortly afterwards, the Prime Minister said the government would accept an amendment by M. J. Coldwell, C.C.F. leader, asking that the motion be changed to read that the House would support "a vigorous war effort" rather than support the government "in its policy of maintaining a vigorous war effort." Mr. Coldwell said the original motion might be construed as implying approval of all government policies. The amendment was approved by a vote of 141 to 70.

Hon. P. J. A. Cardin (L—Richelieu-Vercheres), former transport minister, said he would not support the government motion even if amended as the C.C.F. had wished. He would keep his word to his people and vote against the government.

J. H. Blackmore, Social Credit House leader, said he might or might not favor the general policies of the Liberal government but he would vote in support of making certain home defence army troops available as reinforcements. The House could decide on whether it had confidence in the government when it re-assembled next year.

PERSONAL HEALTH TALKS

By WILLIAM BRADY, M.D.

REAL AND MAKE-BELIEVE SALAD

Mrs. Newlyrich whose husband draws nearly a hundred a week now, was fresh out of sugar and so was the market where she usually traded. But an acquaintance told her she had seen plenty of sugar in another market, so Mrs. Newlyrich hurried thither, only to discover, to her disgust, that the large supply of sugar there was not cane sugar at all, but beet sugar.

Perhaps the chemists can distinguish sucrose, sugar, obtained from sugar cane from sucrose, sugar, obtained from the sugar beet. I wouldn't know or care particularly. I do know that so far as nutritive value, taste, flavor, digestibility, purity, appearance, cost and suitability for table or general use in the diet of infant, child and adult may be concerned, there is no known difference between cane sugar and beet sugar.

Mrs. Newlyrich, alias Mrs. Misinformed, comes naturally by this peculiar prejudice, for the credulous Yankee public has been thoroughly educated, these past two or three generations by the big white flour interests, to regard refined white flour as "pure," preferable for refined people, and particularly worth a higher price than plain whole wheat or other grades of flour that have not been so thoroughly denaturized, that is, so completely deprived of the essential minerals and vitamins that are present in wheat.

Being so highly educated by the food barons, Mrs. Newlyrich or Mrs. Misinformed readily forgets the prime purpose of salad in the well-planned dinner, which is to give every one who partakes of the meal at least a part of the minerals and vitamins the ordinary mixed diet of most American people fails to provide in adequate proportion to maintain good nutrition and efficient function. By the time the average cook gets through fussing with it, the salad too often resembles a lollypop in taste, appearance and nutritive value.

A real or proper salad should contain only raw herbs or leafy greens, vegetables and maybe fruit. Never any cooked food. If it is a real or proper salad it is of little significance what condiment seasoning or dressing one prefers—that is a matter of individual taste.

Raw greens, vegetables, fruits retain nearly all of the minerals and vitamins that grow in them. Cooking invariably destroys a considerable part if not most of the vitamins, and the minerals dissolve out in the cooking water and are thrown away—unless this water is carefully saved and used in making soup, gravy, etc.

Overfed, overweight people who overeat, especially those who have an exclusive or insatiable craving for refined carbohydrates cultivate salads, I mean real salads (all raw foods).

QUESTIONS & ANSWERS

Postcard Plus Fee

I would appreciate your sending to the address below your pamphlet "How to Lose Weight." (Mrs. H. C. D.)

Answer — Who is to pay the freight, Lady? Read the instructions, please, and next time you ask for the pamphlet, inclose a stamped envelope bearing your address—you'll find that apart from being an awful grouch about these little amenities, I'm not so dreadful as I sound.

Tuberculosis.

Are sunbaths beneficial for a person with tuberculosis of the lungs? Would it be advisable to take vitamin D and calcium? (Mrs. B. C.)

Answer — The answer to both questions is yes, but only under the supervision of the patient's own physician. It would be extremely foolhardy to monkey with such things on your own or without your physician's advice.

HATCHED IN SNOW, LITTLE TURKS THRIVE

London, Ont., Dec. 8 — (CP) — Six hardy little turkeys, hatched Dec. 1 in a makeshift nest surrounded by snow, are keeping a turkey hen busy these days on a farm near Wilton Grove.

The hen, which belongs to Mrs. Leo Johnson, has laid four times this year, but only three nests of eggs have hatched, a sow having dined on one of them.

"It's unusual enough to have her laying four times in a year, but it certainly is something different to have little ones in December," Mrs. Johnson said.

Local Boy Overseas Says Many Lives Saved by Blood Plasma

In the shadow of the Allied guns in Belgium is No. 2 Canadian General Hospital.

Housed with the unit in a partially ruined building is Electrician Bill Finkle, son of Mr. and Mrs. Ernie Finkle of this city. And being right on the spot, so to speak, Bill knows whereof he speaks.

Being an electrician in charge of several "Belgique" civilian workers, Bill gets around quite a bit and picks up some accurate knowledge.

And here is some first hand information direct from that part of the battle-front, the hospitals, that is definitely and undeniably true.

In short "We need more blood plasma".

In a letter to his parents here, Electrician Finkle says "Several lives have been saved here within the sound of the guns by this precious stuff (plasma). In some cases a large amount has been necessary in order to save the life of a wounded Canadian. This means a draft on supplies. It is doing a fine job, so keep it coming."

The above is an excerpt from a letter from the front. It is definite and irrefutable proof that there is a serious need overseas for this vital life-saving material.

Residents of this city can help by offering themselves as donors to the Red Cross Blood Donor Clinic housed in the Kiwanis Centre on Dundas Street. All offers will be gratefully accepted. Call 1,000.

POLICE BLOTTER

Activities in city police circles were purely routine during the past 24 hours, Chief R. W. Probert announced at noon. City police were asked to keep a sharp lookout for a green stake body truck reported stolen at Frankford, however.

Employees at the Canada Packers, Emily St., complained that scholars returning home from Queen Victoria School yesterday afternoon, had practically destroyed a package of company labels. The damage was estimated at $30.

Street Lights Broken.

Boys were reported to have broken street lights on Albert St. while engaged in a snowball fight along about the same time.

City police apprehended a juvenile lad, who was stealing letters from private mail boxes at apartment houses on the East Hill. The lad was given a stern lecture regarding the seriousness of taking other peoples' property when taken before Magistrate T. Y. Wills in a session of Juvenile Court, held in camera today.

POLICE COURT

Harvey Schryver, Belleville, was given a year's suspended sentence after being convicted of stealing brass from the Belleville Metal and Waste Company. The accused man pleaded guilty as charged, when arraigned before Magistrate T. Y. Wills today.

Police Inspector J. C. Hayes told the court the value of the brass was only about 75c, but that Schryver was intoxicated, when apprehended. Crown Attorney B. C. Donnan later read the accused man's record of previous convictions, which disclosed he had been convicted of the identical same charge back in 1942.

"The matter is a trivial one and I believe a year's suspended sentence will suffice," added His Worship. Schryver admitted to a drunk charge also and was fined ten dollars and costs .

Donald Dafoe, Point Anne, paid $4.50, which included costs, after being convicted of failing to produce his driver's licence.

Wilfred Thompson, Deseronto, appeared on a charge of assault, but his case was further enlarged. "This man has been examined by a psychiatrist, but we have not received a report on the case as yet," revealed Mr. Donnan.

Six persons pleaded guilty to drunk charges prior to the court and with the magistrate's consent paid the conventional "ten and costs." One was a woman.

Car Crashes Thru Guard Rail Into Moira River

When the automobile he was driving went out of control and after crashing through a highway guard rail, immediately north of Belleville on the Cannifton Road early last evening, George Smith, 118 Foster Ave., narrowly escaped fatal injuries when the coupe he was driving toppled over a 22-foot embankment into the Moira River below. Smith, who was alone in the car at the time, was rushed to the Belleville General Hospital where it was disclosed he had sustained fractured ribs, extensive head lacerations and was also suffering from general shock. He was attended by Dr. A. E. Miles.

First intimation of the accident came when Mrs. Muracle of Cannifton, phoned to Provincial Police headquarters here reporting she had seen a coupe crash through the guard rail on Highway No. 37 north of Belleville and topple over into the Moira River. Traffic Officers Harry Caldwell and Chas. Siple hastened to the scene to find the driver (Smith) had been released from the wrecked coupe by neighbors, who heard the crash.

The vehicle was badly wrecked as the result of hurtling over the 22-foot embankment and was left in the river until today when a towing truck, with winch attached, had to be employed to bring the vehicle up the steep incline.

At the hospital Mr. Smith told investigating police he had been forced to apply the brakes of his coupe suddenly as another car was crowding him. The car skidded on the ice and crashed through the guard rail.

U.S. Favors Complete Freedom of Political Action for Greeks

Washington, Dec. 8 —(AP)— State Secretary Stettinius Thursday put the United States on record as favoring complete freedom of political action for the people of Greece.

He formally endorsed a declaration by Prime Minister Winston Churchill Tuesday that the people of Greece should have complete freedom to form a government either of the Right or of the Left.

But Mr. Stettinius deliberately refrained from endorsing another statement by the British Prime Minister dealing with the use of British troops to prevent formation of what Churchill called a "Communist dictatorship in Greece."

Earlier this week the U. S. State Department protested Britain's intervention in the formation of a new Italian government. The British action had vetoed Count Carlo Sforza as a candidate for either premier or foreign minister of a new regime at Rome.

At his news conference Thursday Mr. Stettinius handed reporters this statement:

"I was interested to note that in his statement on the Greek situation on December 5 Prime Minister Churchill told the House of Commons 'our position, as I have said, is extremely clear. Whether the Greek people form themselves into a monarchy or republic is for their decision. Whether they form a government of the Right or Left is for their decision. These are entirely matters for them.'

"With this statement I am in full agreement. It is also our earnest hope that the people and authorities of Greece and our British Allies will work together in rebuilding that ravished country."

A subsequent investigation resulted in the arrest of Pte. George E. Smith, Jr., of Pittsburgh, Pa., and Pte. Leonard S. Wijpacha, of Detroit. Smith was charged with murder and Wijpacha with being an accessory.

Lt. John Stock, Belleville Took Part in Terrible Falaise Battle

A Belleville boy, Lieutenant John Stock, son of Mr. Harry B. Stock, local city treasurer, took part in the terrible and important battle of August ninth, which will rank forever in the battle annals of the British Columbia Regiment, according to a recent Canadian Press despatch written by the veteran war correspondent Ross Munro.

"The battle was the bloody action which took place near Hill 195 north of Falaise with the full story of this 14-hour battle in which the unit lost 38 tanks now revealed in Munro's story, which he heard from the handful of heroic officers who survived.

The 30-year-old commanding officer Lieut.-Col. Don Worthington, of Vancouver was killed as he gallantly led his men while of two squadron commanders, Major Tommy Baron was killed and Major Geoffrey Sidenius is now reported missing.

"At 2:30 a.m. on August ninth, the regiment headed down the highway to capture Hill 195, which was the key to Falaise.

"By dawn the regiment had thrust to within 2,000 yards of the 21st German panzer division. Masses of enemy guns opened up on the Canadian position and enemy tanks, Tigers and Panthers blasted at their attackers. On one section of the ground there were 24 enemy 88mm guns.

No Precedent.

"Thirty B.C. tanks and two companies of the Algonquin regiment from Northern Ontario took up positions in a field 300 yards square and there fought the enemy. Lieut.-Col. Worthington and the regiment's headquarters were inside this square . Major Sidenius' squadron did not quite reach them, being caught in the open near Quesnay woods when daylight came. They stood and fought there in the open and from dawn until 8 p.m. the battle raged with a fury, that had no precedent.

"One tank after another was hit by the crushing enemy artillery and tank fire, its crew bailing out to dig in with the Algonquins, who had slit trenches among the tanks. Lieut.-Col. Worthington was a fearless inspiring figure as he moved around the fireswept square on foot. The square got smaller and yet the Canadians held on. The commanding officer of the Algonquins, who was in the square, had a leg blown off. Lieut.-Col. Worthington took over command of the infantry as well. In the afternoon he was hit by shrapnel but carried on only to be killed later in the day".

Lost 15 Officers.

The regiment reported losing 15 officers and 162 other ranks, while for days wounded men and men who had been surrounded straggled back into the Canadian lines. It was in this engagement which Lieut. Stock was seriously burned, when his tank was struck by enemy fire.

Now recovered from the burns received in the Falaise battle, Lieut. Stock is back in Holland stationed as a liaison officer at brigade headquarters.

"It's rather a pleasant change from a line troop", he recently wrote his father. "My job is to buzz about in a scout car between the units . . . I like the travelling around better than being pinned down in a unit. They took a number of officers from the units, which had been in action the longest and gave them different jobs.

Lieut. Stock described Holland as continuing to be "as wet as ever" but stated in spite of it all was rather picturesque with its canals, windmills and little houses nestling on the dykes.

Marked Gasoline Used in Car Costs Motorist $25

Arthur Bruyea, 57 Church Street in this city, was fined $25 and costs by Magistrate T. Y. Wills here Friday after being convicted of using ungraded or "marked gasoline" in his private motor car. The charge was preferred through the Wartime Prices and Trade Board and presented by E. O. Butler, special Board prosecutor.

The principal witness called was George Jordan, Board investigator, who told the court he had taken a sample of gasoline from the tank of Bruyea's car last October and found it to be "marked gasoline." Explaining the meaning of graded or marked gasoline, Mr. Jordan told the court it was a special purple-colored gas sold and used expressly for farm implements or stationary engines exclusively. Sales slips showed Bruyea had purchased a total of 37 gallons, procured for use in a blow torch. "That seems like a lot of gasoline for a blow torch," related Mr. Butler after Bruyea had pleaded guilty.

"I suppose the purpose of these prosecutions are to put teeth into the war measures provisions. These regulations, must be observed and therefore I will fine the accused $25 and costs," concluded His Worship. Bruyea was given eight days in which to meet the assessed amount.

"I just got caught," was the only remark made by the accused.

AIR WAR TAPERS OFF

London, Dec. 8 (CP)—The Allied air offensive against German oil and rail centres tapered off today amid worsening weather over the channel.

Chinese Troops Retake Tushan

Chungking, Dec. 8, (AP) —Chinese field dispatches reported today that counter-attacking Chinese troops have recaptured Tushan, important railroad town 75 miles southeast of Kweiyang in Kweichow Province.

There was no immediate confirmation from the Chinese High Command, but earlier a special communique announced Chinese troops had "whittled down" Japanese forces fleeing southward from Sanho, 31 miles northeast of Tushan.

This war bulletin said the Chinese had pushed on 12 miles after recapturing Sanho Thursday. Fleeing Japanese troops were reported intercepted northeast of Lipo, 90 miles southeast of Kweiyang, which is the capital of Kweichow and a Burma Road strongpoint.

The Chinese had expressed hope their counter-assaults might result in a few days in the recapture of Thushan, which the Japanese seized in an offensive mounting a two-fold threat to Kweiyang and Kunning.

Loss of Kunning by the Chinese would cut the proseptive New China-India supply route. Other Japanese units were reported driving up the Yu River Valley from captured Manning in another thrust apparently aimed at Kunning, 225 miles distant.

Given Jail Term For Refusing To Remain at Work

When he refused to remain at his place of employment, Royce Seymour of Bancroft, was given three months in the common jail by Magistrate J. L. Lloyd at Bancroft on Wednesday.

"This man is well able to work and maintain himself, but he refuses to do so. This is the second time to my knowledge he has been in court to answer to the same charge. Apparently he just refuses to endeavor to keep himself," stated Assistant Crown Attorney S. G. Robertson while prosecuting the case. Seymour was arraigned by Provincial Constable Stan Palmateer, who also presented several other minor matters before Magistrate Lloyd's court.

700 Casualties Arrive Home

Halifax, Dec. 8 —(CP)— On her first voyage as a hospital ship, Canada's newly-converted liner Letitia arrived in this port today with more than 700 casualties from the fighting fronts and training field overseas.

Second largest hospital ship in operation, the Letitia brought the greatest contingent of casualties to reach Canada together since the start of the war. The battlegrounds of Italy and Western Europe were heavily represented among the returning men, and there were also veterans of the air and sea wars.

Though it was the Letitia's maiden arrival here as a hospital craft, she returned to this port as an old acquaintance. In peacetime she flew the flag of the Cunard-White Star Line as a passenger liner.

FEWER WOMEN TAXI DRIVERS

Toronto, Dec. 8. (CP) — In at least one traditionally male occupation, the women are on the way out instead of in, locally at least. Of 16 women licensed as taxi drivers within the last year, only three are operating on a full-time basis.

"NERVES" SHE CALLED IT

Losing interest—losing friends—she never went out any more—always too tired. "Nerves," she thought—but it was her kidneys, the filters of her blood, that needed attention. Delay meant danger. She took Dodd's Kidney Pills at once. The improved action of her kidneys helped to clear away blood impurities and excess acids. Fatigue, headache, backache, lack of energy, disappeared. 10

Novelties were sold by Mrs. Margaret Succee, Mrs. W. H. Dowden and Mrs. S. Bristow, while the corner grocery was in charge of Mrs. L. Henson and Mrs. Telford.

The home cooking table which held a most attractive array of salads, jellies, pies, cakes, tarts and cookies of all kinds, was in charge of Miss Vera Green, Miss Ada Green, Miss Dorothy Berry and Mrs. C. Sayles.

The evening's program concluded with the reading of "Message of Christmas" by Mrs. M. Clark, and "Christmas Eve" by Mrs. M. H. Borland. After the reading of the secretary's and treasurer's annual report it was decided to purchase a piano. Mrs. J. Watson the convener of nominating committee, took the chair for the election of officers. The following slate was brought in and voted upon: Honorary President, Mrs. W. Mackintosh; President, Mrs. K. Nicol; First Vice President, Mrs. W. Symon; Second Vice President, Mrs. M. H. Borland; Devotional Convener, Mrs. Eric Larsen; Secretary, Mrs. E. L. Coveney; Press Secretary, Mrs Warren Hill; Treasurer, Mrs. Edna McCracken.

Program Committee: Mrs. K. Connor, Mrs. N. Whytock, Mrs. M. Clark, and Miss L. Connor. Pianist, Miss Marion Robertson. Visiting committee, Mrs. K. West, Mrs. E. McCracken, Mrs. N. Whytock and the Red Cross convener, Mrs. J. Watson. Mrs. M. Clark thanked all members and officers for their fine co-operation during the past year, which, when compared with previous years, proved to be the most successful thus far in the history of the club. Tea was served by the hostess assisted by Mrs. N. Whytock when a social time was enjoyed by all.

St. Peter's Mission Band.

St. Peter's Mission Band held its regular meeting on Dec. 4th in the club room of the church. The theme "Kindness and sympathy open doors for Christian teaching," was repeated by all. One stanza of "What a Friend We Have in Jesus" was sung and prayer was offered by the leader. The story "The Nurse's Baby", which described home life among the Moros of the Philippines was read and brought out a thought provoking discussion. The new picture map was used when Jean Yearwood and Mariam Spencer brought in findings on the Philippine Islands. The offering was dedicated with the new choral response. A full period was devoted to Christmas music in preparation for the final meeting of the year. A print of the famous Madonna picture graced the worship centre. A brief prayer concluded the meeting.

BONG TIES WITH JOHNSON

Leyte, Dec. 8 — (AP) — Major Richard I. Bong of the United States Army air force racked up two more victories during the furious fighting over Leyte today, bringing his total of Japanese planes downed to 38.

Thus his tally equalled that of the top Allied ace in Western Europe, Wing Cmdr. J. E. (Johnny) Johnson. Johnson, an Englishman, commands an RCAF Spitfire wing flying from a European base.

In Washington the War Department announced award of the Congressional Medal of Honor, the United States' highest decoration, to Bong, who comes from Poplar, Wis.

"THE SHAPE"

Since photographer Mike Levelle got his first picture of Frances (The Shape) Vorne into a national magazine, he has been deluged with requests from fliers in the Pacific area for pictures of the lovely lass. Above is a new picture of "The Shape" which the fliers plan to drop to Jap soldiers with the following inscription in Japanese: "Eat your hearts out, you monkeys . . . Here's what we're fighting for." In this photo, "The Shape" wears a swim suit made from a captured Nazi parachute.

County Pays Indigent Hospital Accounts, Totalling $9,221, $7,600 to Patriotic Projects

Children's Aid Society Cost to County for Year is $21,451

Activities of several committees during 1944 were aired before the morning session of Hastings County Council today with reports of the Finance, Patriotic and House of Refuge Committees being adopted as read.

The Finance Committee under the chairman ship of Reeve George MacDonald, authorized payment of indigent hospital accounts amounting to $9,221.14, a decrease, the report stated, of $5,000 from last year. The amount was the equivalent to that paid in 1942.

Most hospitals raised indigent rates from $1.75 per day to $2.00 due to the higher costs of food, help, etc. The Committee felt this was a reasonable and justifiable increase as ten years ago the rate was $1.75 when costs of commodities and help were 25 per cent lower.

New flooring has been placed in the County Engineer's office at a cost of $229. The interior will be decorated as soon as help can be secured and a new system of lighting installed.

Cost of the Children's Aid Society to date is $21,451.80, the report revealed. This is an increase of $1,000 over that of 1943. The local society receives $1,500 monthly from the county to care for approximately 75 children.

Fuel expenses in county buildings were cut, the report stated, by the substitution of coal for wood. Coal was purchased at a price less than the $13 per cord ceiling for wood. Services of a night fireman were also eliminated, instituting another saving.

Hastings County taxpayers have donated thus far in 1944 the sum of $7,600 to patriotic organizations, Chairman George MacDonald told the council in the report of the Patriotic Committee.

One-half mill on the county assessment of $18,282,800.00 was levied for this purpose. This amounted to $9,141.40.

Of this amount $3,000 was given to the Hastings-Belleville Red Cross Society early in the year while a grant of $100 was given to all organized branches, eleven in all, of the Red Cross in the county. Later, when finances permitted, an additional $50 was donated to these associations. Salvation Army headquarters at Tweed were given $100.

The Navy League of Canada benefited to the amount of $850 through this committee while the Belleville Community Service Fund was given $2,000 to be used for purposes of assistance to armed services personnel and their families by the Y.M.C.A.; Children's Aid Society; the V.O.N., and the Salvation Army.

House of Refuge.

There was a bit of pride in council faces when Chairman A. A. Harvey, House of Refuge Committee head, told them in his report that the handsome team of black horses purchased by the county last spring had made an almost clean sweep in urban and rural fairs this year. The horses, fitted by Superintendent Elmer Sandercock, had been shown at numerous fairs and had won 15 firsts, 4 seconds, one fourth and six special prizes.

Hogs and cattle to the value of $1,325.40 had been sold from the farm during 1944.

Following inspection of the boilers of the Home, new tubes had been installed at a cost of $283.57 while a new wagon shed had been erected at a cost of $1,700.

Cost of Sending Rockets Across Atlantic Would Be Prohibitive

By HOWARD W. BLAKESLEE

New York, Dec. 8 — (AP)—A rocket that could be fired from Germany to New York would need an initial weight of 2,500 tons to carry just one ton of explosive.

To start off the ground it would have to burn about 100,000 pounds of fuel a second, and the damage in Germany from this blast of fire might be 100 times greater than the one-ton explosive could inflict here. Each such rocket would cost $10,000,000 and up.

These calculations were reported Thurs. to the aviation division of the metropolitan section, American Society of Mechanical Engineers, by Alfred Africano of Cumberland, Md. one of the leading American experimenters with rocket propulsion before the war.

The estimates for the V-3, the threatened transatlantic bomb, are based on performance of the V-1 and of the V-2, plus the engineering principles of known driving power to be obtained from rocket jets.

Such estimates before the V-1, London's buzz-bomb, was captured and examined, agreed closely with the final verified facts. Not so much is known about the V-2, the "flying telegraph pole" bomb, but again the calculations agree with what little is known.

The 2,500-ton V-3 which Africano calculates would have to be built to span 3,000 miles, would not cross all in one piece but would be the three-step rocket proposed originally by the Belgian, Dr. Andre Bing.

This rocket is made in four parts, three of them being fuel carriers and the fourth a warhead. After part one has used its fuel, it drops off. Parts two and three successively do the same thing. Finally there is left only the warhead, travelling under its own momentum, like an artillery shell.

If the three steps of acceleration by rocket fuel have given the warhead enough velocity during its flight, it would shoot across most of the Atlantic. The velocity required would be almost five miles a second.

This speed, Africano said, is all a body would need to keep flying in a circular path around the earth as a satellite at the 300-mile altitude level.

Caught in V-Bomb Attack 'CP' Writer Tells How 'Marvellous' Are Britons in Time of Danger

Editor's Note: Frank Lowe of the Canadian Press London Bureau got caught in a recent V-bomb attack on Southern England. Lowe, 25-year-old native of Truro, N.S., describes what happened in the following dispatch.

By FRANK LOWE
Canadian Press Staff Writer

Somewhere in Southern England, Dec. 7 — (CP Cable)—This is just another V-bomb story.

It started at the hour the club barmaid was serving the last drinks to a black market operator and his flashy, blond girl friend. In the hall, a Canadian officer, a reporter and two girls were donning their coats when the officer, who had been twice wounded in battle, nodded in the direction of the cosy club room and commented:

"They don't know there is a war on."

Then the V-bomb fell.

There's no sense trying to describe how the club became a nightmare of flying, knife-sharp glass.

In the moment of hushed silence that followed, the barmaid asked coolly: "Anybody hurt?"

The Canadian officer, the two girls and the reporter felt themselves uncertainly, and answered with a shaky "no."

Others hadn't been so lucky. The waiter was sitting in a chair, holding his head and moaning. Between gasps, he attempted to apologize to the club owner for dripping blood on to a chair.

Within a matter of minutes wounded were being brought in from the street where they had been hit by glass and debris. Soon every chair and every settee had its quota of blood stains.

The black market operator set to work swabbing out cuts. The club owner, who usually sells liquor only at exorbitant prices, poured out drinks and more drinks for the injured.

His blond companion used her coupon-costly slip to improvise bandages so the wounded could be moved to a first-aid post.

When the injured had been moved we started for home. At the end of the block one of those small English automobile had been blown into a store window. The three occupants were still in the car — dead.

We crunched through shattered glass, through black streets now edged with dancing flames.

"By God," said the officer, "those people were marvellous, weren't they?"

Forgotten was his remark 35 minutes before about not knowing there is a war on.

Believe Suicide Flier Was in Full Control of Plane

Vancouver, Dec. 8 —(CP)— R.C.A.F. officers at Western Air Command said in interviews they believe the R.C.A.F. student pilot, killed yesterday in the crash of a big twin-engined bomber on Tilbury Island in the Fraser River after a mad flight over Boundary Bay air base here, was in complete control of the ship when it made its final plunge.

The airman, identified only as a sergeant pilot, who had previously been demoted at an Eastern station for some irregularity, dived on the air station, near-by villages, and swooped over Vancouver itself, for nearly five hours before taking the plane into its final, screaming dive. Veterans of air battles over Europe who watched said they had never seen such an exhibition of flying.

It was estimated the pilot flew long enough from the time he took off early in the morning until the crash to fly from Vancouver to Winnipeg. But the motivation for his behavior remained a mystery.

He spent the previous night sitting in barracks talking with roommates, observers said. He appeared normal and gave no hint of his intentions.

An official investigation now is under way and his name will be released following notification of next-of-kin.

6,000 German Civilians Occupy Camp Intended for Hollanders

By DOUGLAS AMARON

Somewhere in Holland, Dec. 8—(CP)—Six thousand German civilians, evacuated from the battle zone north of Aachen, are being held in a detention camp in Southwestern Holland.

Long huts, capable of housing more than 400 persons each and once used by the Germans as a concentration camp, are being used to shelter the civilians, most of them farming folk either too old or too young to have taken an active part in the war.

The camp is administered by civil affairs and has some Canadian officers on its taff. It will be the Germans' home until military authorities decide it is feasible to send the civilians back to their farms.

In operation only a few weeks, the camp makes no attempt to cater to the enemy. It is administered on strict military lines and no fraternization is allowed. Even the commandant, a British lieutenant-colonel speaks to the Germans only when giving orders.

Quislings Held, Too

The civilians are treated as internees, but without the privilege of writing or receiving letters. Meal hours and a 9:30 p.m. lights out are the only routine so far established and the Germans are free to mingle among themselves and fill their spare time within the enclosure as they will.

There were 2,500 suspected Netherlands Quislings in the camp when I visited it and the number has grown since. They are kept separate from the Germans and see them only at mealtime when they draw food from opposite ends of a spacious cookhouse.

The camp commandant would not let me speak to any eGrmans for that is considered fraternizing, but from what saw of them in their huts, in the big courtyard where they walk and in the cookhouse, they were content with their lot.

A dozen blonde, buxom German girls, some wearing daintily embroidered national skirts, were preparing a meal, for the civilians do all their own work. Their rations were of the same callory content, or slightly less as that of Netherlands civilians and consisted of a mixture of British and captured German food.

"We want it emphasized," the commandant said, "that these people are not being fed better than the Dutch, who feel bitter enough as it is that German civilians are better nourished than the Dutch themselves."

Women over 60 and children receive a daily issue of milk, but otherwise everyone gets the same food. Bully beef, biscuits, dehydrated apples and a tinned German vegetable resembling a turnip were some of the dishes I saw.

Children Have Toys

When they arrive at the camp, the civilians are registered, disinfected and medically examined. If blankets are needed they receive two, but most of the Germans brought a plentiful stock of personal belongings—far more than the 60 pounds a British officer is allowed to carry in the field.

I saw women wheeling babies in prams which would delight British mothers. Most of the children had toys of some description and the civilians' clothes looked much better and warmer than those of the clog-shod Quislings.

The commandant said the Germans were well disciplined and as we walked about the camp most of them doffed their caps to the colonel and received a salute in return. There have been no complaints about treatment, quarters or food.

Sixteen priests were among the internees and one of the oldest of them was chosen camp leader and spokesman.

DETROIT WINGS EASILY DEFEAT N. Y. RANGERS

Patrick and Boucher Would Like to Have Bryan Hextall Back

(By The Canadian Press.)

It would be interesting to know how much Lester Patrick and Frank Boucher would give to have Bryan Hextall back with their New York Rangers this year.

It was just another near miss for the dogged but ineffectual blueshirts last night as they lost a second bid for their third victory of the season by bowing 3-2 to Detroit's powerful Red Wings at Madison Square Garden.

The defeat marked the second successive one-goal reverse and the third in eight losses for the New Yorkers, who despite their unimpressive record are probably a 50 per cent improvement over the sorry crew which won only six of 50 games last year.

In many cases this season, the difference between victory and defeat might have been provided by the hard-skating Hextall, a perennial 20-goal man in his N.H.L. career. The Grenfell, Sask., native was prevented by Selective Service regulations from leaving his farm to give the Rangers a hand this fall.

Red Wings won in conventional fashion last night, scoring two quick goals early in the second and then throwing up a tight defence to make it easy for young Harry Lumley in his debut in the Detroit net.

Carl Liscombe and Mud Bruneteau fired the decisive shots after Red Wings' Murray Armstrong and Rangers' venerable Ott Heller had established a 1-1 deadlock with first-period goals.

Hockey Results

(By The Canadian Press.)

Standings of scoring leaders were unchanged as Detroit won a 3-2 victory last night over New York Rangers in the only scheduled game in the National Hockey League. Syd Howe of Red Wings, the only leader playing, was held scoreless.

CASUAL COMMENT by K.J.C.

This yarn is by Walter Winchell the famous American columnist:

American airmen who have been bombing Germany are a little tired of the sameness of German communiques. They've cooked up this one for Dr. Goebbels: "A huge swarm of American and British bombers, intent on their usual mission of bombing hospitals and churches in the Reich, was intercepted and completely destroyed today by a small number of German fighter planes. Springing to the defence of helpless civilians, the Luftwaffe pilots shot down more than 300 of the giant attacking planes, and left the remaining fifty so badly injured that they were unable to return to their bases.

"None of our gallant German planes or pilots was injured.

"One of our cities is missing."

The Handwriting.

All around us sports-minded men are preparing for the post-war program when there will be the greatest revival in competitive team games ever attempted by man. Apparently other centres and communities are not going to let the grass grow under their feet, but on the contrary have started extensive program to include hockey, baseball and other such sports. Kingston, Peterboro, Welland, Hamilton and towns in the Ottawa Valley are preparing new artificial ice arena projects as well as mammoth athletic fields for the use of the growing children, as well as team games.

Recently news dispatches from the Ottawa Valley sector announced a six team senior hockey league would operate in that district next winter regardless as to the wealth of playing material. Smiths Falls is going so far as to enter two senior puck teams in the loop, along with single entries from Perth, Carleton Place, Prescott and even the village of Westport. Here we find small communities willing to step forward in the field of hockey sponsorship even in the face of difficult transportation and man-power conditions. The same period of reconstruction has to be carried out in Belleville so why procrastinate to such a degree we will eventually find ourselves the forgotten city?

Our Opportunity.

With new artificial ice rinks at Peterboro and Kingston these two cities will naturally demand senior O.H.A. puck classifications as soon as the green light is given on the matter of lifting gasoline rationing. However, it is unlikely Belleville would be considered unless an artificial ice arena is available here in the Quinte City.

Here is where the city council could assume a little of this much-talked-of post-war planning by purchasing the Hume Arena and with the expenditure of a few thousand dollars divert it into a civic auditorium, similar to that being proposed in other cities throughout the province. By including an artificial ice plant and central heating equipment a civic auditorium of suitable size could be assured where public meetings, public concerts and such like could be held for the benefit of the citizens at large. The ratepayers along in Peterboro voted $75,000 for this purpose on Monday. Here we have the building already erected and centrally located and a more ideal situation could not be desired. Under civic managementship such an all-the-year-around venture just could not fail but to prove a successful civic investment. After the war the cost of artificial ice plants should be considerable lower than when the local arena was first built. If Belleville is to remain in the city class of sports something along these lines will have to be done and with so much post-war planning talk here's a No. 1 opportunity to do some civic improvement and also assure Belleville of a civic auditorium at the same time. (After all that space in the city hall is hardly the thing to call a civic hall.)

And There's More.

Going a little farther afield we hear plans are being made for an all-Canadian professional baseball league to function immediately after the war and Kingston has been named as one of the cities to be included in the league. Others suggested are Sherbrooke, Granby and Hull in Quebec and Cornwall.

Actually Knotty Lee, that colorful veteran of baseball in Ontario, is at present attending the annual meeting of the National Commission of Minor Baseball Leagues being held in Buffalo this week and no doubt will receive a franchise to organize an all-Canadian pro loop.

However, we do not feel such places as Belleville, Oshawa or Peterboro would be too much in favor of professional baseball, but the revival of a strong amateur league would doubtless be welcomed and again see goodly attendance. There is much in the line of sport for the post-war period and the cities to prepare for it now will cash in later.

Remember When.

Warren Wright's long-tailed Whirlaway was voted in the Turf and Sports Digest's annual poll as the horse of the year over Mrs. Al Sabath's $700 yearling bargain, Alsab, three years ago today. "Mister Longtail", as Whirlaway was sometimes referred to, went on to vindicate his selectors by becoming the greatest money winner in the history of American turf.

Pitcher Dies.

Oldtime baseball fans here will recall Frank "Lefty" McDonald, former Toronto pitcher of three decades ago or more who died at his Toronto home this week. In a game still talked about here Eddie Thomas brought McDonald to Belleville back in 1911 to pitch for the Park Nines in a grudge battle with old Grand Trunks at Holton's Grove, north of the present site of the Fair Grounds. McDonald put in the 1922 season as umpire in the C.O.B.L. In his hey day "Lefty" McDonald once pitched for the Toronto Maple Leafs. Oldtime ball fans in Ontario will recall his diamond feats.

Canadian Sport Snapshots

By SYD THOMAS
Canadian Press Staff Writer

Toronto, Dec. 8 — (CP)—Staunch Montreal Canadiens can derive little cheer from the slightly pessimistic prophecy of Elmer (Montreal Herald) Ferguson that the Habitants may win the title this year, but they will have a tougher time doing it . . . Canadiens are not as strong as last season, while clubs like Toronto and Detroit are stronger, and Fergie says darkly the league race "isn't the set-up it seemed at the start of the season" . . . However, that won't discourage the brave bleacherites much...

Nevermore!

From the Toronto Star's Andy Lytle comes a plaint that artistry in stickhandling and team play is a thing of the dear bygone days — slain by the new rules. The wizards of the blades and the educated stick are being eased out none too gently by the ganging scrambles that characterize the new type of hockey, until even the defencemen can look as good as the forwards when they mosey up the ice. Andy has a suspicion that the rules were changed, not to improve the game, but to disguise the gradual war-time deterioration of the national pastime.

PROVIDENCE REDS ARE MOVING UP

(By The Canadian Press.)

Providence Reds, paced by Paul Courteau, last night won a 4-2 victory over Indianapolis Capitals, Western Division leaders in the American Hockey League. Defeat of Capitals for the third successive time on Providence ice put Reds within four points of second-place Hershey Bears in the Eastern Division.

Courteau opened the scoring for Providence in the second minute of the game but Capitals tied the score four minutes later with a goal by veteran Johnny Sorrell.

Midway in the second period Courteau again put Reds ahead. In the final minute of the session Tony Bukovich drove in a tying goal and Jack Lavoie came back to put Providence one up. In the 19th minute of the third period Courteau increased their lead with his third score of the game.

MINORS TO HELP SCHOOLBOY BALL IN THEIR AREAS

Meeting Adopts Seven of Thirteen Proposed Amendments Before Members

By JOE REICHLER
(Associated Press Sport Writer)

Buffalo, N.Y., Dec. 8 (AP)—Post-war planning, with special emphasis on the encouragement of schoolboy baseball, promised to highlight today's activities as the minors wound up their 43rd annual convention, after adopting seven of 13 proposed amendments yesterday.

A report of the major-minor committee on post-war planning, formed last February at the request of the late Commissioner Kenesaw Mountain Landis, will come up for action.

The committee recommended appointment of touring talent teams to spread the diamond gospel and circulation of rule books and movies on the game's fundamentals. If this idea is agreed upon by the majors, it will be operated in conjunction with State High School Athletic Associations.

A $500 fine on clubs signing boys still eligible for high school ball was also recommended.

Among other ideas were the formation of clinics for improvement of umpiring, elimination of payment of bonuses to free agents with substitution of a payment of 10 per cent of the sales price to players assigned to a high club establishment of a promotional department with a full time director, and recodifying the playing rules.

Also coming up was a resolution of J. Kemp Bartlett, secretary of Baltimore's International League Club, that a committee be formed to meet with football owners to erase overlapping schedules of the two sports.

Most important of the amendments adopted, all of which must be concurred in by the major leagues, dealt with the draft and territorial problems.

The agreement of $10,000 for a Class AA player, an increase of only 33 1-3 per cent instead of the original 100 per cent, was felt by observers to be a conciliatory gesture to the majors.

However, passing of an amendment giving the minors the right to buy the franchise of any invading major league club clearly stated the minor league's intention to protect their territory.

President William G. Bramham was authorized to appoint a committee to confer with the Majors on drawing up a new major-minor agreement. The present pact was automatically extended to Jan. 12, 1946, by the death of Commission Landis.

Heavy Explosions Heard From Direction Of Port of Dunkerque

London, Dec. 8 (CP)—Heavy explosions emanating from the direction of Dunkerque led to the belief here that the German garrison still holding out in the French channel port is destroying installations there —possibly as a prelude to surrender.

Numerous explosions have been heard during the past four days, some so heavy as to shake buildings in Deal and other English coastal towns.

The 1st Canadian army by-passed Dunkerque in its swift advance through France to the Low Countries.

British and later Czech units of Gen. Crerar's command have since been reported containing the enemy force there.

Tony Penna, Dayton, O., Pro., took the lead with a one-stroke margin in the opening round of the $10,000 Open golf tournament at Miami, Fla., when he carded a 68, two under par. He was followed by Johnny Bulla of Atlanta and Morris Gravatt of Williamsport, Pa. both of whom registered 69's.

Dave (Sweeney) Schriner, star left winger of Toronto Maple Leafs who has been out of action with a leg injury since Nov. 18, will leave hospital today. It is not expected, however, that he will be in condition to play hockey before the end of this month.

Col. K. R. Marshall, president of the Ontario Jockey Club, told directors at the annual meeting yesterday that the additional five per cent betting tax imposed during the 1944 racing season in Ontario by the provincial government likely will be abolished after the war.

During the past season, he said, the club paid out $147,135 to owners and breeders during the two weeks of racing, compared with $112,900 in 1943, an increase of more than 30 per cent.

William Tobin, president of Chicago Black Hawks of the National Hockey League, said here yesterday his club and the Detroit Red Wings were in favor of having Mervyn (Red) Dutton continue as president of the league. He was commenting on a speech made at Boston Monday night by Art Ross, manager of the Boston Bruins, who said that Boston, New York Rangers, Chicago and Detroit wanted an American president.

Maynard Knarr, a junior baseball pitcher of Kitchener, has signed a contract to play with Hornell, N.Y., Pirates in the Pony League next season, it was announced yesterday in his home city. Knarr, who is 21, attended big-league baseball schools at Hamilton and Toronto in recent years.

Wilf Fields, defenceman of Montreal Canadiens in the N.H.L., has been acquired by the Black Hawks, it was announced at Chicago last night. He will play in a Hawk uniform for the first time Sunday night against New York Rangers.

Shortly after being re-elected to office for a five-year term, Major John L. Griffith, 64, Commissioner of Athletics for the Western Conference, died in his office at Chicago last night. He had guided the "Big Ten" of mid-west colleges for many years, and had been the organizer of the annual Drake relays at Des Moines, Ia.

New York, Dec. 8 — (AP)—Albany's Ripper Collins, who led all baseball in hitting this year with a .396 average, was named all-star manager and the eastern league's most valuable player. Owner Tom McCaffrey adds Rip "was picked for about everything except as Judge Landis' successor."

Mystery, Solved:

When the West Point cadet corps went to Baltimore for the Navy game via troop transport, a few of them borrowed uniforms from the seamen aboard ship, obtained leave long enough for a quick trip to Annapolis and there, in the guise of sailors, slipped into the campus and painted a big "A" on Tecumseh, the Navy mascot ... maybe they felt entitled to wear the sailor suits because they weren't seasick.

Although the International Baseball League is blasting pro football as "unfair competition," Chick Meehan's Trans America grid league came into being because the International delegated him to survey its member cities to see how football would go there . . . Chick reported it wouldn't be successful.

In a Rut:

Eddie Sawyer, just named manager of the Utica, N.Y., Eastern League ball club for a second term, piloted Binghamton in the same league in 1943 . . . This year he shifted to Utica and met Binghamton in the final play-offs. He lost . . . returning to Binghamton as coach of the North High football team, Eddie found the first scheduled game was against Utica. This time he won.

Horse Sense Bridge

LESSON NO. 552
By SAM GORDON
The Kibitzer

Some day, when you are dying on the vine for lack of diversion, pick up a deal like this:

NORTH
♠7 6 5 4 3
♥8 4 3 2
♦J
♣A K 6

WEST
♠A J 2
♥7 6
♦K 10 8 4
♣J 10 8 7

EAST
♠9 8
♥9
♦Q 9 7 6 5 3 2
♣9 5 3

SOUTH
♠K Q 10
♥A K Q J 10 5
♦A
♣Q 4 2

Unless the later bids are positively indecent, almost any opening bid by south will reach a slam. Almost any bid, that is, except a four heart pre-empt, which north would have a right to pass.

If south incorrectly opened with one heart, north has enough for an assist to two hearts. Having heard of three tricks in north south would then invite slam information.

If south opened with three hearts, north would respond with a bid of three no-trump to show two sure tricks. South would then invite slam information and end at a small slam in hearts.

South has most of the needs for a three heart opening. But the main reason why such a bid would not be correct is because it has a trick too much. It has enough for an opening of two hearts.

The bidding would be most correct if it went like this:

SOUTH	NORTH
2 H	3 H
4 NT	5 H
6 H	Pass

The two heart opening shows nine tricks and is forcing to game. Since north does not respond at once with two no-trump, it is a sign that a sure trick is in that hand.

Four no-trump is the ace and king asking convention. Five hearts is The Kibitzer's convention response for showing only one ace and only one king.

Knowing now there is an ace missing, south must stop at a small slam. With an opening club lead, how should south plan 12 tricks?

A plan well rated may be frustrated.

Sport Shorts From Britain

London, Dec. 8 — (CP) — Approximately 100,000 sportsmen will be exchanging visits annually under an extensive scheme of the Netherlands Sports Organization which calls for Britain and Holland to exchange sports meetings after the war. It is the largest home-and-away international post-war sports program yet devised.

The scheme will take teams of British amateur boxers, footballers, cricketers, swimmers, and others on frequent journeys to Holland for contests with Netherlands clubs. It will bring similar Holland teams to this country for return fixtures.

"Throughout the war the Dutch people, especially the young, have had Nazi propaganda pumped into them," said Al Milhado, president of the Netherland Sports Organization which was set up in London recently. "We aim to make them more British-minded than they ever have been before. Our idea is to run the events on a town-to-town basis."

The governments of Belgium and Czechoslovakia may adopt similar plans.

Already, the mayor of Hull and the mayor of Rotterdam have agreed to regular exchanges. The London borough of Willesden will exchange with Utrecht. Negotiations are proceeding for Liverpool to pair with Amsterdam, Sheffield with Eindhoven and Croydon with Arnhem.

Praise for English soccer, criticism of Scottish plans and suggested remedies for its revival were made by James Bowie, president of the Scottish Football League and vice-president of the Scottish Football Association, at a special meeting of Scottish League clubs in Glasgow.

"England is leading us in a variety of ways," he said. "English play has all the characteristics of the Scottish play we used to know."

The meeting resolved that a joint committee be appointed to consider reconstruction of the Scottish game including cup competitions and the refereeing system.

The question of football boots for the Eighth Army in Italy came up in the House of Commons when War Secretary Sir James Grigg said he was aware of a deficiency in the supply of soccer boots and that steps have been taken to remedy the situation.

Sir James said that a quantity of sports goods recently went forward to the Eighth Army. His reply came after Henderson Stewart, Scottish Liberal, claimed there was dissatisfaction in the famed Eighth at lack of adequate welfare arrangements for the troops when they were out of the line.

Word comes from India that among new R.C.A.F. arrivals there was WO. Tommy Henderson, who played rugby with Hamilton Tigers both before and after the First Great War. He is a squadron disciplinarian . . . James McDowell, 48, Scottish professional golf champion in 1935, died at Ayr . . . The Football Association has accepted an offer from the British community in Argentina to supply playing kit to clubs which have visited there.

Valleyfield Braves Suffer First Loss In Eight Starts

Shawinigan Falls, Que., Dec. 8—(CP) — Valleyfield Braves suffered their first defeat in eight starts when they came up against the Shawinigan Falls Cataracts last night with the Cataracts walking off with a 3-0 interprovincial hockey league victory. Valleyfield's hold on first place was not shaken, but the Cataracts leaped into a second-place tie with Lachine Rapids.

Larry Laframboise started the scoring in the first period breaking away from a Valleyfield rush while Ossie Carnegie was serving a penalty. Three minutes later, Laframboise and Lajoie combined to make the play that put Bisson in a scoring position, sending the Cataracts ahead 2-0. In the second period Lupien snatched a smart pass from Mel Williamson and beat Lascelles with a near shot.

A fight developed in the third period and Bisson, Cadieux and Gibbons drew majors. Thiffault, the Shawinigan goaler, traded blows with Gibbons and a minor penalty shot was awarded to Valleyfield, but Leo Brennan missed the shot.

Little Benny's Note Book

We were eating supper, being liver and onions in pop's honor, and ma said to pop, Well, William, the proof of the pudding is in the eating, or I suppose it would be more exact to say in the not eating.

If you elaborate on the idea a little more I'm sure I'll catch up to you, pop said, and ma said, What I mean is, I'm the one who's been doing the dieting for this whole family, and the result is, your waistline is telling the natural tail, even though you persist in loudly denying it and claiming that it's just a jellis figment of other people's imagination.

My waistline is as stationerry as the north pole, pop said, and ma said, Oh yes? Well then maybe you can kindly explain why you've been unable to wear your brown suit for the passed few weeks, or did you think that I was in blissful ignorance of the fact that you weren't able to button the lower end of the vest any longer?

Oh, that, pop said. That was a peculiar thing. I've been meaning to mention that. I'll admit that was something that had me baffled for quite a while. I knew I wasn't getting any stouter, so I ruled out that possibility from the very start. I thought the problem out from every possible angle, and at last the solution dawned on me. It seemed rediculously simple after I'd solved it, like most difficult problems. My dear, that suit has grown smaller, pop said, and ma said, William Potts that suit hasn't been to the cleaners and it hasn't been out in the rain and it hasn't been out of your closet.

That's what makes the explanation seem even more than simple, it seems downright crazy, pop said, and ma said, Oh, eat your dinner, for all I care you can eat a big second helping.

Which he did.

AN APPLE FOR EVE

CHAPTER 9

"Ain't nothin' the matter with him but tryin' to get well too fast," old Leroy Ingersoll said unexpectedly. Marge worked at the City Hall; Loveday gathered that she had a very good job and many admirers. It surprised her a little, for Marge was dumpling-faced like the rest of the Ingersoll women, wore strong glasses, and was an admitted twenty-seven. She was enjoying her vacation now; she had arranged to have it at the time of Alma's wedding.

Larry slept all afternoon, and Loveday had a bath and planned a letter to Aunt Laura. When he awakened she was reading in his room; he was burning with fever; they could talk but little. But he liked to see her there.

When he dropped off into the shallow sleep again she and Marge walked downtown for some small purchases. It was cooler now, and the streets had come to life.

Loveday bought stamps and writing paper at the "Dime" and a bottle of ink. Marge, greeting friends here and there, introduced her companion proudly as Larry's girl; she bought herself a thin silk frock for three dollars and eleven cents and Loveday one of white lawn with red and blue rick-rack outlining the ruffles of the skirt. Loveday was pleased and surprised and somewhat touched.

"You didn't have to do that, Marge," she said.

"One eighty-five plus tax." Marge laughed it off. "You'll love it. Alma had it in her trousseau; it's terribly pretty on."

They had to stop for bread in the odorous bakery; in the delicatessen store they bought pickles and frankfurters, walking the hot eight blocks home loaded with small parcels.

Loveday, burdened, weary after the long day that had started in the warm dawn in Hollywood, felt as she walked beside Marge her first comfortable emotion in many hours. She was far away from anyone who could hurt her; she was safely hidden among these humble home-going folk, with their dragging babies and bakery bundles, with the long shadows of sunset falling from the sidewalk trees across the broken coasters and small iron tricycles in the dooryards, and the porch steps already occupied by old folk who would sit in the cool until the night was half gone and the moon was up.

Betty-Lou was ecstatic in greeting her. Betty-Lou worked for the Western Union, sometimes in the afternoons, sometimes at night. She was full of gossip, and Loveday found it all interesting, found in it all an anodyne for thought.

"And what do you know about old Alma telephoning me? Called me at the office and said she had to send a straight wire," Betty-Lou said "and she started right off, 'Mr. and Mrs. Leroy Ingersoll and family, kindest greetings from Mr. and Mrs. Hubert Bates.' "

"For heaven's sakes, where are they?" Mrs. Ingersoll demanded. Betty-Lou said with a giggle that the bride had not revealed that point.

Everyone had brought something home for supper tonight; the presence of a guest had stimulated a sense of hospitality. Mrs. Ingersoll, who had gone downtown to pick up Betty-Lou, contributed a dozen ears of corn and some peaches; Betty-Lou had gone to the Coin de Lyons for pastries; the man of the house had brought home two boxes of strawberries. They did not cook all these things but something of each one was put upon the table, which, with the inevitable iced tea and several remnants of other meals, presented an overloaded appearance.

Larry was to have cold soup, jelly and toast, and fruit sauce; Loveday and Betty-Lou carried it out to him at seven. Later the doctor came in with Marge and Larry's mother. In fact, the whole family gathered in the small white-washed room and looked anxiously from the patient to the physician.

"We have a pretty sick boy here," Dr. Ketcham presently said. "I think the wisest thing to do is get him into the hospital."

Larry put up a hoarse mumbled protest at this, and the other members of the family looked at each other with scared faces. How had this come about? He had been so much better! He had been joking at the wedding, had seemed all but completely well.

Dr. Ketcham would telephone at once for the ambulance, have a nurse waiting for him at the hospital. An ambulance and a nurse! The frightened faces looked even more shocked. Larry's mother waylaid the doctor in the yard for the usual whispered question.

A fringe of respectful sympathizers gathered on the sidewalk before the Ingersoll house when the ambulance came for Larry. He was bundled in a pale blue blanket with faded blue stripes; he looked long and thin, strapped to the stretcher. He laughed hoarsely as he recognized friends; the doctor told his family unalarmedly that sure they could see him when he was comfortable in bed, but not to stay too long.

"Oh no, only a moment!" his mother said fervently.

It gave them all a sense of tension and danger. Nothing seemed the same in the house with Larry gone, even though, during his long illness, he had not, strictly speaking, been in the house at all.

"Come on, we'll do the dishes," Loveday said, "and then it'll be time to go round and say good night to him."

"You're just one wonderful girl—" Larry's mother said, gratefully and touched.

Larry was drowsy when Loveday peeped in at him in his narrow hospital room his doctor had seen him; a nice middle-aged nurse was in charge and said that he would have a comfortable night. Betty-Lou joined two girl friends downtown and wandered away with them under the bright lights of Main Street, and a young man came to see Marge. Loveday sat on the front steps with the older Ingersolls, watching the stream of tired men and wilted women and eager small children as it moved along the sidewalk, hearing the trains whistle as they rushed through town, and seeing the lights of Main Street flare up and down.

And now for the first time she began to feel bitterly homesick and alone, exiled, alien.

The days began to go by, and she adapted herself to life in the Bartlett Street cottage. What had been strange or objectionable in the Ingersolls' way of doing things gradually became custom and unnoticed and much of it she enjoyed, partly because she was young and Larry's sisters were young, and largely because they lived with but one object in view, and that object was to extract pleasure from their lives.

The past was a dream that was over. Loveday tried not even to think of it. Larry's convalescence went on more quickly in the hospital; he was presently able to lie on the shady upstairs solarium for hours, dozing in a steamer chair, and with the first burning weeks of August his mother, Loveday, and Betty-Lou took him for two weeks to a little cabin near the ocean where cool fogs and salt-sweet breezes completed the cure.

She was caught now; the jaws of the trap had closed. She and Larry were to be married as soon as they returned to Bakersfield. Larry had the promise of a job at a factory on the outskirts of town, and they planned to omit a honeymoon—Larry had had holiday enough!—and go straight to one of the cottages in the neighborhood.

"We don't have to worry about silver and linen and things like that," Loveday said. "I could get all those things from Indian Hill."

But she did not want to go to Indian Hill. Without analyzing her feeling, she shrank away from that thought. It was home no longer.

Letters had been exchanged between her and Aunt Laura. She had written first, reporting that Larry had had a relapse and had been very ill but was convalescent and that she was staying with his family until their "plans were a little clearer. Mrs. St. George had returned an affectionate missive to tell her that Nini was getting ready to go back to school in Bronxville; Fanny was writing happy letters from Ottawa, and "the boys" well and busy. The boys were, of course, Marc and Rodney; the letter did not mention Chris or Merle. Uncle Warren had had a touch of flu, just enough to make it pleasant to have him at home for a week being spoiled, and Aunt Laura missed her "private secretary."

"We feel that the handsome Larry is going to steal you from us and want to know all your plans," she wrote. "I can imagine what a difference your visit has made to him, but it was nice having your mother's daughter here with us, too, and you must always remember that what affects you is very important to us."

Uncle Warren also wrote, a friendly, fatherly letter, giving Loveday an accounting of her mother's affairs at last in order. There would be a cash balance of some hundreds, and with Loveday's consent he would continue to send her a fifty-dollar allowance check every month until it was exhausted. There was also Friends Haven, free of encumbrance, with the farmer, Bettancourt, paying a rent for the farm that just covered taxes and insurance, so that it need be no burden upon her until a buyer could be found. Warren St. George had no doubt, he wrote, that some day Loveday could make a more advantageous arrangement than this, but at the moment it seemed the best solution. Wing Foo and Annie Lum were living in the kitchen quarters and acting as guardians of the place; the man sawed wood and looked after the garden; the woman was raising chickens and squabs for the market. George had gone down there for a Everything, when Warren St. last look about, had seemed in fairly good order. Her mother's silver and some small personal possessions had been placed in a safe-deposit box; for the rest, the house stood just as it had been left, and he was sending Loveday the keys. She must let them know how things went with her and be sure to call upon them if ever they could be of the slightest use.

In both letters she read, with a sinking heart, her dismissal from their circle. Loveday could not leave it like that; it broke her heart. She was going to marry Larry, of course. That was settled. But Aunt Laura and Fanny and all of them must know that she still loved them more than anything else in the world, that she was still the honest, grateful girl to whom they had been so kind.

One evening, when everyone else was out and Larry was asleep, she quite suddenly put in a long-distance call to the St. George house in San Francisco. It didn't matter who answered; Rod or Nini, Aunt Laura or Uncle Warren, it would be contact again. They would know that she remembered them; something important must be said, something changed.

It was Warren St. George's voice, vehement and sudden. Hello, was that Cincinnati? Was that Major Kennedy?

"Oh," he said more mildly when she had explained, over a sinking heart, who she was. "Oh, Loveday. Well, glad to hear your voice again, my dear. How are things down your way? . . I had just put in a call to Cincinnati . . . No, no, no, it can wait. . . I'm alone in the house; Rod's away, and Nini and Laura-your aunt Laura, are in Canada. Your aunt Laura hadn't been so well—she's better-she speaks of you very often. She was a little worried, I think-thought you ought to be up here for a bit before there was any talk of your marrying-might have it from this house, eh? . . It was something of that sort. But she had this little setback, not serious, but we bundled her off rather suddenly to the Mayos' . We feel in a way that you're one of our girls, you know-don't want you to be in too much of a hurry, eh?"

"Larry has been so ill, Uncle Warren, we feel that we couldn't go in for anything like a formal wedding," Loveday began, fighting tears. "Oh, do go on talking to me!" she begged in her heart. "Do go on telling me about them; do say that I'm still one of your girls! It's so good to hear it; I've missed it so! Say that I have to come up and talk to you and maybe go to Canada to see them all when you do!"

"You're pretty sure of yourself, Loveday?" the kindly fatherly voice was saying. "We can't have your mother's girl making any mistake. . . . I'd like to have seen you, somewhere in here, but I've been working like an Indian trying to get away to join them all in Canada. . Your aunt Laura and I will stay there a week or two. Nini will go on to New York, and we will join her there. I've not had a holiday for some time, and I'm just wondering if I'm too tired to enjoy it."

She must put herself into his place, not break her heart wishing he could put himself in hers. Loveday strengthened her voice heroically.

"You'll feel wonderful once you're on the train, Uncle Warren. Just let everything slide and do nothing but loaf!"

"Well," his voice said on a pleased laugh, "that's exactly what Marc's been telling me, and believe me, I mean to follow orders!"

What could she say then but a forlorn "I'll write Aunt Martha everything. And tell them I wish they were all here, won't you? You see, I'd promised to marry Larry even before Mother died," she was going to add. But the futility of such remarks now smote her suddenly, and as Betty-Lou had just come in, warm and breathless, to fling herself into a chair and sit interestedly watching Loveday and the telephone, there was no opportunity for more confidences. "My love to all of them," Loveday ended the conversation. "Tell Fanny—tell somebody to write!"

She was crying in her heart as she hung up the receiver, but Betty-Lou saw nothing amiss, and all thoughts of the old days were swept away on the tide of wedding plans, so much nearer and more pressing.

The entire Ingersoll circle of uncles, cousins, aunts liked Loveday, and it was considered unusual and important that Loveday had a guardian and an allowance like a girl in a story or radio serial. Further romance was added to the situation by the circumstances of Larry's serious illness, Loveday's long-ago promise that had been so nobly kept, and the convalescence that was so shortly to lead to marriage.

HURLED FROM BEDS

Toronto, Dec. 8 — (CP) — Police today said it was a "miracle" no one was injured when illuminating gas seeping through an unused uncapped pipe caused a terrific explosion in a row of attached houses on Major Street here resulting in about $2,000 damage. Three of the houses were wrecked and 16 persons were hurled from their beds.

Graydon Charges Collaboration Between Parties

By JACK WILLIAMS
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Ottawa, Dec. 8 (CP)—Charges by Gordon Graydon, Progressive Conservative House Leader, of collaboration between the C.C.F. party and the Liberals and denials by members of those groups brought a spirited debate in the last hours of the special Commons sitting on overseas reinforcements.

The subject came up after Prime Minister Mackenzie King had accepted a C.C.F. amendment to his confidence motion which called for support of the government in the war effort.

Mr. Graydon said the amendment went far toward showing the relative positions of the government party and the C.C.F.

"I have seen for some considerable time a mutual erasing of demarcations and delineations between the government and the C.C.F. in their policies and movements," said Mr. Graydon.

Contends Justification.

"It may seem strange to some that I should make the charge, that the government party and the C.C.F. party have finally got under the same pair of sheets in the same bed at the same time. It seems to me there is considerable justification for that contention."

Mr. Graydon said M. J. Coldwell, C.C.F. leader, on his return from overseas in October had given the impression all was well with reinforcements and in doing this was "trying to put a little power behind the government wheel again."

The amendment to the government's motion was "the crowning demonstration" of the relationship between the parties.

"Here is the great party to my left (the C.C.F.) trying to oppose the government by moving an amendment, and the Prime Minister holds out his arms and catches the ball and says 'it is mine too'," Mr. Graydon said.

"No wonder we find it more and more difficult to see the difference between these two parties".

Knowles Replies.

Stanley Knowles (CCF—Winnipeg North Centre) spoke for his party in reply to Mr. Graydon.

"I take second place to none, not even the leader of the opposition (Mr. Graydon) in my thorough distaste of the policies of the Liberal government", he said. "I take second place to none in my determination to do everything I can to defeat them at the next election. I am sick and tired of the myth that there is only one man in this country who can be the Prime Minister of Canada".

Mr. Graydon need have no fears about a coalition between the C.C.F. and Liberal parties, but such a policy did not deflect the C.C.F. from a determination to do everything possible to avoid continually arousing the country and inflaming sectional interests and prejudices.

King Answers Charges.

Mr. King, who spoke in closing the debate reprimanded Mr. Graydon for a speech which had to do "almost exclusively with matters of party politics".

"He sought to have this House believe that there was some sort of agreement or understanding between the C.C.F. Party and the Liberal party whereby we are going to work together to defeat the Tory party", said the Prime Minister.

"The Tory party is defeated beyond all shadow of a doubt. We are not concerning ourselves about the Tory party nor are the people of this country, but we are concerned about winning the war".

Mr. King said he had made it clear in introducing the motion that he was not seeking support of the government's policies generally and Mr. Coldwell had made it clear that he did not support all of the government's policies".

No Colored or Small Cheese Expected On Domestic Market

Toronto, Dec. 8 — (CP) — S. L. Joss of Belleville, secretary of the Ontario Cheese Producers' Association, said in an interview here yesterday that the rescinding of orders restricting the manufacture of cheddar cheese in Ontario and Quebec won't bring small or colored cheese to the domestic market because of a Prices Board regulation governing prices.

The rescinding order was announced in Ottawa on Thursday.

"It does not mean a thing so far as making small or colored cheese is concerned," said Mr. Joss. "Under the Prices Board ceiling regulations no premium can be obtained, so production will continue as at present."

Fighting Continues On Reduced Scale

Athens, Dec. 8 —(AP)— Fighting continued on a much reduced scale in Athens today as Greek Leftist resistance faded before British patrols spreading out from the centre of the city.

Snipers were reported giving considerable trouble in some residential quarters, however, and occasional bullets still whipped over the former royal palace in Constitution Square, where Greek civil police were holding rooftop positions.

Nearly 1,000 members of the E.L.A.S. armed militia of the E.A.M. (National Liberation Front) had surrendered up to this morning to British forces.

The Paris radio reported without confirmation that Leftist forces were in control of the Greek provinces of Thrace and Macedonia.

December 8th, 1869 . . . Timothy Eaton, young new Canadian from the North of Ireland opens dry goods shop at south-west corner of Yonge and Queen Streets, Toronto. Insignificant little place. Nothing unusual about stock of velvets, dress materials, jackets, bonnets. No window dressing. But before the day's out, Toronto knows something unique's been started. ONE PRICE ONLY . . . PRICES IN PLAIN FIGURES . . . GOODS SATISFACTORY OR MONEY REFUNDED—it's dream-stuff to these Mid-Victorian shoppers in their tight gloves and many petticoats. They're accustomed to having to put up with an unsatisfactory purchase. Accustomed to prices in code and the devious practice of "dickering." Accustomed to the shock of quarterly bills after three months of blind shopping. Timothy Eaton's bid for business has all the dramatic elements of surprise, daring and fine human relationships. Here's a merchant who puts himself on the side of the customer . . . it's the passing from old to modern times in Toronto store-keeping.

- Timothy Eaton understood people. It was his happy destiny to serve succeeding multitudes. He lived to see his small dry goods business spread out and interwoven with all the primary human interests of food, clothing, home-making, recreation, employment and industry. He saw others adopt his institution of shorter hours and weekly half-holiday for his store workers. He was called the father of the Early Closing Movement . . . Eaton presidents who've followed after him have held fast to his business and humanitarian principles.

December 8th, 1944 . . . Canada and EATON'S have grown up together. For a department store comes very close to the community. Across the Dominion, from the Atlantic to the Pacific, are Eaton centres of supply and service. We record proudly that of the 32,000 men and women employed in these Stores, Factories, Mail Order and Distributing Warehouses, 5170 have served or are still serving in the Navy, Army and Air Force.

- Seventy-five years of serving the public in one of the most favoured lands on the face of the globe! Serving through peace and wars, through prosperity and depressions. EATON'S greets the war-scarred future with a sense of high opportunity and mighty responsibility.

AMERICAN FORCES PRESS ATTACK IN THE SAAR

2nd Ukraine Army Through to Danube North of the City

Culmination of Three-Day Drive by Russian Tanks

London, Dec. 9 (C.P.-Reuters) — The Germans have lost the town of Vacs, 15 miles northeast of Budapest, "after hard fighting," the German Trans-ocean agency reported today.

Asserting the Russians had thrown in fresh reinforcements in the battle for Budapest, Trans-ocean said German lines "had to be taken back several miles east of the capital."

"From their penetration north of Budapest," the news agency said, "the Soviets increased their pressure southwards of Budapest, at the same time attacking toward the north."

The broadcast said the Russians were not attempting to cross the Danube at Vac, but had turned south.

Sealed Off From North

Previously Berlin had announced that the Russians slashing westward from captured Halvan had captured the railroad town of Aszod, 15 miles northeast of Budapest, and were threatening Vacs.

Capture of Vacs would seal off Budapest from the north. The town stands on the big bend of the Danube where the river turns west toward Vienna.

The hard-driving Russian armies were closing in on Budapest like a vice amid Moscow reports told of wholesale defections by Hungarians from the defending forces.

The city already was under heavy pressure from Russian forces on the west bank of the Danube less than 13 miles south of the city.

Berlin also said units of the 2nd and 3rd Ukraine armies had linked up on the west bank of the Danube at Ercsi, 13 miles south of Budapest, following a crossing by Malinovsky's troops from Csepel, the narrow island that splits the Danube for thirty miles south of the capital.

Hungarians Giving Up.

A supplement communique stressed that Hungarian units fighting with the Nazi defenders of Budapest and Western Hungary were giving up in great numbers in the face of a situation their commanders acknowledged was "hopeless".

A midnight Soviet bulletin said an entire Hungarian infantry regiment comprising 29 officers and 1,300 men surrendered as a unit on the Danube front. The bulletin said 1,500 Germans and Hungarians were killed yesterday on the front west of the Danube.

In that area Moscow said Tolbukhin's forces smashed ahead 11 miles and captured the rail station of Kisceri and Csosz village, nine miles south of Szekesfehervar, great road and rail junction between Budapest and the northern end of Lake Balaton.

Soviet forces were poised all along the eastern and southern shores of the lake, while in the corridor between lower Balaton and the Yugoslavian border, 3rd Army units advanced closest to the Austrian frontier. Moscow said 30 localities were captured against heavy German counter-attacks in the area, and officially placed the Red Army within 41 miles of the Austrian border and less than 110 miles from Vienna.

Unofficial front dispatches had reported Russian armored vanguards fanning out in this sector to within 35 miles of the border.

HEAVY FORCES LEFTISTS GROUP NORTH OF ATHENS

Twenty Per Cent of City Has Been Cleared of E.L.A.S. Detachments

By STEPHEN BARBER
(AP Staff Writer)

Athens, Dec. 9 — (AP) — Twenty per cent of Athens has been cleared of E.L.A.S. detachments, British spokesmen said today, but heavy new concentrations of the Leftist militia were reported north of the capital after a march from the provinces.

The E.L.A.S. within the city were reported to consist of about 250 "death or glory" members of inner Communist cells. There are about 25 of these cells, each with its own headquarters, scattered over the capital and suburbs.

These die-hards were still sniping in the unclosed sections of the city, often at extreme range.

A force estimated at between 800 and 1,200 men was said to be besieging a Greek mountain brigade stationed in a barracks to the northeast. Heavy sniping fire was reported.

The 2nd and 13th E.L.A.S. Divisions drew up last night to the village of Hasdis, northwest of the capital on the road between the port of Piraeus and Elevsis. A British ambulance driver was killed yesterday on the Athens-Piraeus road and his vehicle captured.

One E.L.A.S. battalion is known to be equipped with 75-mm. guns. During yesterday's fighting the Leftist forces employed mortars against British tanks.

(The Cairo radio said last night word had been received from Athens that a member of the Leftist E.A.M. had met a Greek government representative to discuss cessation of fighting.)

On the island of Crete, where a German garrison remains, the two major guerilla forces—the E.L.A.S. and the E.O.K. — are reported to have agreed on common measures to avoid civil war. Cretan Nationalists make up the E.O.K.

In Athens, the residence of Princess Helen of Greece — the aunt of King George — was attacked and damaged yesterday by a small E.L.A.S. detachment.

FROM ARMY — TO BREWERY

London — (CP) — Brewers are paying soldiers on leave up to four dollars a day, plus four pints of beer, to wash and fill casks and pack and label bottles. The manpower shortage has been blamed for Britain's beer shortage and this is one way brewers are trying to overcome it.

British Press Agrees Churchill Made Good Speech But Anxiety Not Relieved

By JOHN A. PARRIS, JR., AP STAFF WRITER

London, Dec. 9 —(AP)— Sections of the British press, agreeing that Britain barely had escaped being plunged into political crisis, today charged that Prime Minister Churchill's speech on Greece did nothing to relieve public anxiety about the lack of a unified political strategy among the Allies.

The Times of London maintained that the still-troubled situation "supplies good reason" for the earliest practicable meeting of the Big Three.

Most of the press, with the conspicuous exception of the Daily Worker, agreed that Mr. Churchill made "a good speech" but they found nothing in it to give hope for an early solution of the Greek crisis.

The Daily Herald stated "the fact still remains that he (Mr. Churchill) is apt, by his utterances, to create the impression that he is biased in favor of regimes of the right."

The News Chronicle asserted Mr. Churchill's speech did nothing to show he "fully appreciates the part played, in the fight against Nazism, by the resistance forces in Europe," and contended there was a growing belief that Britain was "not whole-heartedly behind the democratic forces stirring in Europe."

The Daily Mail, asserting the debate had done "a great deal of good," said, nevertheless, it would never have been necessary "if our foreign policy had not been conducted during the past few years, and more especially in the last few months, in a quite unnecessary fog of secrecy."

The Times asserted the debate should have been "the means of extricating British policy from a disastrous predicament in which .. British forces have become involved."

"Britain," The Times said, "cannot afford to be committed to one side of a civil war, possibly to the reconquest of the country, and thereafter to the indefinite maintenance of unstable equilibrium at the expense not merely of Communists but of some of the most progressive democratic elements in Greek life."

In a front-page editorial under the caption, "a disgraceful speech," the Communist Daily Worker bitterly attacked Mr. Churchill's speech as "provocative, reckless and irresponsible."

It charged Britain was "committed to the conquest of Greece" and "to the military subjugation of one of the United Nations."

Replying to criticism of British foreign policy abroad, The Weekly Economist today said:

"Russian criticism or intervention do not come well from the creators of the Lublin Committee, and the American assumption of lofty moral superiority .. sits equally badly on the sponsors of Darlan."

Nazi Defence Post, Thorn in Side Of Canadians, Eliminated by Patrol

By DOUGLAS AMARON
(CP War Correspondent)

With the 1st Canadian Army in Holland, Dec. 9 —(CP Cable)— A small Canadian infantry force Thursday night beat up a German defence post east of the Nijmegen salient, killing an estimated 27 Germans, capturing one and wounding between 35 and 50.

The raid, carried out by a company from an Eastern Canada Highland battalion, took the infantrymen about half a mile into No Man's Land and was supported by field artillery, mortars and machine-guns.

Canadian casualties were considerably fewer than the German.

Maj. Ed. Nockname Hudson of Moose Jaw, Sask., led the attack which was the first real punch the Canadians have thrown at the Germans since the latter moved into this sector in mid-November.

The defence post, consisting of houses and fortified trenches, has been a thorn in the Canadians' side and the results of the raid were described as highly satisfactory.

Showdown Brews In Labor Party

By JAMES F. KING
(AP Staff Writer)

London, Dec. 9 —(AP)— A showdown brewed today in the minority Labor party as an aftermath of the 281-to-32 vote of confidence by the House of Commons in Prime Minister Churchill's policy in the liberated countries.

In the balloting yesterday Mr. Churchill won solid support from his own Conservative party and from Labor members serving in the coalition government as ministers or parliamentary private secretaries, but only one Labor rank and file member—Ivor Thomas—voted for the government.

Labor members in the government may demand a vote of confidence from their own party, which is opening a conference Monday. A resolution was being drafted for the conference outlining the party's attitude toward liberated countries.

QUAKE DAMAGES JAPAN'S CENTRES OF WAR INDUSTRY

Tidal Wave Inundates Homes and Causes Landslides Near Tokyo

By The Canadian Press)

Japan's populous war industry centres of Oska and Nayoga suffered factory damage and casualties in Thursday's earthquake which jolted seismograph needles all over the world, the Japanese admitted today.

The 'quake dismissed by Tokyo first as minor, damaged homes and factories in the southern Honshu island war centres while a tidal wave inundated homes and caused landslides in the Shizuoka area, some 80 miles southwest of Tokyo.

Domei Agency said in a broadcast picked up by the Federal Communications Commission that "on the whole," however, damage was light.

"The quake was severe," Domei said, "but losses were limited to buildings damaged in one area, and on the whole not much damage was done."

That area was the Tokai district, which includes Nagoya, with a population of 1,328,000, centre of Japan's aviation industry before the war. Osaka, where factory damage was reported by Domei, is a city of 3,252,000, an important rail, shipping and manufacturing hub.

The only indication of casualties was given in the announcement that "a number of persons suffered light or severe casualties" in the Hamamatsu and Shimizu areas.

No word was forthcoming as to whether Tokyo was damaged, but North American seismologists said the capital must have been jarred by the tremor which they compared in intensity to the devastating Japanese 'quake of 1923 which killed nearly 100,000.

Sections reported hardest hit form an arc, 80 to 180 miles from Tokyo, generally southwest of the capital. The seismic centre was in the sea of Enshu, on the east side of Honshu, the main Japanese island.

Domei said precautions already taken against air raids served in good stead.

RECENTLY LANDED U.S. TROOPS STORM PORT OF ORMOC

Bewildered Japs Flee In Disregard of Orders to Stand Or Die

General MacArthur's Headquarters, Philippines, Dec. 9 — (AP) — Storming the outskirts of the port city of Ormoc, the recently landed U. S. 77th Division broadened the coastal centre of two mantraps on West Leyte today and a frontline dispatch told of bewildered Japanese fleeing in disregard of orders to stand or die.

In the main, however, there was bitter enemy resistance.

The U. S. 6th Army going all-out to wind up the central Philippines campaign, was on the move in all sectors, converging from three directions on Ormoc.

Naval patrols were maintained in the Camotes Sea in an effort to choke off the last trickle of enemy shipments to that gravely menaced reinforcement base. Today's communique disclosed the patrols sank six loaded small vessels and set a seventh ablaze.

Far out over the Philippines from Luzon to Mindanao, American planes hunted down other enemy ships, sinking a 9,000-ton transport and destroying or damaging 14 small freighters in operations just reported.

The 77th, veterans of Guam, drove north for two miles from the point of Thursday's landing to seize the former U. S. Army base of camp down on the edge of Ormoc.

Flee to Wild Country

Five miles south of the 77th's beachhead, the northbound 7th Division swept beyond Palanas to seize Balogo and inland high ground north of the Tabgas river. Atop a hill in the 7th's sector, Al Dopking, Associated Press war correspondent, saw trapped Japanese run first towards the 77th's beachhead, recoil under fire back toward the 7th which also blasted them and sent many scurrying into wild mountain country.

To the northeast, other Americans from conquered east Leyte were disclosed today to be within six miles of the west coast after capturing the mountain pass at Mahonag.

In addition to the tight squeeze being clamped on the south end of Lt. Gen. Tomoyuki Yamashita's severed defence line, a larger trap north of Ormoc was narrowed.

Resist Advance

The 32nd Division, moving south from Carigara Bay, wiped out bypassed enemy pockets, then inched forward along the rugged corridor beyond the Leyte river which forks south of Limon. The Japanese resisted this advance fiercely.

The Japanese air force, whose 9-hour attack on the American convoy after the 77th's landing was a demonstration of the enemy's still-potent striking power, kept pounding away at shipping in Leyte Gulf.

The raid on the east side of Leyte, where Gen. MacArthur's invasion forces landed Oct. 20, cost the enemy 14 planes and five more were shot down over west Leyte, headquarters said today. Japan has lost more than 1,000 planes in the Leyte campaign.

3rd Army Beats Against Eight Industrial Towns

House-to-House Fighting In East Sarreguemines

By JAMES M. LONG
(A. P. Staff Writer)

Paris, Dec. 9 (AP) — U.S. 3rd Army troops fought house-to-house in the eastern part of Sarreguemines today after a new forcing of the Saar.

The 3rd. Army was beating against eight Saar Valley steel towns smouldering from fighter-bomber attacks, and field guns ripped the provincial capital city of Saarbrucken.

Americans were within a couple of miles of Saarbrucken, but Allied supreme headquarters had no confirmation of reports that the city's outskirts had been reached.

North of Saarlautern their comrades repulsed a strong German counter-attack and then seized 12 more pillboxes in the Siegfried Line.

Farther south the enemy's last Alsatian stand was cracking up, and dive-bombers gouged at the Neuf Brisach escape bridge over the Rhine near Colmar.

Preparing for Smash

On the northern front of the long Allied front, both sides maintained thunderous artillery fire, but a relative lull in ground activity suggested that U.S 1st. and 9th. Armies were gathering strength to smash the last German hopes of holding along the flooded Roer River before Cologne.

(The German communique today asserted the Julich garrison had fought its way back to the Roer's east bank)

(Thus it seemed apparent the whole west bank at Julich had finally surrendered. Today's Allied communique had reported two smallpockets remaining west of the river near the city).

No activity was reported from the extreme northern flank where snow was swirling down on shivering soldiers of the 1st. Canadian and British 2nd. Armies.

New Saar Crossings

The 35th Infantry carved out the new crossings of the Saar, and today was fighting through the streets of Sarreguemines, eight miles southeast of Saarbrucken, and extending a bridgehead south of the city to a mile. Suarreinsming on the east bank just southeast of Sarreguemines was captured.

The 26th Division edging northward along the east bank of the Saar had almost joined the 35th, but also was meeting stout opposition. It reduced five pill-boxes, presumably part of the old Maginot defences.

The Germans in Dillingen three miles northwest of Saarlautern counter-attacked with 800 infantrymen and 11 tanks, but were knocked back by the 90th Infantry Division. The enemy quit the town after a close-quarter battle.

The wedge into the Siegfried Line was not appreciably deepened, however, in the face of such stubborn resistance.

Germans forming up for an assault on the 95th Division near Saarlautern were scattered by artillery. German guns from Siegfried positions continued to hammer at the 90th and 95th Divisions.

British Capture San Prospero On Bank of Lamone

Rome, Dec. 9 (AP)—British 8th Army troops rapidly completing the encirclement of Faenza, have captured San Prospero, on the west bank of the Lamone river, 1 1-2 miles due west of the Bologna-Rimini highway stronghold.

Capture of San Prospero represented an advance of approximately three miles from Pideura, around which Allied headquarters today described the fighting as "particularly bitter."

German troops already had been reported pulling back west of Faenza toward the next large highway centre of Imola, eight miles from Faenza and 19 from the Po Valley prize city of Bologna.

Elsewhere on the front activity yesterday was confined to patrol operations, headquarters said.

Stiff Resistance.

The withdrawing Germans were putting up stiff resistance in an attempt to prevent the outflanking movement on Faenza.

Allied fire was directed across the Lamone, north of the Bologna-Rimini highway, where the Germans had dug in on the west bank of the stream.

The bridgehead over the Lamone south of the highway was already five miles deep in some places.

In the bloody battling for Pideura, enemy infantry and armor counter-attacked and recaptured the village yesterday. The Nazis held it most of the day in vicious house-to-house fighting until Allied tanks and troops regained control.

The east bank of the Lamone north of Faenza has been cleared as far as three miles south of Mezzano and Allied patrols were active all the way to Faenza itself.

Activity on the 5th Army front was slowed by the weather.

Sforza, Storm Centre of International Dissension, Was Anti-Fascist Leader

By The Canadian Press)

Prime Minister Churchill says Count Carl Sforza would not be a "particularly good choice" as foreign secretary in any government set up in liberated Italy. The United States through Edward Stettinius, secretary of State, says it has no objection to him.

Thus a storm of international dissension with far-reaching implications has sprung up about the head of the man who fought vainly against Benito Mussolini when Fascism gained power in Italy and was forced to leave the country. Throughout a 20-year exile he was recognized as a leader among Italian anti-fascists.

Count Sforza, 71, rich, distinguished in appearance, returned to his native Italy in October, 1943, from the United States where at that time he was widely regarded as a possible head of a democratic Italian government. For he had been foreign minister in 1920-21 and previously had held diplomatic posts and a seat in the Senate.

On his return to Italy he refused an audience with King Victor Emmanuel, holding that the king was to blame for permitting Mussolini to install fascism in the country. Last February he criticized Mr. Churchill for his proposal that the king remain on the throne and that Marshal Pietro Badoglio retain the premiership at least until the Allies captured Rome. Subsequently the king named Prince Humbert, lieutenant general of the realm.

The British stand in the present dispute has been widely criticized by the press of the United States, with some newspapers approving personally of Sforza. The New York World Telegram yesterday said the Count's only "crimes" are that "he distrusts the monarchy that aided Mussolini and that he objects to British domination".

Many British papers also have rapped the Churchill government on its stand. The Manchester Guardian, commenting today on Mr. Churchill's defence of his Italian policy, said: "The worst passage in his speech was that in which he denounced Sforza because when he got to Italy he did not stick to Badoglio . . . if that is the measure of Mr. Churchill's judgment one can only shudder".

City and District News

WATER SHORTAGE IN DISTRICT ACUTE

Although providing a small amount of surface water in low-lying fields, Friday's all-day rain which turned roads and streets into ruts of slushy snow, nevertheless did very little to help the current water shortage on district farms it was reported by farmers attending market on Saturday. The water shortage in the Belleville district has not been as acute in the past quarter of a century, it is stated, farmers reporting wells dry now which have not been dry in the past twenty-five years. Drawing water from creeks, rivers and springs is the only way stock can be supplied on many farms.

Marked Decline In Egg Prices

Price of eggs took another decided drop on the local produce market Saturday with Grade "A" bringing 40 cents the dozen. Mediums were quoted from 36 to 38 cents and pullets for as little as 30 cents the dozen.

The market was rather slimly attended during the early hours but towards noon numbers picked up as farmers began arriving with their produce.

The offering of apples featured the outside market as has been the case for the past several weeks. Top grade McIntosh, Delicious and Spy varieties brought $3 the hamper with combination grade selling at from $2.25. Talman Sweets were $2 to $2.25 per hamper with regular cooking varieties selling at from $1.25 to $2. Apple cider sold at 50 cents the gallon.

Offering of vegetables was rather small with previous prices prevailing. Potatoes sold at $1.75 per bag.

On the inside market chicken prices ranged all the way from 30 cents to 40 cents the pound, while a few ducks were available up to $2.50.

Christmas trees made their first appearance with the one vendor quoting his truckload at $1 each.

A few young pigs sold at from $4.50 to $6 each.

Windsor, Dec. 9 —(CP)— Two-way traffic between Windsor and Detroit is growing despite a reduction in the number of busses on the subway run, Customs Office figures show. There were 505,934 incoming automobile and bus passengers and 507,570 outgoing in November, compared with 374,837 and 375,480 for the same month last year. Automobile traffic between the two centres showed a 50 per cent increase.

Shell Missed Tank By a Few Seconds

Sergeant Fred Shunay, of the British Columbia Dragoons, now serving in Italy, had a hunch the other day—and played it. That is the reason he and his tank crew are alive to tell the story, says an Army Public Relations dispatch.

With the sergeant were Trooper Colin Grant, of Belleville, and three other troopers from the west.

The tank and its crew were under heavy shell fire in the recent fighting, when Sergeant Shunay suddenly ordered his driver to "back her to hell out of there."

The driver lost no time and a few seconds later a heavy shell landed directly on the spot where the tank had been in action. The tank crew now believe in "hunches."

Dr. S. S. Lumb Veteran County Councillor Retires

Reeve of the village of Bancroft for the past nine years, Dr. S. S. Lumb, veteran county councillor and ex-warden, has announced his retirement from municipal life. He will be succeeded by reeve-elect Peter Kellar of the northern village.

The announcement made to the county council during the December session held this week, was received with genuine regret by the members of the county body. Dr. Lumb was a popular member of council and he will be missed in the future.

Dr. Lumb entered the village council ten years ago and served for one year as councillor. He was elected to the reeveship the following year and has held that position to the time of his announced retirement. He has had four acclamations and was returned winner in five hard-fought elections.

He was a witty and able debater on the floor of the council chamber and he was a staunch upholder of the rights of the northern townships. His well-worded arguments often carried the day in many a hard-fought argument between the "North" and the "South."

His expression, coined several years ago in a verbal battle for special grants for the north, in which he termed the village of Bancroft a place of "tin roofs and optimism" is still mentioned when county councillors get together.

Boy Rides Bike Into Car's Path

Trenton, Dec. 10—Donald Quinn, age 12, son of Mr. and Mrs. John Quinn, North Front Street, suffered severe lacerations of the right hip about 4.30 on Friday afternoon when he was struck by a car owned and driven by Miss Dorothy Berry, 267 Dundas Street, West, Trenton.

The boy was riding a bicycle at the time on North Front Street, near VanAlstine's Service Station, and Miss Berry was proceeding south on Front Street during a blinding snowstorm. It is alleged the boy swerved his bicycle directly into the path of Miss Berry's car, though it was not definitely determined in which direction the boy was travelling.

He was taken to the office of Dr. Gordon Johnson, where several stitches were required to close the wound. He was later removed to his home.

Constable W. Youmans of the Trenton police, investigated the accident.

12 JAP ADMIRALS KILLED

San Francisco, Dec. 9 —(AP)— Deaths of 12 Japanese admirals were announced today by Japanese headquarters at the Yokosuka naval station.

Vice Admiral Hideo Yano, former chief of the navy press section, who last Oct. 4 himself announced the death of seven other admirals, was in the list.

Supply of Turkeys for Christmas Market Appears To Be Rather Slim

Despite the fact that Dominion agricultural officials have stated that the Canadian housewife "is much more likely" to have a turkey for Christmas dinner this year than in 1943, this does not represent the situation in the Belleville area, according to district farmers.

Opinion is divided as to the number of turkeys which may or may not be available this Christmas with some farmers stating there will not be "any more" than last year, while others assert that the supply in this district is considerably below that of 1943.

At any rate Belleville district farmers have no turkeys for the general Christmas trade as most of the birds raised this year have already been promised to customers. "Why they even started ordering their Christmas turkeys shortly after last Christmas," one farmer stated.

It is realized, however, that the majority of turkeys annually appearing on the Belleville market come from some distance from the city and this source of supply may be more in keeping with the general picture indicated by agriculture department officials.

Prices Set.

Whether or not there will be sufficient turkeys to grace Yuletide tables maximum prices which may be charged to the consumer have been set by the Wartime Prices and Trade Board.

Top price which may be charged for first grade young turkeys is 45 cents the pound with maximum for "B" grade 43 cents and 39 cents for "C". Young ungraded turkeys may be sold for 42 cents per pound with the above prices effective for the month of December. If turkeys are fully drawn, ready for the oven, prices may be increased by 10 cents per pound on the dressed weight.

Maximum price for hen turkeys is 42 cents for first grade, 39 cents for second and 36 cents for third with top price for ungraded birds being 38 cents. Price for tom turkeys is 40 cents, 38 cents and 34 cents for the different grades with ungraded price being 38 cents the pound. Again fully drawn prices may be increased 10 cents per pound dressed weight.

Prices for special grade birds are 46 cents for young turkeys, 43 cents for hens and 42 cents for toms.

Prices for geese with heads off and feet on are 32c, 30c and 26c for first, second and third grades respectively while for ducks dressed similarly the price are 34c, 32c and 26c. Ungraded ducks may be sold for 32 cents and ungraded geese at 30 cents the pound.

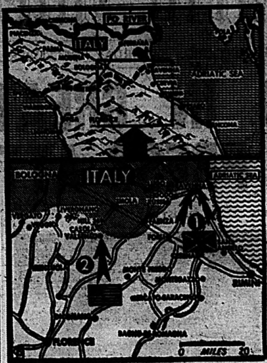
BRITISH TAKE KEY ITALIAN CITY



After a long period of static warfare, British 8th Army troops have captured the Adriatic coast city of Ravenna (1) after a lightning encircling movement. The manoeuvre, marking the most northerly penetration by Allied armies of the Italian peninsula, placed the Allies in position to mount heavier blows against the enemy, for the city is the hub of a network of highways and rail lines. To the west, Indian troops of the Fifth Army captured Casola Valsenio (2). At top, the action area is shown in relation to the battleline across Italy.

County Has Spent $79,495 on Roads System This Year

Expenditures on the Hastings County roads and bridges system thus far in 1944 have amounted to $79,495, County Engineer W. L. Langlois stated in his report to the County Council at the closing session Friday. This amount would be augmented by the cost of a new four-wheel drive truck which is to be delivered some time in December. The Suburban Road Commission has spent between four and five thousand dollars.

War conditions, including the great scarcity of labor had curtailed operations,' the report said but the most essential maintenance work had been carried out with the exception of repairs to some bridges and large culverts. The light snow of last winter reduced snow removal costs which amounted to roughly one-half the cost of the preceding year.

Calcium chloride amounting to 240 tons had been purchased this year for dust prevention purposes, also 8 tank cars or 60,993 gallons of asphalt dust-layer. This treated 20 1-2 miles of county besides the three miles of suburban road.

Approximately 15,394 cubic yards of crushed material and pit run gravel were used for resurfacing various roads of the county, while 3 1-4 miles of road were seal-coated, and 4 1-2 miles double surface treated.

Major bridge repairs were carried out on the Anderson's Island bridge and other repairs completed at the bridge over the Deer River, near Cordova. Extensive repairs are needed on the 236-foot Marsh Bridge over the muskeg east of Eldorado.

The county is not ready for snow plowing operations but after the two motor graders have been repaired and delivery made of the new truck and snowplow the county will be ready to cope with any emergency.

TEN SOLDIERS KILLED

Sioux Falls, S.D., Dec. 9 —(AP) — Ten soldiers at the Sioux Falls army air field were killed yesterday when one of two planes that collided in the air crashed into a barracks on the field. Seven men in the other plane involved parachuted to safety before their aircraft crashed.

Lewis Corrects Press Report Of Montreal Speech

Ottawa, Dec. 9 — (CP) — David Lewis, national secretary of the C.C.F., said in a statement read to the C.C.F. National Convention at Montreal Dec. 1 that reports of a speech he made to the convention Nov. 29 gave "an unfortunate and misleading impression of what I said and intended."

The Canadian Press quoted Mr. Lewis as saying he did not take second place to H. E. Winch (C.C.F. House Leader in the British Columbia Legislature) and C. Cameron (Convention chairman, of Courtenay, B.C.) in advocating ultimate, complete Socialism but that "at the present time I am concerned with winning an election."

"What I tried to place before this convention was the fact that we were drafting a first-term manifesto for a federal election from which we may emerge victorious. It was therefore our duty to tell the various sections of our people exactly what we propose to do and what we do not propose to do, so that they may not have any false fears or wrong impressions about our intentions.

"We are all concerned about winning the allegiance of the people of Canada at the next election, but only on the basis of our program and for the sole purpose of putting that program into effect. We will do neither more nor less than we say we shall do."

Used by Another Speaker

Yesterday in Ottawa Mr. Lewis, after checking with convention delegates, said he is emphatic that he did not use the words "At the present time I am concerned with winning an election." He said words like those attributed to him were used by another delegate in criticizing Mr. Lewis, and this may have caused confusion.

Mr. Lewis described as accurate the Windsor Star's summary of what he said. The Star's report, in part, quoted Mr. Lewis in reference to Mr. Winch and Mr. Cameron;

"I do not take second place to them in my belief in complete Socialism as the answer to our problems, but I am in favor of applying democratic measures to gain our election. I must be concerned with the reaction certain phrases and words have on the voters of Canada. I will not be moved by emotional appeals. We are on the eve of power. We have to learn the responsibility which goes with that power.

"Explaining why the paragraph had been written as it was, he went on: 'We put in explanatory notes for a definite purpose, to assure small business people who had been afraid, through misunderstanding that the program of the C. C. F. would deprive them of their businesses. That will not happen. And to assure managerial and technical personnel in industry we want them to stay on the job, and we have no intention of displacing them."

POWER UNIT OF V-2 BOMB

T/5 James Janone, of Bryn Mawr, Pa., is shown examining the Venturi tubes in the propulsion unit of a Nazi V-2 rocket bomb that fell in Belgium. A large number of these bombs have been fired over the Allied front lines, as the Germans vainly attempt to prevent supplies from reaching our forces. Many persons were killed when one of these bombs recently landed in a Belgian city.

AB. John Dall in Letter Home Describes Naval Engagement In Which 11 Nazi Ships Sunk

From aboard H.M.C.S. "Algonquin" overseas came an interesting and descriptive letter to Mrs. T. Dall, 43 North Front Street, from her son, AB. L.T.O. John Dall, telling of a recent naval battle in the North Sea during which an entire German convoy of eleven ships was destroyed. It will be recalled that it was immediately following this engagement here related that the "Algonquin" was mentioned in despatches for work during the sinking of the German battleship Tirpitz.

In opening his letter home, which was postmarked London, England, Jack Dall sent along personal family greetings. Pertaining to the naval engagement, however, the letter proved interesting and read in part:

"This time we sailed in very close to the Norwegian coast, just off the north tip of Denmark. It was a very dark night, but we could distinguish the shores and the lights of the coastal navigation stations. It was around midnight when we observed a German convoy of eleven ships, escorts included. We took them completely by surprise. They were illuminated by star shells and two of them were on fire and sinking before they realized they were being attacked.

Watched From Upper Deck

"Some of them returned fire and a few shells fell not far from us, in fact too close for comfort. Some small calibre shells did hit our ship but no serious damage resulted. It was very exciting. I was on the upper deck watching the entire action. All one could see around was German ships afire, blowing up, burning or sinking. The sky was filled with balls of flame, tracer bullets of course. We could see our big shells shooting across the sky like meteors to converge on their targets. Loud explosions were heard before we withdrew after about 20 minutes of steady firing. We regrouped and steamed back again to finish them off. This time one Nazi ship blew up, it was a great sight, a mighty flame roared into the night sky with debris flying end over end through the flames.

"We continued to pound the convoy until nine of the enemy ships had been sunk, one left burning and the last driven ashore. Frankly I was a bit frightened at first, but I was not alone on this score. After all I'd never seen anything like that before, it was even better than the invasion and that was a great sight also," wrote John, as he added personal messages about other Belleville boys aboard the illustrious H.M.C.S. "Algonquin."

Hospital Administration Praises Township Reeves of the County For Collection Indigent Accounts

Tribute to the township reeves of Hastings County for their efforts in assisting in the collection of indigent hospitalization accounts during the past year, was paid at the closing session of the County Council yesterday by Gordon Barclay, Belleville General Hospital Administrator.

"These accounts had been brought to a minimum through the combined efforts of his collection staff and the township heads," Mr. Barclay said. He appreciated the facilitation of this work caused by the willingness of county and township officials to co-operate.

Private patients have been paying through the nose to keep the hospital running, he added. Private rates had been raised from $4 to $6 since 1940 and even with this, increased costs of help and commodities had caused the hospital to have a deficit this year of $1,686.40. Last year it showed a surplus of $2,886.80. The hospital was doing all it could to collect accounts, while the patients are in hospital.

Hospital Well Equipped

"He had heard," he said, "of the intention of one or more smaller communities to erect small hospitals in their various vicinities. He failed to see the immediate success of such ventures due to the fact that necessary services would be impossible to get." "The Belleville hospital" he said, "was equipped with all modern medical and other devices and facilities. It has a provincial laboratory, x-ray department and had lately installed a new blood bank at the approximate cost of $600.

This blood bank, he told the reeves was now ready to serve the needs of patients of the district the hospital serves. There would be no direct cost for the blood providing relatives of the patients so treated, replaced the blood in the bank. This he felt, would tend to keep a consistent supply of blood available.

Overhead Not So Heavy

Residents of other communities would be better advised to build convalescent homes, which would relieve the congestion of district hospitals. The overhead cost would not be as heavy as a small hospital, where registered nurses are required by law to be on duty at all times. A registered nurse could head the staff of the convalescent home and be assisted by nurse aids.

Elderly people now being hospitalized in institutions could be placed in these convalescent homes, Mr. Barclay stated, and if necessary could be taken intermittently to hospital if treatment other than that within the facilities of the home, was necessary.

He intimated that the erection of such a home in the vicinity of the Belleville General Hospital would be undertaken in the near future.

Outlines Family Plan

The administrator outlined the family plan of hospitalization and urged the reeves to adopt it and promote it as far as possible. Entire families would receive free hospitalization for the sum of twelve dollars a year, or one dollar per month. This of course did not include doctors' fees. The plan was one that is meeting with general approval, and the administrator felt that its adoption would eliminate in a great many cases the possibility of indigent accounts. Families could afford to pay a dollar per month and this would facilitate matters not only for the people but the hospital itself.

Mr. Barclay read some humorous communications from people who had owed and still owe hospital bills. They were not many he said, and the hospital had only lost three accounts during the year that had been taken to the courts.

He closed his address with further words of appreciation of the co-operation shown him and his staff in the collection of the outstanding indigent accounts.

Chinese Seize Town of Shangssu In New Campaign

Chungking, Dec. 9 — (AP) — The railroad town of Shangssu, 18 miles south of newly-recaptured Tuhshan, was regained last night in the Chinese campaign to clear Kweichow province of the Japanese, the Chinese high command announced today.

"The Tuhshan sector now has been cleared of enemy remnants and pursuing operations to the south are continuing," the high command communique said.

Shangssu lies 82 miles southeast of Kweiyang, the provincial capital, and less than five miles from the border of Kwangsi province, from which enemy columns thrust into Kweichow toward Kweiyang and the Burma Road centre of Kunming. Most of the invaders already have been ousted by reinforced Chinese divisions.

Gen. Chen Cheng, new Chinese war minister, announced today that the retreating enemy was being pursued in the area of Liming (Dawn) Pass, northeast of the Kwangsi border town of Luchai, after being routed from Tuhshan.

Tuhshan, only 75 miles southeast of Kweiyang, had been enveloped by the Japanese in their drive along the Kwangsi-Kweichow railroad. Liuchai is 40 miles from Tuhshan.

Chungking newspapers issued extras telling of the victorious Chinese counter-attacks and predicting the Japanese would be driven from Kweichow.

A Chinese military spokesman cautioned that "the situation still is serious and we should not be too optimistic."

Be Sure to See All Garbage Dry

With an appeal on one side from the salvage committee to conserve all waste paper and with the advent of colder winter weather in the offing on the other, personnel of the local garbage collection department are in a quandry to know exactly what is to be done to avoid jamming garbage pails due to freezing of contents in the containers.

"In view of the paper shortage we don't like to ask residents to wrap their garbage in paper to prevent it from freezing to the metal pails, but for the winter months something will have to be done if we are to avoid jamming pails," stated city engineer Charles Mott today.

It was suggested, that residents refrain from throwing wet garbage such as tea leaves into garbage pails. If contents of pails are dry the refuse will not freeze to containers and thus excessive jamming will be avoided.

Loss of Corvette Shawinigan

Canadian corvettes have been doing a service of vast importance in the war and have earned the title of "the little work horses" of the Royal Canadian Navy. One of these ships, the Shawinigan, has now been reported lost but when and under what conditions whether it was under enemy action or due to weather conditions is not revealed. The corvette was "on operational duty in the North Atlantic," said the announcement of Navy Minister MacDonald.

This vessel has served on escort duty for large shipments of war supplies and has been extremely active, never losing a ship she was shepherding across the Atlantic in the past two years. Her service has been marked and her crew have been highly praised for their efficiency, their heroic service and their work in rescue.

The loss of this vessel and all her gallant company touches many homes throughout Canada from coast to coast for the navy has always appealed to young men in every part of the Dominion. The nation mourns with those who have lost loved ones for every Canadian knows with pride what Canadian youth has been accomplishing on the expanses of the seas in these war years.

What Canadian youth has achieved in the navy is the proud possession of the Canadian people and an inspiration to the Dominion of the oncoming generations.

These young men have been worthy of their ancestry and their heritage. The members of the crew of the Shawinigan have added lustre to the prestige of Canadian naval service and of Canadian young manhood in facing the perils of the sea and war and in giving so courageous and unfailing a demonstration of their duty on numerous occasions.

Those who are reported missing with the Shawinigan including Sub. Lieut. H. F. Baird of Belleville, have fought to make safe for all time the freedom of the seas and the democracy of the world. They have served nobly and with the fullest measure of devotion.

Sample House

A new type of plywood house is being exhibited in Britain with the double purpose of solving the post-war housing necessity, and the retention of labor employed in the war effort. The sample house is chiefly made of Canadian birch plywood. It does not have a frame. It covers an area of 600 square feet. It can be prefabricated in eight sections and is designed to erect easily on a pre-cast concrete base. Construction is adapted to plywood aircraft methods.

There is an inner and outer plywood layer glued to an insulating core by a special synthetic resin. Such construction gives strength, rigidity and lightness with the added features of fire and heat resistance and sound insulation. It takes 800 man-hours in the factory to make such a house and 200 man-hours at the site of erection. Deck-houses on motor torpedo boats designed to stand up to years of service in heavy seas, were the inspiration for this design. Present factory capacity is about 100 houses a week. This can be stepped up to about 1,000 houses weekly when synthetic materials, interchangeable with plywood are obtained. As it stands, the house consumes less timber than a conventional brick house of similar size. Internal accommodations of the house are suited to the needs of the modern housewife in every detail.

Problems of the Future

"Remember we are missing a generation—we must never forget that—the flower of the past was lost in the great battles of the last war. There should be another generation in between these young men and us older figures who are soon happy to pass from the scene. There should be another generation, men with their flashing lights, leading figures. We must do all we can to try to fill the gap, as I say there is no unsafer thing to do than to run risks with youth. It is very difficult to live your life in this world and not get set in old ways rather than looking back yith pleasure to the days of your youth. That is quite right. Love of tradition has never weakened a nation. Indeed it has strengthened nations in their hour of peril but a new view must come; the world must roll forward."—(Prime Minister Churchill at the opening of the Sixth Wartime Session of Parliament.)

Space, Air, Light

(New York Times)

Once upon a time, and that was not so very long ago, modern housing or model housing was primarily measured in floor space. Air, light and sanitation came next. In the course of Soviet Russia's vast industrialization program, when old cities doubled and trebled their population in a few years and new cities sprang up almost overnight, housing necessarily engaged much attention. The problem was always discussed in terms of per capita floor space or cubic space.

Britain between the two World Wars built new homes for half her population. It was found after a while that the original plans allowed too much floor space, because the planners overlooked the decline in the size of the family. British housing plans for after this war have taken this factor into account. Air, light and devices for wringing every bit of use out of every inch of space are the marks of new housing.

Thanks to the war (writes "K.H.") the only orange juice my grandson had tasted since his birth had come out of a bottle. Some months ago, when offered some juice squeezed out of an orange before his eyes, he inquired: "Why can't I have some real orange juice?"

I told this story to my sister in New South Wales and she has capped it with one that is worthy of your column. Some children living "out back" had been brought up on condensed milk and were some years old when their parents bought a cow. Imagine the parents' dismay when the first glass of fresh milk was indignantly refused with "Not after the cow's had it!"

Silver Lining To War Marriages

(New York Herald Tribune)

Notwithstanding the great number of war marriages it is an interesting fact that a great majority of the men now abroad on military service are single, and that on their return the number of marriages undoubtedly will increase. In war years there is another factor that tends to upset the usual balance. It is a tendency for widowers and elderly bachelors to take wives, often much younger than themselves. The survey says in conclusion: "Our single girls have little reason to be discouraged about their marriage prospects. Probabilities are that there will be no serious shortage of husbands."

Falling Market in Nazi Idols

(New York Herald Tribune)

A new Nazi decree, reported in a Swedish newspaper, forbids anyone to sell pictures of Hitler for less than 45 Reichsmark ($11, pre-war exchange). This price floor was deemed necessary because offers to sell Hitler pictures "have been particularly numerous during recent weeks."

A Swiss newspaper quoted an advertisement in a southwest German publication offering a Nazi "gold party insignia in exchange for one good pair of walking shoes."

The City Literary Institute in London has received 15,000 applications from people who wish to resume the studies which were interrupted when they gave up their leisure hours in order to undertake civil defence and other wartime duties. The majority of these applicants are people over 35 years of age.

MYSTERY

The most that mortals ever learn will never make them wise
So much of mystery and doubt about their pathway lies.
So much they find of wonderment, wherever they may go,
The shortest city street is lined with things they'll never know.

Now who can answer truthfully, when he is questioned, why
A child is called and some old wreck not yet allowed to die?
And who can tell why grass is green and snow a lovely white
Or follow to its furthest end an action, wrong or right?
There's not enough of knowledge sure to any man allowed,
As all the wisest men confess, to make him over proud.
To any child who asks him why some flowers grow red or blue
The man must answer: "That's a trick he long has wished he knew."

The Rev. H. S. Osborne, pastor of Bridge Street Methodist Church, will address the men's meeting at the Y. M. C. A. on Sunday afternoon.

Anchor ice in the Trent River put the power houses out of commission and Belleville manufacturing plants were without power and light from 5.30 this morning until noon today. Stores and offices that require light were also out of luck. The newspaper offices could not commence to set the news until the noon hour and it was a great rush to get the papers out.

Messrs. T. A. O'Rourke and A. A. Abbott, barristers, of Trenton, attended court here today.

Mikel, Col. W. N. Ponton and Col. S. S. Lazier. The site selected for the new drill shed was discussed fully and the members were of the opinion that the hospital lot is not a suitable place; Col. Lazier said the lot should be made a park. Mr. McCamon said that the city council has virtually purchased the hospital lot and presented it to the Government upon which to build the drill shed; he did not consider the site suitable, but doubted if a change could be made. Mr. Thomas informed the members that the title has passed to the Government and the engineers have tak n the levels, etc. Mr. Mikel said the hospital lot was selected by the Government and the title was passed to the Government, but he thought a change might yet be made. It was finally decided to take the matter up with the city council and the following were appointed a committee to deal with the question: Col. Lazier, Col. Ponton, C. M. Stork, and C. M. Reid.

Book Review

In Spite of All. By Archer Wallace. Published by The Ryerson Press, Toronto. $1.25.

Archer Wallace who has been writing books for more than twenty years and has published in late years such inspiring volumes as "I Believe in People", "The Silver Lining", "Stars in the Sky", "The Faith of Mom", and "Leaves of Healing", has added another to his list by this latest book "In Spite of All". Here he tells the stories of ten famous men and women, who, handicapped by difficulties which might have ruined the effectiveness of their lives but for the courage and fortitude with which they faced life and its responsibilities, have left a rich heritage of inspiration to mankind. This volume of 138 pages in the usual inimitable style of Dr. Wallace and with the finest sense of selection of incidents of their lives shows how Beethoven, Cowper, Elizabeth Barrett Browning, Francis Parkman, Marie Curie, Sir Walter Scott, Schiller, Spinoza, Grey of Fallodon and Katherine Hathaway endured obstacles or ill-health and triumphed leaving a record of rich lives to mankind not only in their accomplishments but also in the spirit in which they lived.

The stories are told with the art of a born story-teller, with directness, simplicity, clearness and sympathy. In his foreword Mr. Wallace expresses the belief that "it is almost impossible to exaggerate the courage, the fortitude and tenacious endurance of people. The ten character studies in this book are not intended in any way to be rounded out biographies. They are simply attempts to record how certain well-known people have accepted exceptional hardships which were chiefly due to ill-health. Those written of here are no braver than millions of obscure people who also belong to 'the freemasonry of suffering'.

"These examples have been selected because records concerning them are available."

Rev. Dr. Wallace has again in this volume proven his gift as a writer of inspirational literature and this book should enjoy the same popularity which his other works have reaped. His qualifications for this work have long been acknowledged. He has been for years the editor of "Onward", a young people's paper and as a preacher he is much in demand in the pulpits of the church in Canada. He is wellknown in Belleville where he has often preached on special occasions. His sermons display the same art of narration, the spiritual insight into the lives of men and women and the young and his sympathetic outlook upon life.

PERSONAL HEALTH TALKS

By WILLIAM BRADY, M.D.

STRUCTURE AND GROWTH OF HAIR

The hair is a modification of, projection from or derivative of the epidermis. The hair is fed or nourished, therefore, just as the nails and the skin are. All of these epidermal structures are influenced by the general nutritional condition and the hair and the nails are subject to the same nutritional influence as that which determines the condition, growth and health of the skin.

The hair shaft is not hollow and does not "bleed" when cut, the hair being nourished through its root—the roots, embedded in the cuplike depressions in the skin called follicles, are supplied with arteries and veins.

The hair roots and follicles are mostly oblique (slanting) in reference to the surface — except the coarse hairs in ear canals, nostrils and edges of eyelids (lashes) which are perpendicular. The hairs on the head and over the body surface generally have minute muscles attached to their slanting shafts. When these muscles (called arrectores pilorum) contract under the stimulus of cold or fright, they make the hairs stand out or "on end." This gives the skin surface where the hairs are almost invisibly fine down the appearance of "gooseflesh" (cutis anserina.)

The obliquity of the hair of head, beard and entire body (hair covers the entire body surface except palms, soles, preputial and labial surfaces and backs of terminal phalanges of fingers and toes) follows a constant pattern of whorls, from the crown of head toward the left behind and around toward the right in front, as a man who shaves himself is well aware. On the backs of the hands and arms and the legs and feet the hairs slant outwards, likewise on the backs of the fingers and toes.

When a hair on body or head, an eyebrow or an eyelash is epilated or plucked, a new one grows in six or eight weeks, is fully developed in three months.

Hair on the scalp grows at the rate of one-half inch a month, a little more in young persons and in summer, a little less in older persons and in winter.

Wilson calculated the average adult's scalp has 120,000 hairs. Stelwagon found a person with light blond hair had 140,000 hairs on head; one with red hair only 90,000 hairs; one with brown hair, 109,000 hairs; one with black hair [illegible].

The hair on the head of a woman is coarser than that of a man with hair of the same color. Blond or light colored hair is usually finer (smaller diameter) than brunet or dark colored hair.

Straight hair has a round shaft contour; curly or wavy hair has an oval or flattened contour. Naturally curled or wavy hair becomes more curly or wavy when the air is very humid or moist or damp; artificially curled or waved hair loses its curl or wave in damp weather.

QUESTIONS & ANSWERS

Early Up

I have had three children and I was much interested in your article telling of the practice of getting the mother up and about in three or four days after childbirth. The worst part of having a baby is just that—having to lie abed for exactly nine days (I infer that the organs miraculously fall back into normal place in precisely nine days) when one feels fine and would like to get up and go about her ordinary activities. (Mrs. N. L. S.)

Answer—Well, next time engage an up-to-date physician and you'll have a good chance of doing just so. So far as everything getting back into normal place is concerned, that is more likely to occur if the woman gets up the third or fourth day than it is if she lies for a week or more longer. From the very first a woman should do systematic exercises three or four times a day while she remains in bed.

Salute to Chief Hughes

Knowing something of the campaign you have carried on to correct the error in the resuscitation method taught by the Red Cross I wonder why you don't acknowledge the work of Chief Dick Hughes of the Atlantic City Lifeguards. (J. C. A.)

Answer—I am unable to find it in my files but I am sure I paid tribute to the fine work of Chief Hughes and his men. There the Schafer method is applied, not the pretty Red Cross modification. I commend to the smug little "experts" of the Red Cross the method used by Chief Hughes and the results the Atlantic City lifeguards have had with the correct method. It may not make such pretty pictures but I venture to say it saves more lives than the Red Cross trick can.

NUGGETS OF KNOWLEDGE

It is commonly believed that when an aviator is flying at high altitudes his machine may be upside down without his knowing it unless he consults his instruments.

Experts say this is not strictly true. A flier remaining upside down for any length of time, provided he is in possession of all his faculties, will be aware of the fact regardless of whether or not he can see the ground or objects near the ground. It would be possible, however, in thick clouds or a dense fog, for an aviator to lose his sense of direction and not know that his machine was in a steep spiral unless he consulted his instruments. It is also possible that a flier might become dizzy or confused during manoeuvres in the clouds and not be able to tell whether or not he was rightside up.

How is the gauge of a shotgun determined? A lead ball that fits snugly in the muzzle of a cylinder bore is taken as the standard of measurement for the gauge of shotguns. The number of these lead balls in a pound determines the gauge. For instance, suppose the maximum diameter of a lead ball that will fit the bore of a shotgun barrel is 0.730 inches, and further suppose it requires twelve such lead balls to make a pound. It is a twelve-gauge shotgun. Of course, the diameter of the bore proper and not the "choke" determines the gauge.

According to an old saying the turtle is composed of seven different kinds of meat. It is merely another way of saying that the flesh of the turtle is tender, palatable, and wholesome, or that it has the good qualities of chicken, venison, beef, pork, mutton and other meats. Probably no two epicures would agree on just what seven varieties of meat the turtle is supposed to resemble. The number seven has no special significance in this connection. The green fat of the turtle is particularly celebrated for its deliciousness. Among the Chinese there is a common belief that a person can acquire the longevity of the turtle by eating its flesh. It was reported in 1939 that Chinese bought 80 per cent of all the turtles sold at the Fulton Fish Market in New York City. Turtle soup has been deemed a dainty dish by epicures for centuries.

Ines de Castro, wife of Dom Pedro of Portugal in the 14th century, is known as "the queen who reigned after death." She became the morganatic wife of Dom Pedro while he was heir to the throne. The prince's father, the king, seriously objected to the marriage. He feared the powerful Castro family; besides, Ines was believed to be of illegitimate birth. In 1355 Ines was stabbed to death supposedly at the instigation of the old king. The outraged Dom Pedro started a rebellion that did not subside until the prince was given a large share in the government of Portugal. When the old king died in 1357 Dom Pedro succeeded to the throne. According to tradition, the new king had the body of his murdered wife exhumed, placed on a throne and crowned. All the nobles were compelled to pass and do obeisance to the dead queen by kissing her withered hand. Then Ines, "the queen who reigned after death," was interred with great pomp in a beautiful sarcophagus of white marble.

Canadian Soldier Writes of Visit To Republic of San Marino, Italy

Editors Note: Miss Edythe Carmichael of Cannifton has received an interesting letter from her cousin, Pte. L. A. Carmichael, who is now serving in Italy. Pte. Carmichael, whose home is in Regina, Sask., has written an excellent descriptive story of a visit he made in October to the tiny republic of San Marino which is situated in Italy near the Adriatic coast.

The letter follows:

* * *

As our unit was not in operation at the time, a friend from North Bay, Pte. George Didman, and myself decided to visit the Republic of San Marino while we were in the area.

The republic claims to be the smallest and most ancient in the world. Its area is no more than 38 square miles and its population is less than 15,000. It is said to have been founded about the year 350 A.D. by St. Marinus at the time of the persecution of the Christians by the Roman emperors.

This diminutive state braved all the storms of mediaeval warfare, and the ambitions of Napoleon. It always resisted the Papal claims and its autonomy was respected by Italy with which it concluded a treaty in 1837, and another along similar lines in 1939.

In 1849 Garibaldi fled to the republic for refuge from the Austrians after the collapse of the Roman republic which he had been instrumental in setting up in 1848.

The republic is governed by a council of sixty of whom two are elected as Regents for six months. A council of twelve forms a Supreme Court of Justice. It has an army of sixty soldiers.

Our objective was the capital, San Marino, which perches on three mighty rocks on the top of Mount Titano.

We started on our trip after lunch, our mode of travel being "by the thumb." At one point along the road we saw a sign stating that San Marino was "out of bounds" to all troops. However we decided to go on as far as we could.

During our first "lift" we passed over a bridge and were confronted with a large sign stating the "Republic of San Marino." It was placed in a fork in the road so we couldn't tell from its position whether we were entering the state or running alongside of it with the road as a boundary line. We continued along the road which began to wind back and forth up a steep grade. Part way up our driver reached his destination.

We then started to walk along the road not knowing whether we were in the state or not. Several vehicles went by, then a "jeep" passed us driven by a major in the R.C.M.P.

He stopped although we didn't make any attempt to get a ride. I asked him if we were in the republic and if not if he would take us as far as we could go. He wasn't sure whether we were in it but offered to take us along with him.

After having continued along the road for some time we could see it winding back and forth down below us and noticed white crosses on the roofs of the houses which showed that we were in the republic.

As we approached the top of the hill we saw a sign "San Marino." We got out at one of the gates in the wall which surrounds the town.

It was not large but quite compact with narrow winding streets. The streets were of stone all about the same size and laid by hand. It is built on the slope of the mountain with a castle on top. The castle was closed to the public.

From there we could obtain a wonderful view of the surrounding country. The one side being perpendicular for several hundred feet and then sloped down to the Adriatic about ten miles away. Following the coast both up and down we could see several towns. Directly in front to the north were several small ridges, vision beyond them was obscure due to smoke and dust from the battlefront. On our left was the sloped side of the hill with the town stretching down a third of it. As far as we could see there were hills and valleys right to the mountains. We were very high, about 2,200 feet above sea level, and could follow the course of the river Marecchio which wound down to the Adriatic on our right and branched off into the hills on our left.

We returned to the main part of the town and visited one of the churches which I believe was the largest building in the town. It was beautiful inside, marble being used generously in its construction. It contained the most magnificent paintings that I have ever seen. The colors were amazingly clear and bright, not the usual dark and dull type.

At the entrance we were met by a civilian who acted as a guide. He did not speak English but since he spoke slowly we could understand most of the things he tried to tell us concerning the church. It had been founded by St. Marinus about 350 A.D. Near the altar was the tomb of St. Marinus and through the lattice work could be seen the coffin containing his body. It had removed from the old church which we visited next.

At one side of the church was a door leading through a corridor onto a balcony. It was built on the edge of the rock with a drop of about 800 feet. It gave a very good view of the area to the coast. On the other side of the balcony was a short and narrow flight of steps leading into another building.

On entering it we found it to be a chapel, all that was left of the old church. It had been cut out of the rock. In the wall was the hollowed out tomb where St. Marinus' body was laid at the time of his death and remained there till it was removed to the new church. The floor was of polished tile and the altar of mosaic similar to that in St. Peter's Cathedral at home. It was beautiful work, the different colored stones all polished and blending into a very regular design. On top of the altar was a white marble statue of St. Marinus. White marble is not common; the pillars were of colored marble.

Leaving the chapel we went down a flight of steps toward the centre of the town. The steps were cut out of the rock and ended in a square in which were found the administration buildings, the police headquarters and the post office.

For souvenirs we bought complete sets of the current issue of stamps for about thirty cents and had the post office rubber ink stamp placed in our pay books.

San Marino stamps were quite valuable at one time but in recent years have lost their popularity except as a novelty. Some of the stamps show the republic national emblem which is three pillars of smoke rising from three hills which represent the three rocks on which stands the town of San Marino. Others have the Fascist sign and many are commemorative of Fascism but have the printing blocked out.

Like all small towns in Italy there were no large stores but only small shops. Several of them sold chinaware but the stock was low being mostly imported from Milan.

One most impressive fact was the people spoke Italian but there the resemblance ended. They were friendly, exceptionally clean and tidy in their appearance. Their facial expression was one of content not resentment. The girls were much like those in Rome, having a stylish appearance.

The buildings in that state were not badly damaged although it had been used as a battlefield to a certain extent. On looking over the cliff we could see some buildings that were damaged and large shell craters in the open fields.

We had to leave early in order to get to camp before dark. We were fortunate in getting a lift all the way.

Since our trip there are tours being conducted by various units every day.

I enjoyed the trip very much, it was educational, interesting and gives one an opportunity to see architectural work that is truly amazing.

Buckwheat Cakes Best As Grandma Made Them

By E. P. A.
(In Windsor Star)

One of the reasons I used to be anxious to go down to Grandmother Pooler's to spend Friday night in the Winter time was because Grandma always had buckwheat cakes and maple syrup for breakfast. We had buckwheat cakes at our house sometimes, but even when I was a small lad, Mother was going modern and tending away from the hearty breakfasts of her pioneer mother and she had the notion that too many buckwheat cakes were "bad for you." Then too, if we had them for more than a week in the Winter, Dad would complain that they were getting monotonous, and call for oatmeal.

Now you can buy buckwheat pancake flour today, for they still grow that grand old pioneer cereal crop. The kind you get of course is a patent mixture, self-rising, and nothing to compare with those pioneer cooks like Grandma used to make. As for maple syrup, you can get it, if you are rich enough and lucky enough. Otherwise the syrup you put on your buckwheat cakes is either thick corn syrup, or else it reads, by edict of a government which would protect you from food frauds, "cane syrup with imitation maple flavor."

So one can hardly blame the moderns who have turned to fruit juices, exploded grain cereals which you eat cold with milk, and possibly a strip or two of bacon, cut very thin; with an egg. The coffee may be better these days, and you can get cream which conforms to rigid percentage standards. But the real old-fashioned buckwheat cake, made with sour-dough yeast, which we used to call "go-quick" in my old home town of Morenci, Michigan, is out. At least it has been out for me these many years.

Solemn Rite

At Grandma's the making of buckwheat cakes was a solemn rite, carried out every night just before bedtime. And when Grandma arose from her everlasting needlework and went to the kitchen to stir up the buckwheat cakes, I knew that it would not be long before I would be ordered off to bed in the back room of the upright of her house, where it was just about as cold, if not colder, than it was outdoors. But then, I was used to that and it was no hardship.

There was a feather bed on the bed above the mattress and there were several thick comforters and a couple of quilts for covers. It didn't take more than a minute or so to undress, don the cotton flannel nightshirt Grandma kept for me, flip up the stiffly starched pillow shams on their patent frames and get into bed. With a couple of shivers induced by the cold sheets, I would be warm again, and the only trouble would be getting up in the morning. But smell of the buckwheat cakes, the sausage and the coffee was ever a stimulus.

Grandma kept her house warm with a base burner. It heated the big living room and her bedroom which was just of it, very nicely. There was a wood range in the kitchen, but there the fire was always allowed to go out when the supper dishes were done. For making buckwheat cakes with sour dough, they had to be allowed to rise over night. That was why, just before bedtime, Grandma always stirred up her cakes. Then they would be set in a covered earthenware bowl on the back of the base burner. The damper would be turned, fresh hard coal put in the magazine of the stove, and all was ready for a good night's sleep and a better breakfast the next morning.

Hearty Breakfast

Grandma Pooler always served a hearty breakfast. Besides the cakes there would be sausage (never the link kind, but always in cakes) that Grandma had seasoned herself, or else salt pork of her own curing. These recipes were Grandma's own and went back to the time when she came with her father and mother and brothers and sisters from New York State to settle in the untouched woods country that was then Southern Michigan.

These pioneers did a lot of hard work, felling trees, cutting wood, building log cabins, grubbing out stumps, cultivating crops in fields from which all the stumps had not been completely removed and making just about all they used and wore. They may have lacked many of the things we consider essential today. But they never lacked food, and they had lots of it three times a day. Grandma never got modern in this respect. No dainty breakfasts in her home.

Besides cakes and sausage or fried salt pork, maple syrup that was the real thing, and eggs (most generally fried), Grandma would serve you oatmeal if you liked and you could have coffee with cream and sugar and applesauce. The grapefruit was unheard of in those days and oranges were strictly a Christmas luxury. Grandma never learned about tomato juice until she was very old and the only thing they ever did with tomatoes in the old days was to eat them raw in season and put them up in cans. But, if you didn't like applesauce, you could have any kind of canned fruit you wanted, and that was always plentiful, peaches, pears, red and black raspberries and strawberries, to mention a few.

No Toast

Toast for breakfast wasn't much esteemed in those days, largely due to the difficulties in making. You had to use a toasting frame over the kitchen fire and more than often the toast would catch fire. Toast is really a modern invention and for pioneer cooks like grandma, it was considered a food for the sick. (She always gave me milk toast and soft-boiled eggs when I would be laid up in bed with a sore throat and she came to take care of me, being the community nurse when I was a little chap.)

Sometimes instead of coffee, Grandma would serve a cereal drink, brewed from a special bread, made with molasses and graham flour. It would be baked and dried out and then put in the oven again and left until it was hard and black. Then it was smashed up with a rolling pin and used to brew the drink.

She was like that about the new patent breakfast foods as they began to appear on the market, and would always say that there was nothing new about them; the pioneers made them in their kitchens and she wasn't even stumped when they came out with exploded grains. "You've been eating popcorn for years," she said, "and you like it not with butter on it. Just try it cold with cream and sugar and see if it isn't as good a puffed wheat or rice." I did, and liked it.

Always Served Plenty

Grandma lived and died without knowing anything about vitamins. But she did know how to prepare meals that contained plenty of them. About her only dietetic sin was overabundance. She always served plenty, breakfast, noon and night, and she always let a boy eat all he wanted to. There was only one stipulation. If I was to get seconds or thirds on mince pie at her house, I had to be there when she was making the season's supply of mince meat and help chop that meat.

Yes, there was boiled beef in Grandma's mincemeat. It went in finely chopped, with raisins (they had to be seeded by hand in those days), apples for a filler and cider and spices.

Mince pie may be a long way from buckwheat cakes for breakfast, but both played a part in a domestic economy that did well for its day and its needs. I wish there were some way of reviving it. In particular, give me more of those buckwheat cakes and the real maple syrup!

Ottawa, Dec. 9 —(CP)— CANDY TREAT: Time was when Junior got his candy for being good or as a reward for odd chores. Now, at best, candy is an infrequent treat. The children may not be pleased about it but the shortage of candy may be a blessing in disguise.

Candy spoils children's appetites for other foods. This means that they may go short on the protective foods which have such an important place in growth and general health. Nutrition Services says this cannot be stressed too much. Every child needs milk, green and yellow vegetables, fruits, eggs, meat, whole-grain cereals and whole-wheat or Canada approved bread.

Candy furnishes energy to the body and very little else. Its place in the diet is after meals, not before or between.

JELLIED SALAD: A colorful touch to any holiday lunch or dinner is gleaming red beet and celery salad. It may be served plain but Laura Pepper, chief of the Agriculture Department's Consumer Section, suggests the jellied variety for special occasions.

Soak 1½ tablespoons gelatine in ¼ cup cold water. Add 1½ cups boiling water and stir until all the gelatine is dissolved. Add 1-3 cup cold vinegar (mild), ¼ teaspoon salt, one tablespoon sugar. Chill the mixture until partially set. Add one cup diced beets and ½ cup diced celery and pour the mixture into individual moulds. Chill until firm. To serve, unmould on lettuce leaves. This makes six to eight individual salads.

KILLING VITAMINS: Nobody wants to do this but everyone who prepares orange or other fruit juices way ahead of the clock is guilty of it. That goes for opening a can of fruit juice too.

Squeeze your fruit juice a few minutes before it's going to be used or, if it coming from a can, the best method is to punch two holes in the lid (one to let the air in and the other to let the juice out). If you don't want to use all the contents of the tin at once remember it's just an old wives' tale that fruit juice shouldn't be kept in the can after it has been opened.

JUNIOR COMMANDOS (pocket editors) give their battle dress a beating, as any mother in the land can testify. Elbows poke through windbreakers, knees wear through at the knees and at other classic spots . . small fry can't pretend to shoot at Germans and still pretend to be mamma's boy. Patches and darns are high style today, even on new garments.

Reinforce elbows and knees in children's clothes . . . new ones too . . . with leather. Old gloves will give a more sizable amount than you would think. And don't forget to darn, as invisibly as possible, elbows of sweaters. Good insurance for new ones.

EGG YOLKS: We know you cover a left-over egg yolk with water and keep it in an airtight jar in the refrigerator. But what do you do next? Use it up in sandwiches and salads? Here's a tip on that . . . Poach it just as you would a whole egg but cook until it is firm. If you're going to bake, remember that two egg yolks can take the place of one whole egg and made a custard more tender and golden. Don't forget that you can add the yolk to the next pan of scrambled eggs too.

THE MIXING BOWL

By ANNE ALLAN
Hydro Home Economist

Hello, Homemakers! If there is one thing I enjoy it's going to the market on Saturday morning, where one can wander around and search out the choice offerings which the farmer has brought in from the country and arranged in colorful clusters where we can pick and choose whatever suits our fancy, and our pocketbooks.

At present, the stalls are filled to overflowing with that old favorite, the cabbage family, which includes everything from the snowy white head of cauliflower, broccoli, sprouts, curly savoys, to the big firm purple and white drum heads which supply the main ingredient for the kraut crock and the winter salad bowl. There's always an abundance of bright green parsley, dark red beets, and big bunches of long Chinese cabbage, and bags of potatoes.

It is also interesting to see how many men are now going about with shopping lists, cautiously investigating each purchase they are making for the homemaker. Then there are the youngsters trailing their wagons with an air of independence and carrying the family shopping list to the market vendors. To show how much she appreciates this friendly shopping assistance, the homemaker might plan to make a few special goodies ahead of the holiday. Cookies are a universal favorite, so here are a few recipes along with other Christmas suggestions.

Christmas Cookies

1 cup molasses, 3-8 cup brown sugar, 1 1-4 cup shortening, 2 unbeaten eggs, 2 tsp. ground cloves, 1 tbsp. chopped orange peel, 7 cups flour, 2 tsps. soda, 2 tbsp. warm water.

Heat molasses and add sugar. When sugar is dissolved and mixture is still warm, stir in shortening, unbeaten eggs, cloves and peel. Pour into mixing bowl and stir till well bended. Add 4 cups flour. Dissolve the soda in the water and add. Work in rest of flour except 1-2 cup reserved for flouring board. Chill dough in electric refrigerator and roll out about 1-8 inch thick. Use fancy shapes for cutting if you have such. Bake on greased cookie sheet in hot oven, for five minutes. This makes about 100.

Shortbread Cookies

1-2 pound butter, 1-2 cup fruit sugar, or rolled granulated sugar, 2 cups sifted rice flour.

Cream butter and gradually blend in your choice of sugar; cream very well. Add the flour, a third at a time, and combine very well after each addition—if flour becomes difficult to work in with spoon, use the hands. Turn dough onto a lightly floured baking board and knead in additional flour until cracks appear on the surface of the dough—avoid working in any more flour than will bring the dough to the cracking point. Pat and roll dough to about one-third inch thickness; using a floured cutter cut dough. Cookies may be decorated with a piece of cherry before baking, or prick the tops with the tines of a fork. Bake in a very slow oven, 275 degrees, about 40 minutes—until cookies are set.

Yuletide Fruit Bars

1 cup all-purpose flour, 1 tsp. baking powder, 1-3 tsp. salt, 1 cup light brown sugar, 1-4 cup melted shortening 1 tbsp. of grated orange rind, 2 eggs, 4 cups cranberries, 1 1-4 cups citron peel, cut fine.

1.—Sift flour, measure, sift again with baking powder and salt; combine with sugar.

4.—Pour into shallow well-greased pan 11 by 7 inches, bake in electric oven (350 degrees) 50 to 60 minutes.

5.—Cut in bars while warm. Makes 24 bars.

Jam Nighties

2 cups sifted flour, 3 tbsps. baking powder, 1-2 tsp. salt, 2 tbsp. sugar, 4 tbsp. shortening, 1 egg, 2-3 to 3-4 cups milk, jam (any flavor desired).

Sift flour, baking powder, salt and sugar together. Cut in shortening. Beat eggs and add milk. Add to dry ingredients to make a soft dough. Turn out on floured board and knead gently one-half minute. Roll out to 1-8 inch thickness. Cut into three-inch squares. Cut diagonally from each corner toward the centre, making the cut about one inch long. Place a teaspoon of jam in centre of each. Fold corners toward centre, pinwheel fashion. Bake on ungreased baking sheet in electric oven (450 degrees) 10 to 12 minutes. Makes about 18.

TAKE A TIP.

1.—Cut refrigerator cookie dough for baking in thin slices, with a long, sharp, thin-bladed knife, using a sawing motion and pressing very lightly.

2.—If a cookie maker is used, pack the dough in it tightly, being careful not to leave empty spaces or holes.

3.— Substitute lard or similar fat for butter, but be sure to increase the amount by one-fifth and increase the amount of salt in the recipe.

4.—Time the first pan of cookies accurately in the electric oven. Thereafter cookies can be baked by the clock.

5.—Cookie sheets should not be too large or too deep. There should be one inch of space on all sides to allow circulation of heat to obtain "even" cooking.

With Canada's Naturalists

Toronto, Dec. 9 —(CP)— Bird banding has been an organized branch of scientific research in North America since 1920 when the governments of Canada, the United States and Mexico began co-operating to advance the knowledge of bird life on the continent.

About 2,000 "birders" in the three countries now attach an estimated 300,000 bits of stamped aluminum to the legs of wild birds every year. Several thousands of these bands are recovered and returned to government offices annually and the story they tell gives an interesting picture of where our feathered friends go during the various seasons.

A bird bander in Saskatchewan trapped a barn swallow one July day, slipped a ring on its leg and released it. Six years later the bird was retaken in Bolivia. Less than a month after a blue-winged teal had been banded in Quebec, a hunter in British Guiana shot the duck and returned the band.

One of the most dramatic stories came from the bands on three Arctic terns—beautiful, gull-like birds, colored pearl-grey and white with black heads. One was banded some years ago in Maine and the other two on the Labrador coast. Four years after the Maine tern was banded it was found dead in West Africa. Of the Labrador birds, one was found within four months at La Rochelle, France, and the other within the same time, was recovered in Natal, South Africa.

By the testimony of the little metal rings it has been established that the terns who spend the summer in Canada's far north, pass the winter in the South Polar regions, 11,000 miles distant. And they make that amazing flight via Europe and Africa.

* * *

In 1914 and 1934 there was an abundance of the varying hare—better known as the snow-shoe rabbit—in the north woods of Canada, reaching into the Hudson Bay watershed. He is the common hare of Canada's north who turns white in winter.

Popular is the belief that these little animals die off every seven years, but careful study has disclosed they have been present in large numbers—something like over 1,000 to the square mile—at 10-year intervals during the past 80 years, with varying degrees of scarcity between. If this 10-year cycle persists, 1944 will be among the years of plenty.

Naturalists believe that when the hares increase to a point of crowding, disease of one kind or another appears in epidemic form among their ranks and reduces their numbers radically.

* * *

Brought from the tropics to grace the gardens of Canada and the United States, the beautiful spiderflower (cleome spinosa) proved a hardy importation. Not only has it braved the frosts of the north, but has escaped from human pampering in many areas and naturalized itself in waste places and on the fringe of woodlands. There is every likelihood that it will become a welcome wild flower, common, eventually, in the milder regions of Canada.

In the midst of war, the scientists of Russia continue to study natural history as well as the art of explosives. Prof. J. R. Dymond of the Royal Ontario Museum says the "most complete and modern" book on the fishes of the world has been compiled recently in Leningrad, the work proceeding during the daily bombing and shelling of that city during its long seige. The book has been printed in both Russian and English.

Greek Heroine Proves Second Edith Cavell

(By STEPHEN BARBER)
(Associated Press Writer)

Athens, Dec. 7. (AP)—More than a thousand British Empire troops owe their liberty to a 45-year-old mother of seven, who finally paid the price with her life at the hands of a German firing squad.

Greece is full of such stories. No Allied soldier who sought shelter was ever turned away. Rich and poor alike would share whatever they had with escaping prisoners of war. The penalty was always death for the Greeks— but the fugitive merely would be sent back to prison.

Lelia Karayanni began her work immediately when the Axis occupation began. Her first coup was the carefully planned jailbreak of 500 British, New Zealand and Australian troops.

Mme. Karayanni and her family operated as an expert team of jail-breakers. They rented two houses in Athens as transit camps for escapees. They built up a roster of friends who were willing to take in prisoners. They arranged for the supply of clothing and disguises.

The escapees were passed from village to village to pre-arranged rendezvous. Sometimes they would accompany fleeing Greeks in fishing boats. They would skip from island to island through the Aegean until they reached safety or made contact with Royal Navy patrols.

The Italians who were masters of Athens at the time, arrested Mme. Karayanni in a lightning raid on her home in June, 1941. Along with her they took her youngest son. He managed to escape before they reached police headquarters. Two of her daughters were seized later for interrogation.

Lack of Evidence.

Finally, after two months during which she was kept in solitary confinement, Mme. Karayanni was liberated "for lack of evidence". She was arrested again in October and detained for seven months. Again in March, 1942 she was arrested and tried by court martial. But the informer who had betrayed her mysteriously disappeared. Again she was released.

By this time the problem of aiding escapees was growing less. The rush was over. But Lelia Karayanni was not satisfied. She made contact with the British liaison officers and agents who were beginning to infiltrate Greece.

Working a secret radio station, the Karayanni family became one of the best information channels that General Headquarters, Cairo, possessed in Athens.

During whatever spare time she had, this "Greek Edith Cavell" used to perform commissions for the Andartes in the mountains. She bought clothes, arranged bribes to secure arms, food and munitions.

She took very little care of herself and finally fell seriously ill. It was from her sick bed that the Germans took her. Her last arrest was on June 12, 1944. The whole family, except one boy, was rounded up at once.

S.S. Chief Simana was determined to break the Greek woman. She was hung from the wrists and beaten for three hours. Failing to break her spirit that way they took her children and tortured them before her eyes. They kept her four days without water and repeated the whole routine. She would not give in.

Finally, on Sept. 7 they took her to be shot. As she was led from her cell she called to her children: "They are going to shoot me. It is a victory. Hold on!"

MANY DEFERMENTS CLAIMED

Toronto, Dec. 9. (CP)—Jack Edwards, spokesman for about 300 war veterans employed at the Weston plant of the Massey-Harris Co. Ltd., said yesterday "enough deferments are hiding behind the skirts of industry in the Toronto area to make an army corps".

HOTELMAN DIES

Toronto, Dec. 9. (CP)— Charles Robert Kerr, 54, former hotel manager here, died in hospital yesterday. A native of Woodstock, Ont., he was a veteran of the First Great War. A sister, Mrs. H. Wishart, lives at Woodstock.

Canadian Nurses Assist Soldiers Of Sister State

With The Canadians in Italy, Dec. 7 (CP)—In a South African general hospital on the Italian front are 26 Canadian nursing sisters who have been working in Union of South African hospitals for almost three years.

Have they become South Africans or are they still Canadian?

It didn't take long to find an answer to that. Like a lot of other Canadians in the Italian theatre they want to go home—to Canada—and the sooner the better.

They are some of the 300 Canadian nurses who answered a call for volunteer nursing sisters to go to South Africa where they were posted to hospitals throughout the country. Some of them missed Canadian ways so much they returned to Canada or joined Canadian hospital units here or on the Western Front.

But not all of the 300 felt that way and about 50 married South Africans.

The Canadian girls with the South African hospital here say they are much happier that they are close to home and can sometimes hear a Canadian voice.

The case of Nursing Sister Louise Jamieson of Durham, Ont., is typical. She arrived in Italy recently after two years in South Africa and for the first time in two years and a half met her brother Lieut. Bowman (Pete) Jamieson, who has been with the Ontario Armored Regiment since the invasion of Sicily.

Praise For South Africa.

All the nursing sisters praise South Africa and its hospitable people. Nursing Sister Connie Cuthbert of Ingersoll, Ont., formerly of Christie Street Hospital, Toronto, said, "it is a land of perpetual sunshine—but naturally we missed Canada. I missed my Canadian friends more than anything."

A good Canadian home-cooked meal is what Nursing Sister Alda McMillan of (69 Cooper St.) Ottawa wants on her return to Canada.

She spent 13 months at Baragwanath, one of the world's largest tuberculosis hospitals, where Matron Gladys Sharpe, new superintendent of the Western Hospital in Toronto, supervised 26 Canadian nursing sisters.

Nursing Sister Mattie Downs, of Windsor and London, Ont., said she also missed real Canadian cooking.

"What I missed more than anything was Canadian news and I don't know how I got along without the comics," declared Nursing Sister Blanche Murphy of Oakville and Saskatoon, Sask.

"I'm looking forward to my first motor trip on the new Alaska Highway," said Nursing Sister Edith Trowbridge of (10621 103rd Ave.) Edmonton. "But what I missed most were Canadian sports and the wide open spaces of the west. What South Africa lacks is just our way of life."

Other Canadian nursing sisters at the hospital include Maureen Green, Sydney, N.S.; Justine Delmott, Stellarton, N.S.; Helen A. Brown, East Florenceville, N.B.; Marguerite McLingont, Quebec, and Gwendolyn Stevenson and Nancy Lee, Vancouver.

GOOD MANNERS

By MRS. CORNELIUS BEECKMAN

A Housewarming

Dear Mrs. Beeckman,—

My husband and I are invited to a housewarming. Three young men, co-workers of my husband's (and all bachelors!) have taken an apartment for themselves. Should my husband and I take a gift to the housewarming? If so, what would be appropriate?

M. S.

To take a gift to a housewarming isn't really "necessary", but it's a friendly and generous thing to do. (Or you may prefer to send a gift after the party, when you can see what kind of gift might be particularly welcome.) Since these men are just starting out on the adventure of housekeeping, they undoubtedly would particularly welcome "eats" —for example, a package of the makings for sandwiches or appetizers (jars of cheese, anchovies, sandwich-pastes, boxes of crackers); a box of dates and a package of figs; or any other foods in glass or tins as supplies for their Jack Horner Shelves. Or you might give them three (or six) washable place-mats, perhaps of the new type featuring pictures of different birds on each, or a scenic pattern. Or you might order a supply of post-cards with their new address printed across the top of the back. Or a useful gadget for buffet service.

Duties of a Godmother

Dear Mrs. Beeckman,

My dearest friend, whose husband is in France, has just had a baby, and I am practically positive that she will ask me to be godmother for her little daughter. I have no idea what a godmother is supposed to do at a christening . . . what her duties are. . . kind of gift I should give the baby as a christening gift . . and whether or not it is customary for the godmother to buy the baby's christening outfit. Will you please come to my aid with your advice?

A. M.

At the christening you stand as sponsor, or as one of the sponsors, for the child, and in the service, make the proper responses and promises. It is usually the godmother who holds the baby during the christening ceremony, and who gives the child's name to the minister. (You should pronounce the baby's name very distinctly, for the name the minister repeats is the child's legal name.)

In addition to taking this important part in the christening, you assume the spiritual responsibility of taking special interest in the child's life, in her religious training, in her education, and in giving advice and help if ever needed. Usually a godparent makes a special point of "remembering" important events in the life of the child, birthdays, graduations, school or business or professional promotions.

The responsibility a godparent assumes is a moral and spiritual one, and NO financial obligation is taken for granted.

As a christening gift you may give a silver cup or mug, a silver food-set, a pair of tiny baby pins of plain gold or delicate enamel, a dainty dress or other item of wearing apparel. (A god-mother is not "expected" to give the christening dress, but she may, of course, if she wishes.) If you give something that can be engraved, such as a cup or bowl or food-set, you may have it engraved with the baby's name, perhaps with the date of the christening, and perhaps also "From Godmother".

Very often, as a christening gift, a godparent starts, with even a small amount of money, a savings bank account in the child's name, and adds to it as a present on birthdays, graduations, and at Christmas-time. A War Bond is a wonderful gift, or the beginning of a book of War Stamps for the baby.

TRENTON

Anglican Guild Tea Enjoyed

Trenton, Dec. 9.— St. George's Anglican Guild held their annual Christmas tea and sale in the Canterbury Hall, King Street, on Friday afternoon, December eighth.

Guests were received by Mrs. (Rev.) K. Blachford and Mrs. W. Province, the president, with Mrs. J. Kinney taking the tickets.

The tea table was most attractive. "White Christmas" idea was carried out most effectively with snowy white cloth covering the long narrow table, three tiny white Christmas trees forming the centrepiece, and with tall white tapers in silver holders. The silver serving dishes completed the striking effect. Mrs. W. B. Crowe was responsible for the decorating of the table.

Tea was poured by Mrs. W. Crowe and Miss B. Armstrong with Mrs. H. Hall and Mrs. M. Waldorf replenishing the table.

Guests were served at smaller tea tables by Mrs. O'Krafka, Mrs. F. Little, Mrs. D. Brick, Mrs. E. Mantle, Mrs. T. Spear and Mrs. W. Murray with Mrs. Waldorf convener of both the tea table and the smaller tables. Mrs. J. L. Hutchinson acted as hostess for the afternoon.

Kitchen arrangements were in charge of Mrs. Young, Mrs. H. Simpson, Mrs. Benson and Mrs. W. Johnson.

Home cooking was sold by Mrs. R. Hutchinson, Mrs. L. Spear, Mrs. (Sgt.) Johnson and Mrs. R. J. Whitley; aprons by Mrs. W. Miller, and Mrs. C. Silverthorne; novelties by Mrs. R. Burke and Mrs. Tippins. The corner store was in charge of Miss H. Bensley and Mrs. N. Carter.

The hall was very beautifully and appropriately decorated for the occasion, members of the A.Y.P.A. being in charge of the work.

Some Ways to Work Off Those Waistline Bulges

By HELEN FOLLETT

GOOD PROPORTIONS mean more than weight. A woman can be of standard weight, still not qualify in a beauty contest. The upper portion of the body may be as it should, while thighs, legs and hips are of the spreading variety. She looks short waisted, has difficult finding frocks that fit, and she does a lot of wailing about it.

Dieting won't do for a case of this kind. Localized fat must be worked off by exercise and that seems pretty tough for the supplicant for the normal figure. She doesn't like the idea at all. The frame of the body may be all right; it is just that the lower portion has become upholstered with adipose tissue. Typists who sit all day, never exercise, are subject to this unlovely anatomical condition. During their hours of work the body bends at the waistline, arms and hands are active. Hips and legs, suffering from muscular inactivity, get out of bounds.

A brisk walk every days is what the director of physical education would suggest. Not a stroll, but a quick get-there. Keep the body tall, chest lifted, go at a regular pace; taking deep breaths, holding in the abdomen. Walk part of the way to the office or do a scamper at lunch time. Something must be done if the svelte shape is to be retained.

The old time practice of touching the floor without bending the knees causes the muscles of the back of the thighs to relax and tighten, reduces fatted calves, trims down hip spread.

Reducing Abdomen.

For general reduction below the waistline; lie flat on the back in bed, hands under the buttocks for support. Lift the legs slowly until you are fairly standing on the back of your neck; lower them slowly. When fatigued relax, take several deep breaths, then at it again. For reducing the abdomen, this exercise cannot be beaten.

Exercise early in the morning. Then take a warm bath, scouring the flesh with a heavy brush, finish with an alternating hot and cold shower. You'll be as fit as a fiddle, ready for the day's job.

BEAUTY

By HELEN JAMESON

Be a Wrinkle Fighter, Don't Let up.

Old man Time is no friend to any woman. When he sketches little lines in feminine faces he isn't being funny. First, there is the tiniest suggestion of a crease. If nothing is done about it, it develops into a furrow. What's the sense in the whole business, anyhow? Maybe, some day, somebody will discover a miraculous vitamin that will keep lines away.

A woman is forever working against the ravages of birthdays, at least after she is forty. She doesn't stop to think that perhaps she is helping the old guy with the long white whiskers and the scythe by not respecting the rules of health and hygiene. Some women reach the age of seventy with smooth skins, not a sign of a mark. How come? They know something about the art of living; they keep their faces lubricated with rejuvenating creams.

There are reasons why the tissues of the face go into a state of dissolution, leaving the skin covering too large for its upholstery. Loss of sleep will do it also finicky eating habits that do not provide one with all the necessary food elements. Emotional storms are a common cause; and these frenzies change the expression of the countenance, too, and not for the better.

The best insurance against wrinkles is health of mind, body and spirit. Good digestion is a help, as is brisk circulation upon which the tissue cells live and thrive. Women who are interested in athletics, keep their lungs air-washed, are not only likely to be wrinkle-free, but will have pleasing skin coloring. Poise, cheerfulness and good humor are protective influences, keep the face youthful of appearance.

The free use of oily cosmetics will work wonders. As one grows older, sebaceous glands slow up; creams act as understudies to these little geysers. Dermatologists claim that the older a woman gets the more she needs lubricants and light massage. She is subject not only to wrinkles but to skin discolorations and warty growths which are often forestalled by friction and creaming.

The time for a five or ten minute treatment is at night, after the face has been washed with soap and water, rinsed and dried gently. Select a heavy emollient for this purpose, one that will not permit the fingers to slip and slide.

Start the application at the collar bones, so the throat will get its share of the beauty feast. Sweep upward. Palm along the jaw line.

For turkey tracks, place the first finger on the eyelid close to the nose, sweep outward to the temple, do a circle there, come back under the eye to starting point. Finish with a brisk slapping and hammering with the finger tips. Let the cream remain on over night.

Advice to the Lovelorn

Selfish of Husband With Small Estate to Refuse to Make Will

The way of some husbands with last wills and testaments passes understanding. They profess devotion to their wives, leaving money to those who do not actually need it.

Mrs. J. B. writes me when she was 22 years old she married a widower with a little boy of three. They had all lived in the same apartment house. She was deeply sorry for her husband's first wife, who poured all her anguished worries concerning the child into this girl's ear. This concern for the child was a determining factor in causing her to marry a widower ten years older than she was.

The maternal grandmother and aunts, living halfway across the country had taken the child after his mother's death. They resented giving him up and became sworn enemies to the second wife. She loved this child, brought him up as her own, and in time had two little girls. Her husband was never very successful. The departed glories of his own family were his chief interest— that, and the little son by his first marriage.

This young man, now a first lieutenant in the Army, his father feels will restore the ancient splendors of his ancestors, whatever they may have been. For the past two generations his family have been poor as dirt. Now the husband refuses to make a will, saying let the law take its course.

In the state in which my correspondent lives, the law grants a third of a deceased husband's property to the wife if he dies intestate. The estate will not bring more than $6,000 which would be insufficient for her support, but more of a help than if she got only a third. The first lieutenant is married to a girl in fairly comfortable circumstances. The older girl is also married and fairly well-to-do. The wife wishes to give the younger girl, who is unmarried, a college education— but the husband is adamant about making a will.

It's more than likely that the husband's estate would have been even smaller than it is if the wife had not scrimped, saved, taken in sewing, and also had done typing. With these two skills—typing and sewing she might be able to get a start and realize her ambition of giving her younger daughter a college education.

But her husband, still mulling over the departed glories of his family, continues to say: "Let the law take its course". All said and done, there probably wouldn't have been any estate, small though it is, if the woman hadn't sat up nights to do typing, dressmaking and penny-pinched her way through twenty years of marital cheese-paring.

Scars of War Yield to Skilful Surgery in Canadian Soldiers' Hospitals

By WILLIAM BROWN FORBES

Not every Johnny who went away in uniform will come marching proudly home the same man he went away. Some will never return, others will be injured. But so far as human agencies can achieve as many as possible will come back and those who return injured will get every benefit of expanding science to make them whole.

Canadian soldiers, sailors and airmen are being put together again when they are physically hurt; helped to recover all their faculties if they suffer mental or psychological injuries.

Take the case of Leading Air Craftsman Kenneth White. Stationed at Jarvis, where he was training with the Royal Canadian Air Force, White was the victim of a practise bomb which exploded prematurely while he was quite close to it. His forehead from above his nose right back to his ear was blown away, his right eye with it. It was doubted that he'd live.

In a few weeks Kenneth White will look almost exactly the same as the day he applied for admittance to the RCAF. It has been no easy job to recapture White's looks, but plastic surgery is doing the job.

Forehead Rebuilt With Tantalum

A new piece of forehead of the wonder metal, tantalum, and a cheek-bone of ivory, anchored in the tantalum were fitted into the gaping hole which marred the side of his face. Then long U-shaped cuts were made on his upper arm and this flap of skin was applied to the new forehead.

White's arm was put in a cast over his head (see photo bottom left) so that the arm would continue to feed the live flesh until it grew to the skin and flesh about it on the forehead and cheek, and anchored on the tantalum. This substance, which can be spread into thread so fine it's invisible, is the only material doctors have found to which human flesh will adhere. It is almost not at all affected by heat or cold.

When, after some weeks and a number of operations, White's forehead was again intact and his cheekbone in place and covered with flesh, the problem of putting and holding a glass eye in the gaping socket was presented to the doctors of Toronto's Christie Street Hospital who are performing these miracles. Soon this problem too was solved. The wrinkly skin on the back of White's thumb was cut open and a flap produced.

Hand Grows To Ear

An incision was made behind his right ear and the flap applied to it. Then again the young airman's arm was put in a cast to hold his hand absolutely still against the ear. In some four or five weeks it was attached, hand growing to ear via the thumb.

When the flap was cut away this time a shaving of cartilage from White's ear was taken with it, and after "freshening up" the eye socket by cutting a little scar tissue away, the cartilage went into it, the wrinkled skin once covering a thumb joint now forming eyelids.

There are hundreds of cases just as wonderful. The replacement of noses and ears has become almost a daily chore, broken necks — once considered fatal — are being healed daily, and new, startling physical replacements are being conceived and performed.

One young Canadian flier had his hand badly frozen. The fingers and most of the hand turned black. The case called for amputation, but the surgeon's job is to save. First the flesh, rotten almost to the wrist, was removed and then the finger ends and middle knuckles. But the first knuckles close to the hand were still good.

An incision was cut in the patient's chest and when he awoke it was to find his amputated finger stumps tucked under the fatty skin of his breast.

When the skin and some flesh had adhered to his knuckles, his hand was cut free and stubby fingers, one joint long, were fashioned from the flesh now growing on it. Instead of a useless arm stump he had the palm of the hand intact, able to grasp and lift objects with his stubby fingers.

Also Replace Parts

Plastic surgery is not employed only on the remodelling of faces. Limbs and organs are replaced by these brilliant and humane practitioners. An allied branch, prosthetics, is occupied with fashioning noses, ears, etc., of non-fleshly materials to hide deformities, often only temporarily until surgeons can regrow these organs.

In the Italian campaign Lt. Keddy was struck in the leg by gun splinters, giving him a painful shin wound. The flesh closed but insufficient shin bone flesh left the bone exposed and cysts formed along the open part of Keddy's shin. It was a case for the plastic surgeons. (See photos centre strip)

When Keddy had been anaesthetized the wounded left leg was re-opened from ankle to knee by one doctor while another was taking a piece of skin some 6 by 9 inches from the unconscious man's right thigh. Then the shin bone was curetted and cleansed to remove the cysts and the flesh on either side of it was undercut. It was planned then to overlap this flesh a little across the shin bone where a pad of flesh is vitally necessary.

The strip of skin from the thigh was then sewn over the calf wound, neatly trimmed off and pierced a couple of times to permit the escape of any internal bleeding. When Keddy's legs heal he will have a healthy left leg, shin well protected, calf slightly flat only for a time, two scars which will show only slightly.

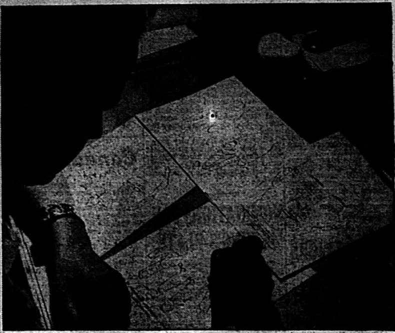
Agnes Roberge, medical and surgical artist, who makes before and after moulage of injured parts, charts progress of treatment by drawings at every stage, thus illustrates how operations are effected and how results compare with deformity.

Coloured transparencies are held in 120 lots on sliding partitions, each transparency showing the progress of an operation. Drawings are made from these photographs so that the surgeons have a sure means of checking back on their work and studying it for improvement or to instruct other surgeons.



Work of medical-surgical artist provides detailed check on progress of each stage of operation, down to minute details. Artist's work is duplicated by photography department using both colour motion pictures and still photos.

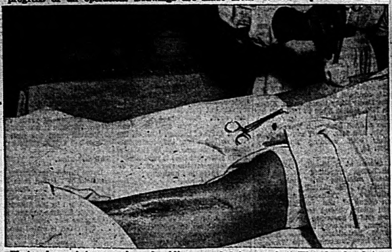


Photo shows injury on leg of soldier wounded by gunshot. Wound refused to heal, lack of flesh exposed bone and cysts began forming. Patient is under anaesthetic as surgeons prepare to operate in new technique to remedy gash.

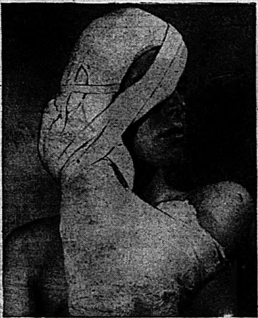
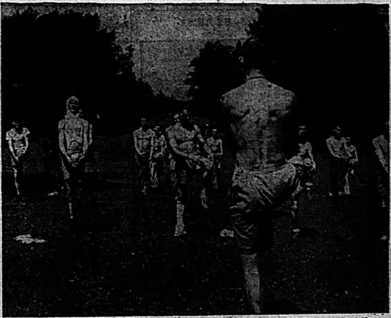
Stage of operation reveals doctor making incision on left shin. Patch in foreground reveals where shaving of skin was peeled from thigh of left leg.

Grafted skin is spread over calf incision when shin cut is sewn up. Holes are clipped in new skin to avoid internal bleeding. Only small scar will remain.



This patient lost right eye, cheekbone and part of forehead. Surgery built up forehead, cheekbone, covered them with new skin, leaving only tiny scar.



At Hamilton, Ont., #2 Convalescent Hospital, Young Division, specializes in treating plastic surgery cases. Physical training is held each day under direction of Sgt. Young. Sunshine, air, scientific exercise are best cures.

IMPORTANT DEALS MAY BE MADE AT BALL MEETING

Baseball Caravan Moves on to New York for Major Conclave

By JOE REICHLER

(Associated Press Sport Writer)

Buffalo, N.Y., Dec. 9 (AP)—"Watch for some important player deals to be made in New York" was the tip today as the baseball caravan shoved off for the big league meetings opening Monday, after the 43rd annual minor league convention ended without a single major trade.

The general feeling among the lobby loungers was that one or two big deals are well on the way to completion, waiting only for the New York session.

Figuring prominently in the rumors were Cleveland, the Chicago White Sox, Brooklyn, Cincinnati and the Boston Braves. Vice-President Roger Peckinpaugh and Manager Lou Boudreau of the Indians were in constant huddles with Manager Jimmy Dykes of the White Sox. Jeff Heath, tribe outfielder, was believed to be the chief topic of discussion.

Dykes admitted that he is seeking a seasoned gardener while Boudreau said he is open to all proposals for his temperamental slugger as well for Pitcher Jim Bagby, another problem child for the youthful pilot.

"I am not adverse to trading either Heath or Bagby", said Boudreau, "if we are offered satisfactory players in return. I have talked with other managers but nothing is definite".

The Dodgers and Braves appeared to be cooking up a deal, with Brooklyn reported eager to land Al Javery to help their faltering pitching staff and Boston needing an outfielder.

A trade involving outfielders Frank Kelleher of the Reds and Lou Novikoff of the Chicago Cubs was another possibility.

The National Association approved a full-time promotional department and a national umpire-advisor to act as counsellor to improve umpire standards. A proposal permitting the coast league to option young players to semi-pro leagues was withdrawn in the face of strong opposition.

HAMILTON MAJORS BEAT ST. KITTS TO LEAD LEAGUE

Winners Yet to Meet Defeat But Have Been Tied Once

Hamilton Majors leaped over St. Catharines to assume one-point leadership over the Saints in the senior O.H.A. race with a tight 4-3 victory last night at St. Catharines in the only fixture of the evening. It was the first defeat of the young season for the home club while Majors have yet to experience a setback although held to a tie by Staffords.

It was not until 13:10 of the 2nd period that a score was registered, this going to Johnny Conick of Hamilton on a solo effort to be followed three minutes later for Majors' No. 2 by Clarence Shillington. The third stanza saw Conick repeat in 7:39 and the Saints came within a tally of tying it up on scores by Fritz and Stuart. Hamilton made it 4-2 on a marker by Dillon Brady and Umbo Concessi of St. Catharines closed proceedings with a counter only 15 seconds before full time.

The scoring left Conick and Brady of Majors tied for top spot in the league's individual records with nine points each, Conick aiding his own cause with a total of two goals and one assist. Tied for second with eight points were Doug Runions, after adding two assists; Concessi, with his eighth goal of the season for Saints, and Scotty Wallace of the losers, thanks to the credit of an assist.

LORNE CARR WILL BE AVAILABLE AGAINST BRUINS

Sweeney Schriner Has Also Left Hospital and Will Play Soon

By The Canadian Press

Toronto Maple Leafs' manpower situation will be in its best shape in nearly three weeks when they take on Boston Bruins in tonight's only National Hockey League game.

Coach Hap Day announced that 15 men will be available to start a drive to regain league leadership from Montreal Canadiens. Lorne Carr, first line right winger, has practised twice this week and may see action tonight, while polished left winger Sweeney Schriner left hospital today after a leg injury kept him out since Nov. 18. He is not expected to play before the end of this month.

The reinforcements are well-timed for the Leafs, who have been hard put to keep in striking distance of the leaders since Schriner's injury.

Bruins, led by Dit Clapper while Art Ross attends a league meeting in New York, will parade the same squad that knocked off Toronto 5-4 last Sunday in Boston. They hold a 2-1 edge in the season's games with Leafs, having taken a previous 5-1 decision at home and a 7-2 beating in their first appearance in Toronto.

Tonight's game will be only the first half of a tough week end assignment for the Bruins, who move to Detroit for a Sunday encounter with the fast-moving Red Wings. Jack Adams' men have been invincible for Boston this year, holding three easy triumphs in as many starts.

A pair of victories would find the Bruins nudging the Detroiters, one point out of second place, while defeat for Toronto coupled with a Red Wing triumph would create a second-place tie between those two clubs.

Chicago Black Hawks play Rangers at New York in the other Sunday game, which will throw light on the fifth-place competition. The Yorkers currently hold a two-point margin.

Canadian Sport Snapshots

(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Toronto, Dec. 9 —(CP)— The boys in the know around the naval training station at St. Hyacinthe, Quebec., are having a quiet chuckle these days over Navy's recent Grey Cup victory.

It seems that just before the game a bunch of daisies and a taunting telegram, purportedly from Manager Sammy Manson of Hamilton Wildcats, were displayed in the Tars' dressing room. The telegram called the Sailors a "bunch of kids" and said they would take an awful trouncing from the Cats. That infuriated the Bell Bottom Boys so much that they gave the Navy its first major sport championship.

After the game, it turned out that the whole thing was a gag. The daisies and the telegram were sent by canny Glen Brown, former Ohio State lineman who coached the combined Navy squad from H.M.C.S. St. Hyacinthe and H.M.C.S. Donnacona, Montreal.

Mementoes:

Gunner Ted Reeve, former Toronto Telegram sports writer, football star and coach reports he is recovering rapidly from his elbow injury and has been promoted to dishwashing fatigue. At present he is languishing in a British military hospital after one of the longest sick parades on record. While with the Sportsmen's Battery in Holland he went in to have his arm taped, and two weeks later landed in the hospital.

The moaner is sure the army examiners confused his war injuries or general wear and tear "with some of the mementoes left on our frame years and years ago by Messrs. Sprague, Boadway and Timmins of Hamilton, or by the Coulter boys when we were afeudin' out Weston way."

Up or Down?

Toronto fans shouldn't worry overly much about the hockey background of Leafs' goalie Frank McCool, says Bob (Calgary Herald) Mamini, since that was attended to by his seasoning with Calgary Juniors, Gonzaga University and Currie Army. Adds Mamini: "From Currie Army he went up to the N.H.L., but out this way they're apt to say that McCool went down to the National League."

Hey Look, Men!

Male softball players who perform before galleries of a scattered few dozen will squirm when they hear this. The Sunnyside Ladies' League in Toronto was so far up in the black ink—after a season of 120,000 paid admissions—that each of the five teams collected checks running into four figures when final division of surplus receipts was made.

Sport Shorts From Britain

By ALLAN NICKLESON
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

London, Dec. 9 —(CP)— A jury of six men and a woman upset a century-old gaming law when it decided after a two-day Old Bailey trial that a person who wagers on credit and, on losing, is unable to pay the bookmaker, is guilty of fraud. The Gaming Act of 1845 made betting debts irrecoverable in a civil court.

Following the "test case," Solomon Silverberg, 33-year-old Polish Jew, was sentenced to nine months' imprisonment. Bookmakers (bookmaking is legal in Britain) hailed the verdict as "a great moral victory."

Silverberg was convicted of charges of winning £465 ($2,092) from a bookmaker by fraud and of obtaining credit of £452 from the same bookmaker by false pretences. The charges arose from wagers made by Silverberg when it was alleged, he was overdrawn at his bank. He was paid £465 when he won but when he lost his cheque of £147 was returned by the bank.

The judge, in passing sentence, said there was no reason why a bookmaker should not be protected by the criminal law as much as any other person carrying on an honest and reputable occupation. It was pointed out that under legal wagering rules, all bets, unless made at the actual scene of the event, must be on credit.

The Bookmakers' Protective Association supported this test case and at least 40 London "bookies," representing roughly a betting turnover of £3,000,000 ($13,500,000) a year, heard the verdict from their seats in the audience.

The association secretary, Lionel Ingram, said in a post-trial statement that so many bettors had defaulted that bookmakers felt the time had come for a ruling in the courts.

Later, a London "bookie" estimated he had lost £30,000 this year through bettors wagering on losing horses and being unable to pay. He said his losses last year to defaulters were £30,000 ($135,000.)

Collectively, bookmakers estimate that defaulters cost them an average of one-tenth of their gross profits.

A bottle of champagne and lunch was the birthday feast of Charlie Wood, famed British jockey of other years, who celebrated his 90th birthday with his wife at Eastbourne on the south coast. He was a contemporary of the great Fred (Tinman) Archer.

Charlie enjoys good health but through failing eyesight—he lost the sight of one eye a few years ago—is confined to his home. He won the Derby three times, on St. Blaise in 1883, Galtee More in 1897 and St. Gatien in 1884 when St. Gatien ran a dead heat with Harvester.

Mr. and Mrs. Wood will celebrate their 69th wedding anniversary Dec. 16.

Gloom at a 50-mile travel ban on horses travelling to steeplechase meetings this winter was lifted, at least partially, when the Ministry of Transport announced an easing of the restriction that will allow 'chasers trained at Epsom and in Sussex to run at Cheltenham. Previously, because of distance limitations, these horses could have run only at the Windsor meetings and course officials feared there would not be enough horses to fill out programs.

LEE OMA WINS OVER MAURIELLO IN N. Y. RING

16,282 Fans Pay $63,000 to Watch Detroit Heavy Move Up Fistic Ladder

New York, Dec. 9 — (AP)—Lanky, loose-jointed Lee Oma, Detroit heavyweight who has been knocked out 13 times since he started fighting in 1930, is the fistic toast of the town.

Last night, before a $63,286 crowd of 16,282, including champion Joe Louis, Oma danced, walked, jabbed and punched his way to a one-sided unanimous nod over Tami Mauriello of the Bronx, who last September knocked out the Detroiter in eight rounds. Oma weighed 186 3/4, Mauriello 194 3/4.

In the September fracas, Oma was sadly out of shape after taking the bout as a substitute on 48-hour notice. But last night, glimpsing heavy money if he got by Tami in the return scrap, he was as trim as a thoroughbred.

Oma, hands at his sides and utterly relaxed, fought as if he were strolling through a park. His eyes were seldom on his foe as he kept circling to the right, pausing now and then to flick a stiff left to Mauriello's face and then follow with a right to the head.

In the tenth, when Mauriello swarmed in with a flurry of rights and lefts, Oma stepped back, crossed a right to the face, and Tami lost his mouthpiece and a tooth.

The referee gave Oma all 10 rounds, one judge gave him eight and the other six as the Detroiter assured himself another lucrative Garden bout, this time with Joe Baksi of Kulpmont, Pa., No. 1 among the duration heavies.

Queen: A lady who takes your jack.

Maxim: The keen-edged tool of speech.

Bigamy: One man trying to serve two masters.

Optimist: One who trusts to chance for the opportunity of borrowing an umbrella from a pessimist—should the need arise.

Telephone: An electro-mechanical contraption that enables a lazy person to sit at home and annoy others who have more important work to do.

Home: A place where there is a woman of good moral character to come home to . . . and . . . . where there is at least one person to welcome you with outstretched arms.

Ever Thus.

Our city fathers, who expounded at great length regarding the fostering of recreation centres for the use of the childen of Belleville prior to last Monday's municipal election, soon forgot their pre-election platforms. As a matter of fact their memory was of such a short duration the recreational pre-election platform was about the shortest on record—it went over-board just 24 hours after the city election.

On Tuesday night the city fathers voted two civic skating rinks, but rejected any suggestion or plan for the erection of hockey cushions in their mammoth expansion plan for recreational purposes among the teen aged. Just where do they think the sub-teen aged boys can play a game of hockey. Out on the river or bay where they invite fatalities? This may not be the time or the place, but does it need a hockey fatality on the river or bay to awaken those in authority? We sincerely hope not.

Around the Town.

The wrestling ring at the Hume Arena has been dismantled and all is in readiness to commence ice-making as soon as the weather permits . . . Already Manager Walt Gerow has painted the side boards a shining white with the customary playing surface stripes of red and blue . . . The same old blue lines will appear again this year with the 1943-innovated red centre line to help speed up the game also back to add confusion to the fans . . . Secretary Wally Berry, of the Belleville juniors, hopes to attend a group meeting of the O. H. A. here sometime next week . . . S. R. "Sandy" Burrows, who was returned to his O. H. A. executive office for another term by acclamation, was again named convener . . . 'Tis rumored Trenton may try Saturday night hockey games in the junior O. H. A. schedule . . . Again Trenton sees the light and is looking to the future in sports . . . Within 32 miles of N. H. L. games, Oshawa proved Saturday night hockey is a boom and a success . . . Kingston also climbed aboard the band wagon . . . (What are we talking about? Just more weekend work, what?) . . . There is some talk of organizing an Industrial or Mercantile hockey league in town this winter.

Remember When.

Winnipeg Blue Bombers took advantage of a last-minute fumble to break a tie and gain an 8 to 7 victory over the Ottawa Rough Riders for the Canadian football championship four years ago today.

Earlier in the week this column reported activities at the annual meeting of the Ontario Hockey Association held 30 years ago, when the O. H. A. voted to divide the playing time of hockey matches into three 20 minute periods. Bill Green, former Belleville star puckster, takes exception to this statement in a letter to this department, contending it was 28 years ago that the three period hockey was introduced here.

However, Bill didn't read the original notice with candor. It stated the O. H. A. "Voted" in favor of three period hockey 30 years ago this week. Actually it was not accepted in general until the next season. (These are O.H.A. statistics.)

This and That.

Dame Rumor has Tommy Bridges about to be released from the American Army . . . Just imagine what the Detroit Tigers would have accomplished in the American League with Bridges around to help Newhouser and Trout last season . . . Cleveland is called the "graveyard of baseball managers" by frivolous critics, but the records show that the Boston Braves and Red Sox have switched pilots on an average of every 2.3 years . . . Howie Moss, Baltimore Orioles slugger, during the past season collected $1,000 in home-run bonuses offered by a brewery . . . Capt. Hank Greenberg says: "I've always figured I could play baseball until I was 40" . . . Jack Dempsey, explaining how he lost 20 pounds on a recent visit to France in the course of duty as a commander in the United States Navy, tells of taking a party of four out to dinner and that all the portions of chicken that were served put together would not represent a full meal for a hungry American . . . The bill for the meal amounted to approximately $125 in American money.

Sport Roundup

By HUGH FULLERTON, JR.

New York, Dec. 9 —(AP)— Next to picking a successor to Judge Landis, about the hardest sports job of the coming year in the United States will be to select a Western Conference commissioner who can fill the place of the late John L. Griffith . . . Some folks will tell you the Major didn't have any real power, but he had plenty of influence and a common-sense way of using it.

Surprise, Surprise!

Last year President Ray Dumont of the National Baseball Congress named E. J. Gubbay as semi-pro baseball commissioner for India—probably as a publicity gag—although there wasn't a native team in that country . . . The other day Ray received a report from Gubbay saying he had organized teams in Calcutta, including rugby players from the championship club of India, Mohan-Bagan, who never had seen a baseball . . . When the teams were all ready to play, Gubbay couldn't find a baseball rule book so he had to cable for some to settle arguments.

Billy Evans says the Southern Association is passing up pro football for the duration because of the player shortage, but will consider the subject again later.

West starts out with an opening lead of the club jack. When the dummy hand goes down, declarer can get a quick estimate of what he may be up against. His only danger is in spades.

The ace and jack of spades are in the hands of opponents. East may have both or either one. In that case, the contract is safe by leading spades from dummy.

But if west has both, the danger is great. In anticipation of this and the possible need for an end-play, declarer should first strip as many suits as possible.

So, south wins the first trick with club queen, two rounds of trump, the diamond ace, and two more club tricks, landing in dummy. A spade is then led from dummy and south plays the queen.

If west wins that at once, he is endplayed. If he returns a spade, south wins both spades with king and ten. If west returns a diamond or club, dummy trumps it and south sluffs the spade ten.

But if west knows what is good for him, he will refuse to win that first spade trick. From there on, declarer is sunk. He is fixed.

Because declarer must soon lead spades again. When he does, west can take both spade tricks. It is just a matter of looking ahead.

How does west know he should lay off the first spade? Because declarer started stripping suits. With more south diamonds or clubs dummy would have trumped them before leading a spade.

Declarer has no chance of shifting dummy or south spades. So, if west takes the first spade trick, he knows he will be endplayed.

It is as plain as his schnozzle.

What's Doing in Sport

By The Canadian Press

At a directors' meeting of the National Hockey League in New York yesterday, Mervyn (Red) Dutton was asked to remain president of the major ice circuit until the annual session next June after Lester Patrick of New York Rangers agreed to continue as managing director.

Dutton renewed his argument that he could not look after both the N.H.L. and his Calgary contracting business and asserted the league would have a new president next season. The directors also decided to delete the new rule providing a two-minute penalty for a player who fails to take a broken stick to the bench.

Reports showed a considerable increase in attendance at the first 38 scheduled games this season.

The Lockport, N.Y., Baseball Club, winners of the Pony League last season, has decided to break away from the Chicago Cubs, it was announced last night at Buffalo by President W. J. Schumacher.

Byron Nelson of Toledo and Harold McSpaden of Philadelphia, leading tournament winners of the year, were out in front, tied at 136, at the finish of the second round yesterday of the $7,500 Open at Oakland, Calif. Tied for third place were Fred J. Wood of Vancouver, B. C., and Harry Bassler of Culver City at 140.

Frank J. Shaughnessy, president of the International League, failed by one vote yesterday at the Buffalo, N.Y., baseball conference to be re-elected to the executive council of the minor loops. The successful candidate for the vacancy on the three-man board was president Clarence Rowland of the Pacific Coast circuit.

Umpire Walter Henline, who officiated in the International League last season, has been acquired by the National League. It was announced last night at New York by president Ford Frick.

Pete Cooper, Gainesville, Fla., pro, forged to the front at the half-way mark in the $10,000 Miami Open yesterday with a second-round 68 for a two-way total of 136. Fourteen others, including all the favorites, were bunched within four strokes of Cooper.

Cornwall Cookies In Second Place

Cornwall, Dec. 9. (CP)—Cornwall Cookies swept into second place in the interprovincial hockey league last night following a 6-1 victory over Lachine Rapids. The Cookies hold a one-point edge over Lachine and Shawinigan Falls Cataracts who are tied for third place.

The Perron-Burr-Carragher line netted three of the Cornwall tallies, Andy Perron opening the scoring midway through the first frame. Before the period ended, Cornwall was leading 3-0 in goals by Deroche and Gravel. Lachine's only goal came in the second period when Morrow netted on assists from Boucher and Bourgie.

The Cornwall pace was slackened after the Lachine goal and the fourth goal for Cookies came 20 seconds from the end of the period when Burr tallied from Carragher's pass from Perron also figuring in the play.

Wide-open hockey ruled for 15 minutes in the last period and Deroche drew his second goal of the game. This was followed by Bobby Carragher's tally on a pass from Burr.

In Manhattan

By MICHAEL O'MARA
Canadian Press Staff Writer

New York, Dec. —(CP)— With the holiday season approaching, Canadian play-goers who feel in the mood to gallivant off to New York for a fast round of theatres should bear in mind all the good advice current at this time of year about shopping early. Eight of the better broadway hits are sold out far into January; black-market prices on a pair in the balcony for "Oklahoma!" have rocketed to $40.

But plenty of good shows still have Christmas week tickets left for mail-order patrons. Here's a pre-holiday rundown of some of what's showing currently:

A Bell for Adaho—Fredric March in the adapted best-seller.

Angel Street—the best on the market for thriller-diller fans.

Anna Lucasta—all-Negro drama; honest, vigorous, interesting.

Bloomer Girl — hit musical as popular—but not nearly as good—as "Oklahoma!" (already a sellout.)

Carmen Jones—striking interpretation of Bizet's Opera with modern book and Negro cast; music remains unimpaired.

Catherine Was Great—Mae West stars in the dullest show in town.

Chicken Every Sunday—good, if you like your comedy low.

Follow the Girl—Gertrude Neisen is just the thing for tired business men (a sellout).

Harvey—Frank Fay and the imaginary rabbit score an artistic, if fabulous, success (a sellout).

In Bed We Cry — Ilka Chase's greatest mistake.

I Remember Mama—nostalgic but satisfying family reminiscence (a sellout).

One Touch of Venus—well, if you like Mary Martin . . .

Soldier's Wife—Martha Scott is excellent in this Rose Franken play which sidesteps a lot of worthwhile questions.

Snafu—another Abbott runaround with juveniles; fast and funny.

The late George Apley — superb transplantation of John P. Marquand's Pulitzer prize novel to the stage (a sellout).

The Seven Lively Arts—Billie Rose's fabulous revue with Beatrice Lillie, Bert Lahr, Benny Goodman (a sellout).

Life Still Tense in Great Britain As Victory Nears

By CHARLES BRUCE
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

London, Dec. 9 —(CP)— For Britons as for all the world 1944 was the year of invasion—the beginning of visible victory. For the battered old capital of these islands it will long be remembered also as the year of the flying bombs.

In spiritual tension 1944 can be compared only with 1938—Munich—and 1939, which saw, finally, the world begin to gasp in agony in the poison distilled from the rotting fruit of appeasement.

But it was a different tension. In the late 30's this nation held its breath in anticipation of a blow. In the early 40's it parried and parried again. But in 1944 it fidgeted for the word that would send it out to strike. To strike—full out in midring.

In June the word came.

Britons look into the new year and see victory. This has been already foreshadowed. It is doubtful whether the war's end— suddenly or through the gradual elimination of guerilla resistance—will be as cleancut and emotional landmark as the establishment of bridgeheads in Normandy. With the Western Front opened the nation was over the hump.

Only a week after D-Day the flying bombs struck. These weapons of no military importance, but highly and indiscriminately dangerous to civilian life and property, aroused an anger that not even the blitz had evoked. For one thing, there was no one to shoot back at, except the inhuman machine; relief had to await the Canadian clean-up of the Pas de Calais. For another, after the baby blitz of February and March, people had figured air attacks were over. They were becoming adjusted on a mental level less than the "in the line spirit" that kept London going through the winter of 1941.

Flying Bomb Beaten

Then, gradually, the mood changed. The flying bombs were licked by anti-aircraft fire, fighter pilots, and the overrunning of the sites. There was some disappointment as the year waned that we were still at war. But the conviction grew that anyone who had been through the 1941 winter blitz—when Britain had no allies except refugees and the Commonwealth—and the long succeeding years of work and struggle, could take the rest of it standing on his head.

Preparations for life in peace time are many. Employment and housing and social planning are live topics. And there are some small signs of return to normal living. The Home Guard rests. The blackout has been modified; lights twinkle dimly in the streets. There are a few more toys for Christmas, and an extra ration issue.

But these in themselves are rather small things. And that is why, though victory is discernible and known to be a matter of fighting, working, and time, its actual attainment will probably signal a terrific celebration . . . a blow-out to signal worthily the lifting of the shadow.

For when you come right down to it, living is still austere in Britain; austere almost to the point of asceticism. It will be that way until the war in Europe ends.

Little Benny's Note Book

Me and Puds Simkins were skating up and down with Mary Watkins, each trying to say the funniest things to make her laugh the loudest so she would think we were great, and Puds started to get jellis on account of me making her laugh more louder than him, and he said, Hay, Mary, do you want to know something really serious? My rich unkle is coming for dinner next Sunday, and he always gives me a whole dollar, and do you know the first thing I'm going to do out of it? I'm going to take you around to Sniders, he said.

Being the ice cream place and making Mary Watkins's eyes start to shine happy, and I quick said, Aw, anybody can ask somebody to wait till next Sunday. Why dont he make it next year and be done with it? Good night if I was going to treat you to ice cream I'd say come on around to Sniders right now, I said.

My, I think you're wonderful, do you really mean it, Benny? Mary Watkins said, and I said, Sure I mean it, let's go.

Being an all right thing to say if I'd had any money but making a kind of a dangerous situation with nothing but a lot of rubber bands and bottle tops and things in my pockets, and me and Mary Watkins started to skate around to Sniders with Puds skating about a half a block in back of us just out of jellis curiosity, and all of a sudden I said, G, good night, I forgot. We have to put it off a while because there was a long thing in the paper about a lot of kids catching skinny-appitis from eating ice cream, I said.

Benny Potts I dont believe it and I think you're the meanest stingiest thing I ever heard of, Mary Watkins said, and I said, Maybe that's what you think, but just a same my conscience feels better than what it would if I had to go to your funeral and know it was all my fault.

Well what would keep you from being at your own funeral if you ate it too? Mary Watkins said. Being a good question, and she quick skated home by herself without waiting to hear the answer.

AN APPLE FOR EVE

By Kathleen Norris

CHAPTER 9

"The boy simply couldn't have recovered if it hadn't been for her!" said Larry's aunt Alma, who, by reason of being the wife of a city official, was the most important person in the Western branch of the family. Her sister had married the congressman from New York who had sent Larry to Princeton, if there were distinction and success in the clan it was concentrated in these two.

But humbler members pleased Loveday more. Larry had an aunt Bessie who had a great many children and lived out on a baked-hot farm, with wet didies and chicken droppings and broken toys and sour bottles somewhat lessening the advantage of big trees, windmill, and a superabundance of fruit and fresh air and sunshine, and a pantry well stored with vegetables and milk and warm brown eggs. Lovedy liked the days they spent at Aunt Bessie's.

One day she had a letter from Mrs. St. George. It sounded the old affectionate note; Loveday had hardly dared hope for such a letter, yet it left her unsatisfied, hurt her in some subtle, undefinable way, gave her a heavy heart.

When a barrel of wedding presents came it contained, among the other gifts, a small but handsome Sheffield trey from Mr. and Mrs. Christopher Lawrence St. George." There was no message on the card. Nini sent a berry spoon; Fanny two silky dark warm plaids with fringe; the rest of the space was taken up with simple crystal table glasses for all needs and in all sizes.

These were the outstanding gifts; there were many others. Aunt Bessie knitted twelve washcloths, made the wedding cake, and presented her with a complete set of Bulwer-Lytton's works that belonged to Larry's grandfather. Larry's sister's monogrammed towels and table napkins; one old farmer sent them two hams; the French teacher at "High" gave a copy of L'Abbe Constantin in French.

Beyond the outskirts of town, two blocks from the factory where Larry was employed, they found a three-room house standing in a wide-open field. This had recently been farmland; it was now on the market in small lots for the humblest type of home, unpretentious dwellings which were being erected here and there sporadically. Some of these were being made by the carpenters or masons or plumbers who would inhabit them; others had been built by their unskilled owners and showed strange variations in the sizes of doors and windows and the finish of porch roofs. Each one stood in a wide level space with floods of sunlight pouring about it. Each had a garage, and many had chicken houses, sheds, detached lengths of fencing that fenced nothing, plank walks that led over stretches of dry mud that still showed the deep furrowing of winter rains.

Loveday never thought of criticising their own particular selection of a home. It was she, indeed, who convinced Larry that it was a perfectly practical solution of their problem. It was clean and new; it had a screened back porch shadowed by an enormous oak; it would be easy to care for, a five minutes' walk from work, and the rent was seventeen dollars a month. She was eager to get into her own little quarters and begin to manage her own affairs; why, she reminded him enthusiastically, out of their something less than eighteen-hundred a year they could easily allow three hundred for rent, and in the Buckingham Way cottage they could pay for light and telephone as well.

There was one drawback; but then, Loveday thought, that would have been a drawback no matter where they went. She had thought that perhaps she might write to Collins, the lawyer at Indian Hill, and ask him to send her furniture enough from Friends Haven to make the place comfortable. But there was very little in the old Gurney house that would fit into the cottage in Buckingham Way. Tables, chairs, beds would all be much too heavy.

However, she remembered two iron beds in one of the unused chambers that would suit, and at least, two lamps and the smaller kitchen table, and Loveday's desk, and a roll of blue carpeting, and the hall mirror, and for these Loveday sent Collins, or rather his wife, who was fond of Loveday, used her own discretion in adding towels, sheets, table napkins and tea cloths, a few plates and cups, and even such inconsiderable trifles as a pair of scissors and an alarm clock.

When all these arrived and Loveday and Larry, with his sisters and few hilarious friends, had set them in their places and added to them all the wedding gifts, the place looked furnished, and as the prospective bride and groom both said, anything else could be easily gotten. Larry's parents had given them an electric toaster; his sisters had contributed the coffee percolater to match, and the Huggy Bateses had sent a large crate containing a dozen mechanical devices all attachable to one motor; strainers, whippers, creamers, mixers enough to tempt any amateur cook into culinary flights.

When a car stopped at the Ingersoll gate on the eve of her wedding she glanced at it casually through the screened kitchen door and went out to it in the expectation that it was either an arriving guest or a package containing one more gift.

It was late afternoon-dinner hour for most of the neighborhood. Both the Ingersoll girls were still at work neither Larry nor his father had returned; Mrs. Ingersoll was downtown getting a wedding hair-do. Loveday chanced for the moment to be alone in the house.

She came out to the streaming long lights and hot shadows of the shabby world and saw that the car was Christopher St. George's familiar gray-and-black convertible with the familiar canvas top and that the man in rumpled light summer clothing standing beside it with his dark head bared was Christopher.

"I've only a minute," he said quickly. "Could we go in?"

"It's cooler out." A great mass of wet ferns and flowers had been laid to one side of the room to allow for cleaning and decorating tonight. "Here, we can sit here," Loveday said in the dark, small dining room.

"Merle tells me that you are going to be married. Nina told her," Chris said abruptly.

"Tomorrow." Storm signals were up in Loveday's heart; she knew there was tempest ahead.

"Why didn't you come back to us, Loveday?

"I was ashamed."

"Ashamed?" he echoed thoughtfully after his usual pause. "I had an idea from a hint I got here and there of an account Nini gave to Mother that it might be some-[illegible]." Another pause. "Ashamed because I like you?" he asked.

"Ashamed because I liked you," she said, emphasis on the pronouns.

A silence. Chris walked to the window and looked out into the hot, empty yard.

"And this was the alternative?" he presently said. Loveday made no answer. "How old are you?" he asked.

"Twenty."

"Twenty! My God! And you thought you couldn't come back to mother. You thought you had to work it out yourself. You could," Chris said over his shoulder, "you could have come to me, Loveday."

She made no answer. Her locked hands were on the table before her. There was a silence.

"No I suppose you couldn't," Chris said presently, not turning from the window.

"I felt terribly—I went through horrors," Loveday began after a moment. We'd had such wonderful days in Hollywood; it had all seemed to me like a wonderful dream. I never thought-I never thought of-of you and Merle and what Aunt Laura'd think. But I suppose I knew what was making it so wonderful. I suppose I was begining to know-or begining to tell myself I didn't know—" She floundered, looked at him with a suddenly scarlet face.

"It's too bad, isn't it?" Chris said with a sigh. He came back from the window and sat down opposite her, across the table.

"You mean that I needn't have felt that way?" she asked in turn with a little difficulty.

"I mean it's too bad you did. That I did," he answered simply. "If it hadn't been for that you'd have gone back with Rod and Nini to my mother. And from there you mightn't have felt it an obligation to come here to Bakersfield."

"I think as soon as I realized how sick Lary had been Iwould have come here.

"But you mightn't have found that out. He hadn't written."

"No." The monosylabble hung in the air between them; there was a silence.

"It makes me feel badly to have you married this way," Chris said after a moment. "Your wedding ought to be like Fanny's from Mother's house-with all the trimmings. I feel as if we'd let you down somehow. I didn't know about it until last night, when Merle had a letter from Mother saying that Loveday Gurney was to be married immediately. It-maybe it's not my business, but do you-you're quite happy about it?"

"You knew I was going to be married, Chris. At least Merle sent me a present," Loveday said slowly, her eyes on his.

"I suppose she did, from New York. But we got out to Hollywood last week. I got to thinking about it, and I couldn't let you-one of us had to be here-I mean, you belong to us in a way, and if Mother and the girls are off you, it's my fault. So I started up early this morning and here I am."

They walked to the door; Larry was at the gate and came up to them. He looked handsome and young and tall in the afternoon light; Loveday introduced the two men.

"I know you; you're French," Larry said cheerfully, his arm about Loveday comfortably.

"That's Marc," Loveday corrected him. "This is Chris, who was driving up from Hollywood today and stopped in."

"No, all American," Chris said.

"Can't you stay for the big event tomorrow? Loveday and I don't expect to be married very often, do we, Loveday?"

"Not very often," she said in an odd, strained voice.

"Would you like me to stay and give you away, Loveday?" Chris asked. "I'm more or less in loco parentis. Shal I stay?"

The fearful significance of the great guns that rumbled overseas was slow to reach the little factory settement outside of Bakersfield. Loveday Ingersoll worked steadily through the heavy floods of winter and the burning dry heats of summer with small interest for any problems that did not touch her own kitchen and nursery, and pocket. Like the women in the neighboring shanties and cottages and parked trailers, she listened to the rumors and read the headlines in the papers; she knew when Poland fell, when Holland fell, when men were piling into boats on the beach at Dunkirk.

Without a maid, without a car, without a radio, there was little to open her eyes to the world tragedy. All through the dreadful week when Coventry was laid low her babies were feverish and crying with measles; England's tragedy was only a distant shadow on her life.

But the shadow deepened. Older mothers talked to her of the draft, the young men who might be called, the menace that had reached out hands across the ocean to draw the boys away. Larry reminded her restlessly more than once of his three months' training in aviation at Pensacola.

"I could get in again. I'll bet you they'd take me."

"I'll bet you"—she might straighten her body over the tin washtub, press a hand against the aching spot at the base of her spine, wipe soapy water from swollen fingers with her apron-"I'll bet you they'd do nothing of the kind. You with three children. This isn't our war."

"I could enlist without being called," he said sulkily, but Loveday was too angry to make any reply.

"A woman isn't born until she's married," Loveday Ingersoll remarked to her sister-in-law, Marge Zack, one day. All three of Larry's sisters were married now, but Marge, the oldest, had been the last bride and was still interested in delicate generalities as to the wedded st..te.

"Well, in a way that's right," Marge said. She reached a well-groomed, red-nailed hand for another cooky, and Loveday put a piece of rusk down on the tray of the baby's chair, shallow puddles outside, the smells of coal fire and dishwater and yellow soap and baby cribs and souring food.

Do what she would she could not keep up with it, of course. A very small sum of money would have made it much easier- a washing machine, a gas stove, a telephone. But that sum of money was missing. Loveday still got her allowance of fifty dollars a month; often in these busy four years that had been all she had to spend.

LET THE HUN BEWARE!

These two men typical of the snipers of the Canadian army, on the Western Front and in Italy, both have had many duels with the keen eyed sharpshooters of the German army. Italy is a sniper's paradise, and photograph on the left shows L/Cpl. Alan Darling, Brockville, Ont., snuggled down into natural cover, drawing a bead on a Nazi several hundred yards away. Picture on right is that of L/Cpl. M. Pelletier, Montreal, who has totalled at least 27 enemy kills. He is shown here scanning the opposite hill in Italy for that movement which means the enemy. Then he gets to work with deadly aim.—(Canadian Army Overseas Photo.)

Young Greve, a 4-H member, also won the junior steer championship in the junior livestock feeding event.

He won all these honors fighting in the infantry in the European theatre of operations. He lost his right arm in combat in Italy.
